LIFE OF SIR WALTER SCOTT.

THERE is an old prejudice which strikes its roots very deep in human nature. Christianity and commerce have hitherto striven in vain to destroy it. It takes different forms everywhere. In Scotland and Saxon England it exhibits itself in the distinction created by society between gentle and simple.

The imaginary separation of humanity into these classes is the key to the literary as well as to the private character of Sir Walter Scott. The spirit of caste is indeed the source of frightful mischief in general, but it has its periods of utility and its graceful aspects. The latter appeared in their greatest elegance in the works and character of the Scottish bard. To inquire whether so amiable, so gifted, and so popular a person descended upon an age which his genius was fitted to bless, were to open a question which the civilized world has long since settled for itself, by universal and prolonged acclamation.

Walter Scott was born on the 15th of August 1771. The site of the house, which was his father's, is now covered by a part of the Edinburgh University. The poet's infancy and childhood were principally spent at his grandfather's farm of Sandyknowe, surrounding the village of Smailholm, near the banks of the Tweed, in the upper part of Berwickshire. Associations connected with this district accompanied him through life. The memories of his ancestry, and the traditions of the wide family of his name, determined for ever the bent of his genius.

The child was remarkably vivacious. It seemed as if the tide of life could not sustain the double strain exerted by the infantine activities of spirit and body. The body yielded. The little imp was only eighteen months old when his frolics were suspended by a sudden loss of power in the right leg. He was lame for life. Every effort failed to restore the proper powers of the limb. Yet the removals from place to place involved in these attempts excited the child's predispositions, and produced indelible local impressions. The growing boy indemnified himself by flights of fancy for the restraints put upon the exertions of his body. Yet he grew up with a powerful frame. His infirmity disqualified him only for those exercises in which regularity and grace of motion are indispensable. He could and did indulge in long excursions on foot. With one arm on the shoulder of a companion, and the aid of a stick at the other side, he wandered in boyhood far and near, about the sides of Arthur's Seat, "the furzy hills of Braid," and the more distant Pentlands. The pleasant slopes that surround his "own romantic town" found young Walter an indefatigable explorer. His imagination peopled every spot he trod or saw with the scenes and the inhabitants of former days; and as he conjured up the past with the glowing fancy of youth, he divested it of all its unwelcome elements. The systematic education of the schools was not successful in chaining down his mind to the rigorous processes required by the business of life. He received, indeed, some learning there, but his true education was the acquirement of the stores of knowledge which his hungry spirit gathered up from every source that could minister to the growth of fancy in the romantic direction it took.

Walter Scott the elder was a Writer to the Signet, or attorney at law, in Edinburgh. The family house was in George Square, then new and fashionable, now somewhat antiquated, but still a favourite locality. But this neighbourhood involved the prudent man of business in nothing that was inconsistent with the most precise proprieties. The time was an age of form. The restraints of home appear to have forced young Walter, although without disregard of filial duty, into habits and opinions in many respects the reverse of his father's. The latter was Calvinistic and Presbyterian in his religious belief, and Liberal in his politics. The former became Jacobite, Episcopalian, and a Tory. The son grew up in the worship of the modes of earlier generations. His feelings were all away from the present realities of the lawyer's home and office. But where the old tower of Harden reigns over the Border wilds of wood and heather, where the hills and streams of that poetic region, resonant with ballad snatches of wild humour and pathos, mingle the ever present music of nature with the fleeting echoes of the past, there young Walter was in spirit, if not in the body. Not the wordy caution of legal bonds nor the ready-witted shifts of courts of law delighted him, but the bold adventure of that region where law was none in the days of his ancestors. They, in reality a disgrace and a pest, living mainly by plunder, shone out through the prism of his fancy with halos of romantic beauty, if not of honourable regard. Thus Scott, by the power of his genius alone, subsequently peopled Scotland throughout with airy forms, created by himself. These, when united in the imagination with the present majesty of its scenery, have made Scotland the permanent delight, as well as the passing source of pleasure, to millions of mankind.

In early youth there blazed through his eyes the light with which his soul was kindled. Every friend, every acquaintance saw in young Scott something beyond the common. It was not only that the lad was bright, but there was a witchery of fascination that was irresistible. The spirit that was so powerful to conceive was also genial to impress. There was a fire of sympathy that drew all the life that surged around him into the compass and direction of his spirit. Walter was a favourite with young and old, and the acceptance he always met with drew out his powers in all societies. Essentially aristocratic in all his sentiments, there was yet a grace and kindliness about the lad that drew towards him all hearts; and this gentle spirit Scott ever cherished. It may not have been the true humility that possessed his soul. It may not have been the deepest or widest love that actuated his life. But there was that in his life and character which refined and soothed. In that age Europe was convulsed by war. The fiercest passions agitated for a lengthened time the whole arena of public affairs. But Scott, the magician, was there leavening society by the power of his art, with his own gentleness, through the images of softening beauty with which he filled the imaginations of men.

After leaving school, Walter Scott attended for a short time some of the classes of the Edinburgh University. But an illness interrupted these studies, whilst it promoted still further the education of his fancy. He was afterwards apprenticed to his father, as a preparation for the profession of advocate or barrister. He was then under fifteen. He acquired, during his apprenticeship, habits of regularity and method which never left him, and became accustomed to what would probably have otherwise been the insufferable drudgery of writing. The manuscript pages of "Waverley," exhibited in the Edinburgh Advocates' Library, show how valuable this exercise must have been to him. We are told besides that, notwithstanding the discursive tendency of his mind, Scott piqued himself on being a man of business. Indeed, the subsequent course of his affairs indicates this part of the training of his youth. It appears as if the gratifications of a literary life demand some serious compensation to destroy the self-satisfaction to which its success gives rise. Thus Scott, partly through his own care to secure for himself all that he might of the inferior reward, and partly to preserve the reputation for honourable dealing to which he was justly entitled, sustained in later years a load of care which, but for a professional acquaintance with the relations of business men, might have overwhelmed instead of chastening his spirit. But we anticipate.

In due time the boy began to put on the man. He fell in love, but prudently, as it happened, for the young lady afterwards married another. He became a member of literary societies. He was called to the bar in 1792. Every vacation he made expeditions into the Highlands, and over the most part of the southern counties of Scotland and the north of England. In these excursions he was indefatigable in the examination of every object of antiquarian interest, and in storing up those memories of ancient days which enabled him to rove at will and with ease throughout the forgotten details of by-past times. In Edinburgh the Parliament House rang with the merriment which succeeded his anecdotes. So did many a supper party of the companions whom he chose to admit to his particular friendship. He studied German, which the author of "The Man of Feeling" introduced to the Edinburgh literati as possessing a rising literature. Goethe, Schiller, and Kant became the companions of the kindred lads. Hitherto we read little of verse-making amongst Scott's accomplishments. There was not any necessity for such expression of his thoughts. They never wanted a friend to whom they might pass in the fresh mood of kindly intercourse. Verse was not in his case either the liberty of a prisoned spirit, or the regulated pastime of a mind wearied with excess of liberty. It became the channel of communication between the poet and the wide world that lay beyond his personal intercourse. Towards that extended audience young Scott began to stretch his flight. A translation from Bürger, a German poet now little heard of, was read at some of the Edinburgh evening parties. Some weeks afterwards, Scott heard of the impression the poem created, sought out the original, and, admiring it, resolved to present his friends with a version of his own. This was the origin of the piece entitled "William and Helen." The weird character of the German romance of that period, represented to the English mind in the type of Lewis's "Monk," and subsequently by his "Tales of Wonder," powerfully impressed the readers of German literature. Scott reads one day his poem to a friend. At its conclusion they suffer its unearthly spirit to engross a few minutes' silence. "I wish to heaven," says the poet, "I could get a skull and two cross-bones." His friend takes him immediately to a surgeon, and Scott carries home in a handkerchief the sensible images of the dismal feelings of the hour. Mounted on the top of his bookcase, they afterwards found a place amongst the relics of Abbotsford. Some copies of the ballad of "William and Helen" were printed for private distribution, and this was the poet's first appearance in type. Soon afterwards he completed another translation from the same author, which he entitled the "Chase." The two pieces were published together in October 1796. Amongst the circle of the poet's friends the little volume was heartily welcomed. The public cared nothing about it.

At this time the country was agitated by the warlike movements of the French Republic. The aggressions in Italy had roused the spirit of the British youth, who everywhere formed themselves into corps of volunteers. Walter Scott keenly felt his disqualification for infantry drill. But his patriotism was not to be balked: he agitated the formation of a body of cavalry volunteers. He was a fearless rider himself. In the saddle the bold spirit of the Border moss-troopers, his own ancestors, came over him in a better cause. A regiment was formed, of which he became the life and soul. He was appointed paymaster, quartermaster, and secretary. He was actually a great deal more. It was his to animate his comrades with the light spirit of the trooper. In the intervals of the tiresome repetitions of drill, Scott's eye and tongue fired up the flagging zeal which monotony had well-nigh dispelled. His own regimental duties contributed to bring to the budding poet's thoughts the living realities of the military life on horseback. Thus it was that fancy proceeded in him upon a solid basis of fact; and in his actual experience of peculiar situations, the ideal so far blended with the real as to work in him the marvellous faculty of rendering their antagonisms indistinguishable to others. The apparent engrossment of the young advocate's mind with what were to his fellows only mock military amusements, furnished at this time many a joke at his expense to his less ardent companions. They little knew what was going on in his brain. Scott must have felt a powerful fascination in these cavalry movements. He continued, so long as the public mind retained any interest at all in volunteering, as active and as ardent as he was at first.

In the vacation of 1797 Scott met with the lady who became his wife. She was the daughter of a French royalist, whose widow had taken refuge in England. During an excursion in the north of England, she attracted the attention of Scott and his companions at Gilsland Spa.

The poet's fate was quickly decided by her manifold charms. The young lady possessed some means, and he thought his own professional exertions might make up a sufficiency for both to live on. They were married at Carlisle on the 24th of December 1797. They occupied a lodging in Edinburgh for a short time, until the house in Castle Street was ready.

In the ensuing summer a cottage was taken at Lasswade, a delightful spot about six miles from Edinburgh, where the poet sought to realize a rural paradise, and where many a happy hour passed away. There he wrote the ballads for Monk Lewis's "Tales of Wonder."

In 1800 appeared the translation of Goethe's "Tragedy of Goetz von Berlichingen," which did not attract much notice. Scott, also about this time, wrote a play called the "House of Aspen." Neither has been acted. Then he was successively occupied with "Glenfinlas," "The Eve of St. John," "The Grey Brother," and "The Fire King." He was also taken up during his vacation rambles, which were intermitted only by the calls of professional duty, in the collection of the materials for the "Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border." His repeated visits to that neighbourhood renewed his acquaintance with a former school-fellow, James Ballantyne, then conducting a newspaper at Kelso. Scott gave his press some trifling occupation, and the style of his friend's work originated the connection between them, which eventually brought on the reverses that oppressed his maturer years.

In December 1799 the poet received, through the interest of the Duke of Buccleuch, the appointment of Sheriff of Selkirkshire, an office of £300 a year, with duties of the lightest. About this time it was that he became acquainted with some of the friends whose literary acquirements were of material service to him, and whose value is recorded in so many delightful allusions in his poems. Heber, Leyden, Ellis, and Miss Seward became his literary correspondents. The Ettrick Shepherd also appears roughly in the circle. In the beginning of 1802 appeared two volumes of the "Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border," and through this work the poet became generally known to English readers. A third volume afterwards appeared; and "The Lay of the Last Minstrel" began to take hazy form amidst the shadows of his rising fame. His friends received the rehearsal of its these dumb friends loved him, and sunned themselves in his keen eyes, as if they, too, saw the work he did. At this time Miss Seward looked on his face at Lichfield. She thus describes him: "On Friday last the poetically great Walter Scott came 'like a sunbeam to my dwelling.' This proudest boast of the Caledonian muse is tall, and rather robust than slender, but lame. Neither the contour of his face nor yet his features are elegant; his complexion is healthy, and somewhat fair, without bloom. We find the singularity of brown hair and eyelashes with flaxen eyebrows; and a countenance open, ingenuous, and benevolent. When seriously conversing or earnestly attentive, though his eyes are rather of a lightish gray, deep thought is on their lids; he contracts his brow, and the rays of genius gleam aslant from the orbs beneath them. An upper lip too long prevents his mouth from being decidedly handsome, but the sweetest emanations of temper and heart play about it when he talks cheerfully or smiles—and in company he is much oftener gay than contemplative—his conversation an overflowing fountain of brilliant wit, apposite allusion, and playful archness, while on serious things it is nervous and eloquent; the accent is decidedly Scotch, but by no means broad."

Next came "Marmion," published in February 1808; "a dumpy quarto," the author calls it. Had any one but he applied the epithet even to the shadow of the material volume, the man should be consigned to Dante for everlasting punishment. But even the affectation of Scott is catching; so much does the man endear himself.

Along with his works of imagination, Scott was carrying on his studies by the studious criticism involved in editing Dryden and Swift. These, doubtless, contributed to preserve the power and balance of his judgment. In May 1810 "The Lady of the Lake" came out, with a portrait of the author.

It is needless to exhibit the criticisms of the period upon those works. They were received with delight by all readers. A time may come when language shall have put on another dress, and of the diction of these poems may then be thought what we think of Chaucer's. Other generations may arise who shall not be able to enjoy the externalism of these poems. Neither their purpose nor their moral is of the highest scope. But while objects are included within the domain of poetry as of themselves worthy of its charms, the word-painting of these exquisite pictures will remain to delight the world. Scott did not aspire to teach; it was his province to please.

Next year appeared "The Vision of Don Roderick."

In 1812 the poet entered upon the income of his office in the Court of Session, and thus enjoyed, until near the close of his life, a professional income of £1,600 a year. This did not relax his literary labours, and in the same year "Rokeby" was written. His letters begin to date from Abbotsford, of which he says to Lord Byron: "I am labouring here to contradict an old proverb, and make a silk purse out of a sow's ear—namely, to convert a bare haugh and brae, of about a hundred acres, into a comfortable farm." This was the nucleus of what was afterwards developed into a great mansion and a wide estate. Nearly simultaneously with "Rokeby" appeared, anonymously, "The Bridal of Triermain." Few were so dull as to mistake this for an imitation of Scott by an inferior hand, as he seems to have desired might be the public judgment. Even the Greek quotations in the preface deceived none of the friends who knew that Scott was ignorant of that language. In this freak, however, we discern that desire for a literary incognito that was afterwards gratified by the mystery attending the authorship of "Waverley." Scott had hitherto occupied the chief place in the field of contemporary poetry. But he discerned in Byron a rising star who was to carry the force of words into a deeper region of the soul than his own poetry could stir, and whose powers were sufficient to command as wide a range of popularity as his own. He began seriously to meditate prose. The discovery in an old cabinet of a fragment commenced some years before attracted his notice by the force its words exerted upon himself, now become, in the lapse of time, a comparative stranger to his own composition. Before "Waverley" appeared, in July 1814, he had been offered and had declined the laureateship, which he exerted himself successfully to have bestowed on Southey. He wrote prose in earnest when he began. The original fragment contained nearly the whole of the first volume of "Waverley;" the two last volumes were written in three weeks. The secret of the authorship was confided only to two or three of the author's most intimate literary friends. The veil of incognito was easily penetrated by the discriminating few who stood next without his most confiding regard. To the world at large "the author of Waverley" became a myth of magnitude, not to speak of the transcendent merit of "Waverley" as a work of art. There is an aroma belonging to it that suits the public taste. Notwithstanding that our idols are stripped generation after generation, and even day after day, of their gilded cheeks and diamond eyes by poets, novelists, and satirists, we yet remain, by virtue of humanity itself, their worshippers. In vain does a Shakespeare cast the blazon of his genius alike over gentle and simple, king and peasant, combining them all in one common kith where human nature makes of the whole one united world. In vain a Smollett holds the mirror up to the universal coarseness that underlies all our refinement of the surface. In vain, too, a Hogarth and a Thackeray paint us all, at bottom, snobs and common fellows, and show us, by their Rakes and Crawleys, that Virtue alone is fair. We will have it that there is a lofty class, within which reside all the majesty and the peace that our ideals faintly realize. Your Sir Charles Grandisons are the heroes of every successive generation. A democracy becomes an oligarchy by virtue of success, and the struggling multitude accepts it. Principles of this sort are recognized in the oldest and most popular volume. There it is an aristocracy that perpetually leads the movements of the subjacent masses. After all the shifting scenery of the world-wide drama is displayed, the curtain of revelation itself finally descends on the triumph of the true though tried aristocracy.

In order that men may be elevated, some of them must be placed within a line of privilege towards which the rest are drawn. The pale of the author of "Waverley" appears to be taken from the most vulgar prejudice of his nation. It consists in the possession of the soil, and includes the correlations of rank depending on the family ramifications of the landed proprietors. In a word, his philosophy is feudal-

ism. His feudalism is indeed gilded with all the powers of fancy and the consummate decorations of art. It is genial withal, and whilst class remains within class there is the utmost cordiality and good neighbourhood. Unfortunately, in the world class will not remain within class; men will not be contented simply to do their duty within the station in which God has placed them. They will aspire. The interest, perhaps, of all Scott's works depends more than we are aware on the touch of nature, everywhere applied, that amidst these distinctions makes the whole world kin. We feel that, notwithstanding the extent of factitious distance, we are really near his characters. Lofty as they are, they are bone of our bone—sweet flattery which the author teaches us to apply to ourselves! We claim kindred with his noblest heroes, and they admit us to their table, although, perhaps, "below the salt." Red Murdoch is the kinsman of his chief, and is pleased while he lives. But his death by no means fulfils the omen:

"Think ye, because a wretched kern ye slew,
Homage to name to Roderick Dhu?"

Scott himself naively confesses this with feelings which few persons, except his countrymen, distinctly understand: "We are not a little proud of being greeted as Laird and Lady of Abbotsford. We will give a grand gala when we take possession of it; and as we are very clannish in this corner, all the Scotts in the country, from the duke to the peasant, shall dance on the green to the bagpipes, and drink whisky punch."

The difficulties of Scott's partnership had already begun. The Ballantynes were short of money, and Scott is pestered with shifts to raise the wind. Expresses are going to and fro between Edinburgh and the country wherever he may happen to be, as their bills become due and the lack of funds becomes apparent. Yet he buys Abbotsford with money borrowed from his friends, and on the security of "Rokeby," still only in his brain. He afterwards, notwithstanding continued financial difficulties, makes further purchases by the mortgage of his future labours. "The Lord of the Isles" begins to loom in sight immediately after a six weeks' voyage made in the yacht of the Lighthouse Commissioners in the summer of 1814, from Leith to the Clyde, round the north of Scotland. This was the period when "Waverley," just published, was engrossing the public mind. "The Lord of the Isles" was published on the 18th of January 1815, and next month "Guy Mannering" issued from the press. The ensuing summer Scott visited the Continent, a few weeks after the Battle of Waterloo. As he witnessed the scenes which were then in all minds, he wrote the series entitled "Paul's Letters to his Kinsfolk." The poem of "The Field of Waterloo" was also written in these circumstances. The element of romance was wanting to the subject, to which the poet, therefore, fails to do justice. Its details were too visible.

Space will not permit us to follow our author through all the triumphs which succeeded this, the manhood of his career. His lucubrations in verse were now nearly fulfilled. The fame which subsequently awaited him as a novelist has somewhat obscured that which accompanied him in his progress as a poet. Having dwelt so long on the history of the works contained in the present volume, the remainder of his life must be less minutely followed. It was even now agitated with the cares which belong peculiarly to men of business. In addition to the burden which his own creative efforts imposed, he had to supply prudential thought to the two commercial houses in which he was interested, those of his printer and of his publisher. As for the landed estate he was rapidly gathering around the original nucleus of the hundred acres, to which he gave the name of Abbotsford, its cares were his delight, and all the operations of improving land, planting woods, and gardening landscapes came as a relief to his buoyant spirit. The pecuniary elements of all these rested on his hopes, which were as unbounded as his labour was indefatigable. From the court to the cottage Walter Scott was now known and appreciated. The highest heads in Britain and in Europe stooped courteously, in common with the poorest of the reading population, in homage to his genius. His fame could scarcely rise higher or extend wider than it did.

In 1817 "Harold the Dauntless" was published. Of this he says: "I begin to get too old and stupid, I think, for poetry, and will certainly never again adventure on a grand scale." He never did.

The rank of baronet was conferred on Scott by the Prince Regent in 1820. His acceptance of the compliment was facilitated by a provision made for his children by their mother's brother, who had died a short time previously in India. His family consisted of two sons and two daughters. The eldest, Charlotte Sophia, was married in the same year to Mr. Lockhart, afterwards his biographer. Walter, Anna, and Charles were the others.

The Waverley novels now teemed year after year from the press. Abbotsford was rising by degrees into a magnificence that threatened to be palatial. Land was still accumulating around the original farm, and an outlay for its improvement con amore was going on. The visitors—not always distinguished—who flocked to Abbotsford comprised a large portion of the peerage, every commoner who could claim any eminence, and multitudes whose only object was to approach Sir Walter's person. All this activity was partaken of by those with whom as printer and publisher Scott was connected. The run of good fortune which had attended these his henchmen had been now long continued and unbroken. The commercial crisis of 1825 arrived. The publishing house of Ballantyne had some years before discovered its inability to resist the speculative atmosphere in which our author lived, and had withdrawn from the field. Archibald Constable, surnamed the "Crafty," was at the head of the Bibliopolic League. But he too had been carried off his feet. His credit exploded, and with the shock the printing-house of Ballantyne fell. Scott writes in his Diary on the day of Ballantyne's visit, announcing his intended stoppage: "I felt rather sneaking as I came home from the Parliament House—felt as if I were liable monstrari digite in no very pleasing way. But this must be borne cum ceteris; and, thank God, however uncomfortable, I do not feel despondent." Yet the same entry contains words, only two lines before, of different import. Speaking of the death of an old friend, he says: "I cannot choose, but wish it had been Sir W. S." This death of independence was indeed far worse than the pangs of physical dissolution to a being like Sir Walter Scott. He had not borne the yoke in his youth; but now, in his fifty-fifth year, honoured above all contemporaries with the homage of the spirit, and having sensibilities so delicately acute as to have secured this eminence by their display, he must now—digite monstrari—be pointed at with the finger as a bankrupt!

The first effect of the disclosure of his partnership with Ballantyne, and consequent ruin of his estate, was to draw out the universal sympathy of his friends. Many a touching exhibition of kindly feeling in those days brought tears of reciprocated affection to his eyes. But it was not to weeping the idealist now addressed himself. It was to work. His creditors unanimously agreed to his proposal to place his effects in trust for their benefit. "This," says he, "is handsome and confidential, and must warm my efforts to get them out of the scrape. I will not doubt: to doubt is to lose." And thus the noble spirit struggled on until the fight should be won. But that was not to be until after the hero's death had consummated the self-sacrifice.

At the time when his misfortunes came "in battalions," Scott was inditing the Letters of Malachi Malagrowther—a name aptly indicating the stiffness of their subject: that is, whilst the banks of Scotland were setting their dogs at him, Sir Walter was fighting their battles. He won again. The banks escaped Government interference for twenty years through his public spirit. Then his "Life of Napoleon" engrossed his fagging hours. The lighter ones were given to fancy. "Woodstock" and "St. Ronan's Well" were his consolations.

His misfortunes revealed not only the real solidity of Scott's greatness of character and fame, but it also tore up the last shreds of the mystery that had hitherto hung around "the author of Waverley." His friends had long known the truth, and delicacy alone prevented familiarities with himself on the subject. Mr. Adolphus, by the publication of a volume of letters proving the identity of the "Great Unknown" with the author of "Marmion," had exhibited the truth in the world of letters. The exposure of the affairs of Constable and Ballantyne rendered any further mystery impossible, and Scott, at a public dinner in Edinburgh, where he presided, consented to the verdict long since given by the public. In replying to Lord Meadowbank, who had proposed his health in terms alluding to the revelation of the mystery, Scott pleaded guilty before the judge, and made a full confession.

Immediately afterwards another shock is sustained by the sufferer in the death of his wife. He bears it manfully. But his humour is all gone. Time and travel, however, gradually restore him. Work, work, work, is still his consolation. In two years he distributes £40,000 amongst his creditors. The time once occupied by the entertainment of the visitors who flocked to see him, is now spent in labour and retirement. His family is scattered all but his daughter Anna. His dogs alone remain the same. The unobtrusive and affectionate company of these humble friends was dear to him to the last.

But as his years and labours increased, the health of Scott gave way. In February 1830 he had an attack of paralysis, and in November another. His friends noticed with apprehension symptoms of decaying vigour. On the declaration in the end of the year of a second dividend to his creditors, which reduced his encumbrances by one half, his personal property at Abbotsford was presented to him by them. He considered this worth £10,000 to his family, but to himself the gratification was increased by innumerable associations, as well as by the sense of pleasure arising from the proof that his honourable exertions were highly appreciated by those for whom they were made. He had already retired from his office as Clerk of Session, upon an allowance of £800 a year, which the Government offered to supplement by a pension to the amount of the salary he relinquished. But independence was valued more than income, and the proposition was declined. Slight shocks of paralysis were recurring, and his friends could not avoid the disclosure that not only the hand which held but the mind that flowed through his pen was failing. He is loath to believe it. Yet his Diary admits the possibility of such a thing. On the 27th of April 1831 he writes: "My bodily strength is terribly gone; perhaps my mental too." He had for some time exchanged his horse for a pony. Now he had to be lifted into the saddle. His aspect was altered, his person shrunk, and all but the lustre of the eye spoke of impending dissolution. He resolved to spend the winter of 1831 at Naples. The Government intimated to him that a frigate should be at his disposal for the voyage. On the 29th of October the Barham set sail with its illustrious freight.

" Blessings and prayers, in nobler retinue
Than sceptred king or laurelled conqueror knows,
Follow this wondrous potentate. Be true,
Ye winds of ocean and the midland sea,
Wafting your charge to soft Parthenope !"

Visiting Graham's Island, a volcanic curiosity, which disappeared soon after he had trodden its transitory dust, and Malta by the way, he reached Naples, where he met his son Charles, who was attached to the embassy. Here his mind was agitated with literary schemes, and his physical activities went the whole length of his strength. He began to revert in thought to his first love, poetry. But he only succeeded in reaching home to die. He was still at Naples when he heard of the death of Goethe, on the 22nd of March 1832. "Alas for Goethe !" he exclaimed ; "but he at least died at home. Let us to Abbotsford."

On the 16th of April he left Naples, passed through Rome, the Tyrol, Frankfort. At Nimeguen he had another attack of paralysis, combined with apoplexy. He reached London on the 16th June, almost in a state of insensibility. He was removed to Scotland by steamer, and landed on the quay at Newhaven. As his carriage approached the scenery of the vale of Tweed, he began to gaze about. Catching at length from a distance a glimpse of Abbotsford, he sprang up from his prostration with a cry of delight. The presence of a friend had always lately excited a flash, but no more. The endearments of home awoke him to something like continued sensibility. He was wheeled about a short time for a few successive days in a Bath chair. He tried once to write, but could not. The pen dropped, and tears followed. He retired to the couch from which he hardly ever afterwards arose. Several weeks passed thus, whilst his bodily strength was gradually decaying. At length the intervals of returning sensibility ceased, and on the 21st of September he drew his last breath, in the presence of all his children. About a month before he had completed his sixty-first year.

On Wednesday, the 26th of September 1832, the remains of Sir Walter Scott were laid in the tomb of his maternal ancestors, amid the ruins of Dryburgh Abbey.

Measures were taken soon after to discharge the debts he had made such exertions to wipe out, by means of his literary and other property, and the house of Abbotsford was thus preserved to his family, in whose possession it remains.

NEW YORK: G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, 1897.

With hesitating step, at last,
 The embattled portal arch he passed,
 Whose ponderous grate and massy bar
 Had oft rolled back the tide of war,
 But never closed the iron door
 Against the desolate and poor.
 The Duchess * marked his weary pace,
 His timid mien, and reverend face,
 And bade her page the menials tell
 That they should tend the old man well :
 For she had known adversity,
 Though born in such a high degree ;
 In pride of power, in beauty's bloom,
 Had wept o'er Monmouth's bloody tomb !

When kindness had his wants supplied,
 And the old man was gratified,
 Began to rise his minstrel pride :
 And he began to talk anon,
 Of good Earl Francis, † dead and gone,
 And of Earl Walter, ‡ rest him, God !
 A braver ne'er to battle rode ;
 And how full many a tale he knew
 Of the old warriors of Buccleuch :
 And, would the noble Duchess deign
 To listen to an old man's strain,
 Though stiff his hand, his voice though weak,
 He thought even yet, the sooth to speak,
 That, if she loved the harp to hear,
 He could make music to her ear.

The humble boon was soon obtained ;
 The Aged Minstrel audience gained.
 But, when he reached the room of state,
 Where she, with all her ladies, sate,

* Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch and Monmouth, representative of the ancient lords of Buccleuch, and widow of the unfortunate James, Duke of Monmouth, who was beheaded in 1685.

† Francis Scott, Earl of Buccleuch, father of the Duchess.

‡ Walter, Earl of Buccleuch, grandfather of the Duchess, and a celebrated warrior.

Perchance he wished his boon denied :
For, when to tune his harp he tried,
His trembling hand had lost the ease
Which marks security to please ;
And scenes, long past, of joy and pain,
Came wildering o'er his aged brain—
He tried to tune his harp in vain !
The pitying Duchess praised its chime,
And gave him heart, and gave him time,
Till every string's according glee
Was blended into harmony.
And then, he said, he would full fain
He could recall an ancient strain,
He never thought to sing again.
It was not framed for village churls,
But for high dames and mighty earls ;
He had played it to King Charles the Good,
When he kept court in Holyrood ;
And much he wished, yet feared to try
The long-forgotten melody.
Amid the strings his fingers strayed,
And an uncertain warbling made ;
And oft he shook his hoary head.
But when he caught the measure wild,
The old man raised his face, and smiled ;
And lightened up his faded eye,
With all a poet's ecstasy !
In varying cadence, soft or strong,
He swept the sounding chords along.
The present scene, the future lot,
His toils, his wants, were all forgot :
Cold diffidence, and age's frost,
In the full tide of song were lost ;
Each blank in faithless memory void,
The poet's glowing thought supplied ;
And, while his harp responsive rung,
'Twas thus the LATEST MINSTREL sung.

THE LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL.

CANTO FIRST.

I.

THE feast was over in Branksome tower,*
And the Ladye had gone to her secret bower ;
Her bower that was guarded by word and by spell,
Deadly to hear, and deadly to tell—
Jesu Maria, shield us well !
No living wight, save the Ladye alone,
Had dared to cross the threshold stone.

II.

The tables were drawn, it was idlesse all ;
Knight, and page, and household squire,
Loitered through the lofty hall,
Or crowded round the ample fire :
The staghounds, weary with the chase,
Lay stretched upon the rushy floor,
And urged, in dreams, the forest race,
From Teviot-stone to Eskdale-moor.

III.

Nine-and-twenty knights of fame
Hung their shields in Branksome Hall ; †
Nine-and-twenty squires of name
Brought them their steeds to bower from stall ;
Nine-and-twenty yeomen tall
Waited, duteous, on them all :
They were all knights of mettle true,
Kinsmen to the bold Buccleuch.

* See Note 1.

† See Note 2.

IV.

Ten of them were sheathed in steel,
 With belted sword, and spur on heel :
 They quitted not their harness bright,
 Neither by day, nor yet by night :
 They lay down to rest,
 With corselet laced,
 Pillowed on buckler cold and hard ;
 They carved at the meal
 With gloves of steel,
 And they drank the red wine through the helmet barred.

V.

Ten squires, ten yeomen, mail-clad men,
 Waited the beck of the warders ten ;
 Thirty steeds, both fleet and wight,
 Stood saddled in stable day and night,
 Barbed with frontlet of steel, I trow,
 And with Jedwood-axe at saddlebow ; *
 A hundred more fed free in stall :—
 Such was the custom of Branksome Hall.

VI.

Why do these steeds stand ready dight ?
 Why watch these warriors, armed, by night ?—
 They watch, to hear the bloodhound baying ;
 They watch, to hear the war-horn braying ;
 To see St. George's red cross streaming,
 To see the midnight beacon gleaming ;
 They watch, against Southern force and guile,
 Lest Scroop, or Howard, or Percy's powers,
 Threaten Branksome's lordly towers,
 From Warkworth, or Naworth, or merry Carlisle. †

VII.

Such is the custom of Branksome Hall.—
 Many a valiant knight is here ;
 But he, the chieftain of them all,

* See Note 3.

† See Note 4.

His sword hangs rusting on the wall,
 Beside his broken spear.
 Bards long shall tell,
 How Lord Walter fell! *
 When startled burghers fled, afar,
 The furies of the Border war;
 When the streets of high Dunedin
 Saw lances gleam, and falchions redden,
 And heard the slogan's deadly yell—
 Then the Chief of Branksome fell.

VIII.

Can piety the discord heal,
 Or stanch the death-feud's enmity?
 Can Christian lore, can patriot zeal,
 Can love of blessed charity?
 No! vainly to each holy shrine,
 In mutual pilgrimage, they drew;
 Implored, in vain, the grace divine
 For chiefs, their own red falchions slew:
 While Cessford owns the rule of Carr,
 While Ettrick boasts the line of Scott,
 The slaughtered chiefs, the mortal jar,
 The havoc of the feudal war,
 Shall never, never be forgot? †

IX.

In sorrow, o'er Lord Walter's bier
 The warlike foresters had bent;
 And many a flower, and many a tear,
 Old Teviot's maids and matrons lent:
 But o'er her warrior's bloody bier
 The Ladye dropped nor flower nor tear!
 Vengeance, deep-brooding o'er the slain,
 Had locked the source of softer woe;
 And burning pride, and high disdain,
 Forbade the rising tear to flow;
 Until, amid his sorrowing clan,
 Her son lisped from the nurse's knee—

* See Note 5.

† See Note 6.

“ And if I live to be a man,
My father’s death revenged shall be !”
Then fast the mother’s tears did seek
To dew the infant’s kindling cheek.

X.

All loose her negligent attire,
All loose her golden hair,
Hung Margaret o’er her slaughtered sire,
And wept in wild despair.
But not alone the bitter tear
Had filial grief supplied ;
For hopeless love, and anxious fear,
Had lent their mingled tide :
Nor in her mother’s altered eye
Dared she to look for sympathy.
Her lover, ’gainst her father’s clan,
With Carr in arms had stood,*
When Mathouse-burn to Melrose ran,
All purple with their blood ;
And well she knew, her mother dread,
Before Lord Cranstoun † she should wed,
Would see her on her dying bed.

XI.

Of noble race the Ladye came ;
Her father was a clerk of fame,
Of Bethune’s line of Picardie : ‡
He learned the art that none may name,
In Padua, far beyond the sea.§
Men said he changed his mortal frame
By feat of magic mystery ;
For when, in studious mood, he paced
St. Andrew’s cloistered hall,
His form no darkening shadow traced
Upon the sunny wall !||

XII.

And of his skill, as bards avow,
He taught that Ladye fair,

* See Note 7.

|| Note 11.

Till to her bidding she could bow
 The viewless forms of air.*
 And now she sits in secret bower,
 In old Lord David's western tower,
 And listens to a heavy sound,
 That moans the mossy turrets round.
 Is it the roar of Teviot's tide,
 That chafes against the scaur's † red side?
 Is it the wind that swings the oaks?
 Is it the echo from the rocks?
 What may it be, the heavy sound,
 That moans old Branksome's turrets round?

XIII

At the sullen, moaning sound,
 The bandogs bay and howl;
 And, from the turrets round,
 Loud whoops the startled owl.
 In the hall, both squire and knight
 Swore that a storm was near,
 And looked forth to view the night;
 But the night was still and clear!

XIV.

From the sound of Teviot's tide,
 Chafing with the mountain's side,
 From the groan of the wind-swung oak,
 From the sullen echo of the rock,
 From the voice of the coming storm,
 The Ladye knew it well!
 It was the Spirit of the Flood that spoke,
 And he called on the Spirit of the Fell.

XV.

River Spirit.

"Sleep'st thou, brother?"

Mountain Spirit.

—"Brother, nay—

On my hills the moonbeams play.

* See Note 12.

† Scaur, a precipitous bank of earth.

From Craik-cross to Skelfhill-pen,
By every rill, in every glen,
Merry elves their morris pacing,
To aërial minstrelsy,
Emerald rings on brown heath tracing,
Trip it deft and merrily.
Up, and mark their nimble feet !
Up, and list their music sweet !”

XVI.

River Spirit.

“Tears of an imprisoned maiden
Mix with my polluted stream ;
Margaret of Branksome, sorrow-laden,
Mourns beneath the moon’s pale beam.
Tell me, thou, who view’st the stars,
When shall cease these feudal jars ?
What shall be the maiden’s fate ?
Who shall be the maiden’s mate ?”

XVII.

Mountain Spirit.

“Arthur’s slow wain his course doth roll
In utter darkness round the pole ;
The Northern Bear lowers black and grim ;
Orion’s studded belt is dim :
Twinkling faint, and distant far,
Shimmers through mist each planet star ;
Ill may I read their high decree !
But no kind influence deign they shower
On Teviot’s tide, and Branksome’s tower,
Till pride be quelled, and love be free.”

XVIII.

The unearthly voices ceast,
And the heavy sound was still ;
It died on the river’s breast,
It died on the side of the hill.—

Through Solway sands, through Tarras moss
Blindfold, he knew the paths to cross ;
By wily turns, by desperate bounds,
Had baffled Percy's best bloodhounds ; *
In Eske, or Liddel, fords were none,
But he would ride them, one by one ;
Alike to him was time or tide,
December's snow or July's pride ;
Alike to him was tide or time,
Moonless midnight or matin prime :
Steady of heart and stout of hand,
As ever drove prey from Cumberland ;
Five times outlawed had he been,
By England's King, and Scotland's Queen.

XXII.

" Sir William of Deloraine, good at need,
Mount thee on the wightest steed ;
Spare not to spur, nor stint to ride,
Until thou come to fair Tweedside,
And in Melrose's holy pile
Seek thou the Monk of St. Mary's aisle.
Greet the Father well from me ;
Say that the fated hour is come,
And to-night he shall watch with thee,
To win the treasure of the tomb :
For this will be St. Michael's night,
And, though stars be dim, the moon is bright ;
And the Cross, of bloody red,
Will point to the grave of the mighty dead.

XXIII.

" What he gives thee, see thou keep ;
Stay not thou for food or sleep :
Be it scroll, or be it book,
Into it, Knight, thou must not look ;
If thou readest thou art lorn !
Better hadst thou ne'er been born."—

* See Note 15.

XXIV.

"O swiftly can speed my dapple-grey steed,
Which drinks of the Teviot clear;
Ere break of day," the warrior 'gan say,
"Again will I be here:
And safer by none may thy errand be done,
Than, noble dame, by me;
Letter nor line know I never a one,
Wer't my neck-verse at Hairibee." *

XXV.

Soon in his saddle sate he fast,
And soon the steep descent he past;
Soon crossed the sounding barbican,
And soon the Teviot side he won.
Eastward the wooded path he rode.
Green hazels o'er his basnet nod;
He passed the Peel † of Goldiland,
And crossed old Borthwick's roaring strand;
Dimly he viewed the Moat-hill's mound, ‡
Where Druid shades still flitted round;
In Hawick twinkled many a light,
Behind him soon they set in night;
And soon he spurred his courser keen
Beneath the tower of Hazeldean. §

XXVI.

The clattering hoofs the watchmen mark;—
"Stand, ho! thou courier of the dark."—
"For Branksome, ho!" the knight rejoined,
And left the friendly tower behind.
He turned him now from Teviotside,
And, guided by the tinkling rill,
Northward the dark ascent did ride,
And gained the moor at Horsliehill;

* Hairibee, the place of executing the Border marauders at Carlisle. The neck-verse is the beginning of the 51st Psalm, Miserere mei, etc., anciently read by criminals claiming the benefit of clergy.

† Peel, a Border tower. ‡ See Note 16.

§ The estate of Hazeldean belonged formerly to the Scotts.

Broad on the left before him lay,
For many a mile, the Roman way.

XXVII.

A moment now he slacked his speed,
A moment breathed his panting steed ;
Drew saddle-girth and corselet-band,
And loosened in the sheath his brand.
On Mintocrags the moonbeams glint,*
Where Barnhill hewed his bed of flint ;
Who flung his outlawed limbs to rest,
Where falcons hang their giddy nest,
Mid cliffs, from whence his eagle eye
For many a league his prey could spy ;
Cliffs, doubling, on their echoes borne,
The terrors of the robber's horn ;
Cliffs, which, for many a later year,
The warbling Doric reed shall hear,
When some sad swain shall teach the grove
Ambition is no cure for love!

XXVIII.

Unchallenged, thence passed Deloraine
To ancient Riddel's fair domain,†
Where Aill, from mountains freed,
Down from the lakes did raving come ;
Each wave was crested with tawny foam,
Like the mane of a chestnut steed.
In vain ! no torrent, deep or broad,
Might bar the bold moss-trooper's road.

XXIX.

At the first plunge the horse sunk low,
And the water broke o'er the saddlebow ;
Above the foaming tide, I ween,
Scarce half the charger's neck was seen ;
For he was barded ‡ from counter to tail,
And the rider was armed complete in mail :

* See Note 17.

† See Note 18.

‡ Barded, or barbed, applied to a horse accoutred with defensive armour.

Never heavier man and horse
 Stemmed a midnight torrent's force.
 The warrior's very plume, I say,
 Was daggled by the dashing spray ;
 Yet, through good heart, and Our Ladye's grace,
 At length he gained the landing-place.

xxx.

Now Bowden Moor the march-man won,
 And sternly shook his plumèd head,
 As glanced his eye o'er Halidon ; *
 For on his soul the slaughter red
 Of that unhallowed morn arose,
 When first the Scott and Carr were foes ;
 When royal James beheld the fray,
 Prize to the victor of the day ;
 When Home and Douglas, in the van,
 Bore down Buccleuch's retiring clan,
 Till gallant Cessford's heart-blood dear
 Reeked on dark Elliot's Border spear.

xxxI.

In bitter mood he spurred fast,
 And soon the hated heath was past ;
 And far beneath, in lustre wan,
 Old Melros' rose, and fair Tweed ran :
 Like some tall rock, with lichens grey,
 Seemed dimly huge, the dark Abbaye.
 When Hawick he passed, had curfew rung ;
 Now midnight lauds were in Melrose sung.
 The sound, upon the fitful gale,
 In solemn wise did rise and fail,
 Like that wild harp, whose magic tone
 Is wakened by the winds alone.
 But when Melrose he reached, 'twas silence all ;
 He meetly stabled his steed in stall,
 And sought the convent's lonely wall.†

* Halidon, an ancient seat of the Kerrs of Cessford, near which the battle of Melrose was fought.

† See Note 19.

HERE paused the harp ; and with its swell
The Master's fire and courage fell ;
Dejectedly, and low, he bowed,
And, gazing timid on the crowd,
He seemed to seek, in every eye,
If they approved his minstrelsy ;
And, diffident of present praise,
Somewhat he spoke of former days,
And how old age, and wand'ring long,
Had done his hand and harp some wrong.
The Duchess, and her daughters fair,
And every gentle lady there,
Each after each, in due degree,
Gave praises to his melody ;
His hand was true, his voice was clear,
And much they longed the rest to hear.
Encouraged thus, the Aged Man,
After meet rest, again began.

CANTO SECOND.

I.

IF thou wouldst view fair Melrose aright,
Go visit it by the pale moonlight ;
For the gay beams of lightsome day
Gild, but to flout, the ruins grey.
When the broken arches are black in night,
And each shafted oriel glimmers white ;
When the cold light's uncertain shower
Streams on the ruined central tower ;
When buttress and buttress, alternately,
Seem framed of ebon and ivory ;
When silver edges the imagery,
And the scrolls that teach thee to live and die ;
When distant Tweed is heard to rave,
And the owlet to hoot o'er the dead man's grave,
Then go—but go alone the while—
Then view St. David's ruined pile ; *

* See Note 20.

And, home returning, soothly swear,
Was never scene so sad and fair !

II.

Short halt did Deloraine make there ;
Little recked he of the scene so fair :
With dagger's hilt, on the wicket strong,
He struck full loud, and struck full long.
The porter hurried to the gate—
" Who knocks so loud, and knocks so late ?"—
" From Branksome I," the warrior cried ;
And straight the wicket opened wide :
For Branksome's Chiefs had in battle stood,
To fence the rights of fair Melrose ;
And lands and livings, many a rood,
Had gifted the shrine for their souls' repose.*

III.

Bold Deloraine his errand said ;
The porter bent his humble head ;
With torch in hand, and feet unshod,
And noiseless step, the path he trod :
The archèd cloisters, far and wide,
Rang to the warrior's clanking stride ;
Till, stooping low his lofty crest,
He entered the cell of the ancient priest,
And lifted his barred aventayle,†
To hail the Monk of St. Mary's aisle.

IV.

" The Ladye of Branksome greets thee by me ;
Says, that the fated hour is come,
And that to-night I shall watch with thee,
To win the treasure of the tomb."—
From sackcloth couch the Monk arose,
With toil his stiffened limbs he reared ;
A hundred years had flung their snows
On his thin locks and floating beard.

* See Note 21.

† Aventayle, visor of the helmet.

v.

And strangely on the Knight looked he,
And his blue eyes gleamed wild and wide ;
“ And dar’st thou, Warrior ! seek to see
What heaven and hell alike would hide ?
My breast, in belt of iron pent,
With shirt of hair and scourge of thorn ;
For threescore years, in penance spent,
My knees those flinty stones have worn :
Yet all too little to atone
For knowing what should ne’er be known.
Wouldst thou thy every future year
In ceaseless prayer and penance drie,
Yet wait thy latter end with fear—
Then, daring Warrior, follow me ! ”

vi.

“ Penance, father, will I none ;
Prayer know I hardly one ;
For mass or prayer can I rarely tarry,
Save to patter an Ave Mary,
When I ride on a Border foray.
Other prayer can I none ;
So speed me my errand, and let me be gone.”—

vii.

Again on the Knight looked the Churchman old,
And again he sighèd heavily :
For he had himself been a warrior bold,
And fought in Spain and Italy.
And he thought on the days that were long since by,
When his limbs were strong, and his courage was high :
Now, slow and faint, he led the way,
Where, cloistered round, the garden lay ;
The pillared arches were over their head,
And beneath their feet were the bones of the dead.

viii.

Spreading herbs, and flowerets bright,
Glistened with the dew of night ;

Nor herb, nor floweret, glistened there,
 But was carved in the cloister-arches as fair.
 The Monk gazed long on the lovely moon,
 Then into the night he lookèd forth ;
 And red and bright the streamers light
 Were dancing in the glowing north.
 So had he seen, in fair Castile,
 The youth in glittering squadrons start ;
 Sudden the flying jennet wheel,
 And hurl the unexpected dart.
 He knew, by the streamers that shot so bright,
 That spirits were riding the northern light.

IX.

By a steel-clinched postern door,
 They entered now the chancel tall ;
 The darkened roof rose high aloof
 On pillars lofty and light and small :
 The key-stone, that locked each ribbèd aisle,
 Was a fleur-de-lys, or a quatre-feuille ;
 The corbells * were carved grotesque and grim ;
 And the pillars, with clustered shafts so trim,
 With base and with capital flourished around,
 Seemed bundles of lances which garlands had bound.

X.

Full many a scutcheon and banner, riven,
 Shook to the cold night-wind of heaven,
 Around the screenèd altar's pale ;
 And there the dying lamps did burn,
 Before thy low and lonely urn,
 O gallant Chief of Otterburne ! †
 And thine, dark Knight of Liddesdale ! ‡
 O fading honours of the dead !
 O high ambition, lowly laid !

* Corbells, the projections from which the arches spring, usually cut in the form of a fantastic face or mask.

† See Note 22.

‡ See Note 23.

XI.

The moon on the east oriel shone *
Through slender shafts of shapely stone,
By foliated tracery combined ;
Thou wouldst have thought some fairy's hand
'Twixt poplars straight the ozier wand,
In many a freakish knot, had twined ;
Then framed a spell, when the work was done,
And changed the willow-wreaths to stone.
The silver light, so pale and faint,
Showed many a prophet, and many a saint,
Whose image on the glass was dyed ;
Full in the midst, his Cross of Red
Triumphant Michael brandishèd,
And trampled the Apostate's pride.
The moonbeam kissed the holy pane,
And threw on the pavement a bloody stain.

XII.

They sate them down on a marble stone,
(A Scottish monarch slept below) ; †
Thus spoke the Monk, in solemn tone :—
“ I was not always a man of woe ;
For Paynim countries I have trod,
And fought beneath the Cross of God :
Now, strange to my eyes thine arms appear,
And their iron clang sounds strange to my ear.

XIII.

“ In these far climes, it was my lot
To meet the wondrous Michael Scott ; ‡
A wizard of such dreaded fame,
That when, in Salamanca's cave,
Him listed his magic wand to wave,
The bells would ring in Notre Dame !
Some of his skill he taught to me ;
And, Warrior, I could say to thee
The words that cleft Eildon hills in three, §

* See Note 24. † Alexander II. ‡ See Note 25. § See Note 26.

And bridled the Tweed with a curb of stone :
 But to speak them were a deadly sin ;
 And for having but thought them my heart within,
 A treble penance must be done.

XIV.

“ When Michael lay on his dying bed,
 His conscience was awakenèd ;
 He bethought him of his sinful deed,
 And he gave me a sign to come with speed :
 I was in Spain when the morning rose,
 But I stood by his bed ere evening close.
 The words may not again be said,
 That he spoke to me, on deathbed laid ;
 They would rend this Abbaye’s massy nave,
 And pile it in heaps above his grave.

XV.

“ I swore to bury his Mighty Book,
 That never mortal might therein look ;
 And never to tell where it was hid,
 Save at his Chief of Branksome’s need :
 And when that need was past and o’er,
 Again the volume to restore.
 I buried him on St. Michael’s night,
 When the bell tolled one, and the moon was bright,
 And I dug his chamber among the dead,
 When the floor of the chancel was stainèd red,
 That his patron’s cross might over him wave,
 And scare the fiends from the Wizard’s grave.

XVI.

“ It was a night of woe and dread,
 When Michael in the tomb I laid !
 Strange sounds along the chancel passed,
 The banners waved without a blast,”—
 Still spoke the Monk, when the bell tolled one !—
 I tell you, that a braver man,
 Than William of Deloraine, good at need,
 Against a foe ne’er spurred a steed ;

Yet somewhat was he chilled with dread,
And his hair did bristle upon his head.

XVII.

“Lo, Warrior! now, the Cross of Red
Points to the grave of the mighty dead;
Within it burns a wondrous light,
To chase the spirits that love the night:
That lamp shall burn unquenchably,
Until the eternal doom shall be.”*—
Slow moved the Monk to the broad flagstone
Which the bloody Cross was traced upon.
He pointed to a secret nook;
An iron bar the Warrior took;
And the Monk made a sign with his withered hand,
The grave’s huge portal to expand.

XVIII.

With beating heart to the task he went;
His sinewy frame o’er the gravestone bent;
With bar of iron heaved amain,
Till the toil-drops fell from his brows like rain.
It was by dint of passing strength
That he moved the massy stone at length.
I would you had been there, to see
How the light broke forth so gloriously—
Streamed upward to the chancel roof,
And through the galleries far aloof!
No earthly flame blazed e’er so bright:
It shone like heaven’s own blessed light;
And, issuing from the tomb,
Showed the Monk’s cowl, and visage pale,
Danced on the dark-browed Warrior’s mail,
And kissed his waving plume.

XIX.

Before their eyes the Wizard lay,
As if he had not been dead a day.

* See Note 27.

His hoary beard in silver rolled,
He seemed some seventy winters old ;
A palmer's amice wrapped him round,
With a wrought Spanish baldric bound,
Like a pilgrim from beyond the sea ;
His left hand held his Book of Might ;
A silver cross was in his right ;
The lamp was placed beside his knee.
High and majestic was his look,
At which the fellest fiends had shook,
And all unruffled was his face :
They trusted his soul had gotten grace.

XX.

Often had William of Deloraine
Rode through the battle's bloody plain,
And trampled down the warriors slain,
And neither known remorse nor awe ;
Yet now remorse and awe he owned ;
His breath came thick, his head swam round,
When this strange scene of death he saw.
Bewildered and unnerved he stood,
And the priest prayed fervently and loud :
With eyes averted prayèd he ;
He might not endure the sight to see,
Of the man he had loved so brotherly.

XXI.

And when the priest his death-prayer had prayed,
Thus unto Deloraine he said :—
" Now, speed thee what thou hast to do,
Or, Warrior, we may dearly rue ;
For those thou may'st not look upon
Are gathering fast round the yawning stone !"—
Then Deloraine, in terror, took
From the cold hand the Mighty Book,
With iron clasped and with iron bound :
He thought, as he took it, the dead man frowned ;
But the glare of the sepulchral light,
Perchance, had dazzled the Warrior's sight.

XXII.

When the huge stone sunk o'er the tomb,
The night returned, in double gloom ;
For the moon had gone down, and the stars were few ;
And, as the Knight and Priest withdrew,
With wavering steps and dizzy brain,
They hardly might the postern gain.
'Tis said, as through the aisles they passed,
They heard strange noises on the blast ;
And through the cloister-galleries small,
Which at mid-height thread the chancel wall,
Loud sobs, and laughter louder, ran,
And voices unlike the voice of man ;
As if the fiends kept holiday,
Because these spells were brought to-day.
I cannot tell how the truth may be ;
I say the tale as 'twas said to me.

XXIII.

"Now, hie thee hence," the Father said ;
"And when we are on deathbed laid,
O may our dear Ladye, and sweet St. John,
Forgive our souls for the deed we have done !"—
The Monk returned him to his cell,
And many a prayer and penance sped :
When the convent met at the noontide bell—
The Monk of St. Mary's aisle was dead !
Before the cross was the body laid,
With hands clasped fast, as if still he prayed.

XXIV.

The Knight breathed free in the morning wind,
And strove his hardihood to find ;
He was glad when he passed the tombstones grey
Which girdle round the fair Abbaye ;
For the mystic Book, to his bosom prest,
Felt like a load upon his breast ;
And his joints, with nerves of iron twined,
Shook like the aspen leaves in wind.

Full fain was he when the dawn of day
 Began to brighten Cheviot grey ;
 He joyed to see the cheerful light,
 And he said Ave Mary as well as he might.

revised text XXV. revised.

The sun had brightened Cheviot grey,
 The sun had brightened the Carter's * side ;
 And soon beneath the rising day
 Smiled Branksome Towers and Teviot's tide.
 The wild birds told their warbling tale,
 And wakened every flower that blows ;
 And peeped forth the violet pale,
 And spread her breast the mountain rose.
 And lovelier than the rose so red,
 Yet paler than the violet pale ;
 She early left her sleepless bed,
 The fairest maid of Teviotdale.

XXVI.

Why does fair Margaret so early awake,
 And don her kirtle so hastilie ?
 And the silken knots, which in hurry she would make,
 Why tremble her slender fingers to tie ?
 Why does she stop, and look often around,
 As she glides down the secret stair ?
 And why does she pat the shaggy bloodhound,
 As he rouses him up from his lair ?
 And, though she passes the postern alone,
 Why is not the watchman's bugle blown ?

XXVII.

The ladye steps in doubt and dread,
 Lest her watchful mother hear her tread ;
 The lady caresses the rough bloodhound,
 Lest his voice should waken the castle round ;
 The watchman's bugle is not blown,
 For he was her foster-father's son ;

* A mountain on the border of England, above Jedburgh.

And she glides through the greenwood at dawn of light,
To meet Baron Henry, her own true knight.

XXVIII.

The Knight and ladye fair are met,
And under the hawthorn's boughs are set :
A fairer pair were never seen
To meet beneath the hawthorn green.
He was stately, and young, and tall ;
Dreaded in battle, and loved in hall.
And she, when love, scarce told, scarce hid,
Lent to her cheek a livelier red ;
When the half-sigh her swelling breast
Against the silken ribbon prest ;
When her blue eyes their secret told,
Though shaded by her locks of gold—
Where would you find the peerless fair
With Margaret of Branksome might compare !

XXIX.

And now, fair dames, methinks I see
You listen to my minstrelsy ;
Your waving locks ye backward throw,
And sidelong bend your necks of snow :
Ye ween to hear a melting tale
Of two true lovers in a dale ;
And how the Knight, with tender fire,
To paint his faithful passion strove ;
Swore he might at her feet expire,
But never, never cease to love ;
And how she blushed, and how she sighed,
And, half consenting, half denied,
And said that she would die a maid ;—
Yet, might the bloody feud be stayed,
Henry of Cranstoun, and only he,
Margaret of Branksome's choice should be.

XXX.

Alas ! fair dames, your hopes are vain !
My harp has lost the enchanting strain ;
Its lightness would my age reprove :

My hairs are grey, my limbs are old,
 My heart is dead, my veins are cold :
 I may not, must not, sing of love.

XXXI.

Beneath an oak, mossed o'er by eld,
 The Baron's Dwarf his courser held,*
 And held his crested helm and spear :
 That Dwarf was scarce an earthly man,
 If the tales were true that of him ran
 Through all the Border, far and near.
 'Twas said, when the Baron a-hunting rode
 Through Reedsdale's glens, but rarely trod,
 He heard a voice cry, "Lost ! lost ! lost !"
 And, like tennis-ball by racket tost,
 A leap, of thirty feet and three,
 Made from the gorse this elfin shape,
 Distorted like some dwarfish ape,
 And lighted at Lord Cranstoun's knee.
 Lord Cranstoun was some whit dismayed ;
 'Tis said that five good miles he rade,
 To rid him of his company ;
 But where he rode one mile, the Dwarf ran four,
 And the Dwarf was first at the castle door.

XXXII.

Use lessens marvel, it is said :
 This elvish Dwarf with the Baron staid ;
 Little he ate, and less he spoke,
 Nor mingled with the menial flock :
 And oft apart his arms he tost,
 And often muttered, "Lost ! lost ! lost !"
 He was waspish, arch, and litherlie,†
 But well Lord Cranstoun servèd he :
 And he of his service was full fain ;
 For once he had been ta'en or slain,
 An it had not been for his ministry.
 All between Home and Hermitage,
 Talked of Lord Cranstoun's Goblin-Page.

* See Note 28.

† Malicious.

xxxiii.

For the Baron went on pilgrimage,
And took with him this elvish Page,
To Mary's Chapel of the Lowes ;
For there, beside Our Lady's lake,
An offering he had sworn to make,
And he would pay his vows.
But the Ladye of Branksome gathered a band
Of the best that would ride at her command :
The trysting-place was Newark Lee.
Wat of Harden came thither amain,
And thither came John of Thirlestane,
And thither came William of Deloraine ;
They were three hundred spears and three.
Through Douglas-burn, up Yarrow stream,
Their horses prance, their lances gleam.
They came to St. Mary's lake ere day ;
But the chapel was void, and the Baron away.
They burned the chapel for very rage,
And cursed Lord Cranstoun's Goblin-Page.

xxxiv.

And now, in Branksome's good greenwood,
As under the aged oak he stood,
The Baron's courser pricks his ears,
As if a distant noise he hears.
The Dwarf waves his long lean arm on high,
And signs to the lovers to part and fly :
No time was then to vow or sigh.
Fair Margaret, through the hazel grove,
Flew like the startled cushat-dove : *
The Dwarf the stirrup held and rein ;
Vaulted the Knight on his steed amain,
And, pondering deep that morning's scene,
Rode eastward through the hawthorns green.

WHILE thus he poured the lengthened tale,
The Minstrel's voice began to fail :

* Wood pigeon.

Full slyly smiled the observant page,
 And gave the withered hand of age
 A goblet crowned with mighty wine,
 The blood of Velez' scorched vine.
 He raised the silver cup on high,
 And, while the big drop filled his eye,
 Prayed God to bless the Duchess long,
 And all who cheered a son of song.
 The attending maidens smiled to see
 How long, how deep, how zealously,
 The precious juice the Minstrel quaffed ;
 And he, emboldened by the draught,
 Looked gaily back to them, and laughed.
 The cordial nectar of the bowl
 Swelled his old veins, and cheered his soul ;
 A lighter, livelier prelude ran,
 Ere thus his tale again began.

CANTO. THIRD.

I.

AND said I that my limbs were old,
 And said I that my blood was cold,
 And that my kindly fire was fled,
 And my poor withered heart was dead,
 And that I might not sing of Love?—
 How could I to the dearest theme,
 That ever warmed a minstrel's dream,
 So foul, so false a recreant prove?
 How could I name Love's very name,
 Nor wake my heart to notes of flame?

II.

In peace, Love tunes the shepherd's reed ;
 In war, he mounts the warrior's steed ;
 In halls, in gay attire is seen ;
 In hamlets, dances on the green.
 Love rules the court, the camp, the grove,

And men below, and saints above;
For love is heaven, and heaven is love.

III. Hearts did burn

So thought Lord Cranstoun, as I ween,
While, pondering deep the tender scene,
He rode through Branksome's hawthorn green.

But the Page shouted wild and shrill—

And scarce his helmet could he don,

When downward from the shady hill

A stately knight came pricking on.

That warrior's steed, so dapple-grey,
Was dark with sweat and splashed with clay;

His armour red with many a stain:

He seemed in such a weary plight,
As if he had ridden the livelong night;

For it was William of Deloraine.

IV.

But no whit weary did he seem

When, dancing in the sunny beam,

He marked the crane on the Baron's crest;*

For his ready spear was in his rest.

Few were the words, and stern and high,

That marked the foemen's feudal hate,

For question fierce, and proud reply,

Gave signal soon of dire debate.

Their very coursers seemed to know

That each was other's mortal foe,

And snorted fire, when wheeled around,

To give each knight his vantage-ground.

V.

In rapid round the Baron bent;

He sighed a sigh, and prayed a prayer:

The prayer was to his patron saint,

The sigh was to his ladye fair.

* The crest of the Cranstouns, in allusion to their name, is a crane dormant, holding a stone in its foot, with an emphatic Border motto, Thou shalt want ere I want.

Stout Deloraine nor sighed nor prayed,
Nor saint nor ladye called to aid ;
But he stooped his head, and couched his spear,
And spurred his steed to full career.
The meeting of these champions proud
Seemed like the bursting thundercloud.

VI.

Stern was the dint the Borderer lent !
The stately Baron backwards bent ;
Bent backwards to his horse's tail,
And his plumes went scattering on the gale :
The tough ash spear, so stout and true,
Into a thousand flinders flew.
But Cranstoun's lance, of more avail,
Pierced through, like silk, the Borderer's mail ;
Through shield, and jack, and acton passed,
Deep in his bosom, broke at last.—
Still sate the warrior saddle-fast,
Till, stumbling in the mortal shock,
Down went the steed, the girthing broke,
Hurled on a heap lay man and horse.
The Baron onward passed his course ;
Nor knew—so giddy rolled his brain—
His foe lay stretched upon the plain.

VII.

But when he reined his courser round,
And saw his foeman on the ground
Lie senseless as the bloody clay,
He bade his Page to stanch the wound,
And there beside the warrior stay,
And tend him in his doubtful state,
And lead him to Branksome castle-gate :
His noble mind was inly moved
For the kinsman of the maid he loved.
“ This shalt thou do without delay :
No longer here myself may stay ;
Unless the swifter I speed away,
Short shrift will be at my dying day.”

VIII.

Away in speed Lord Cranstoun rode ;
The Goblin-Page behind abode ;
His lord's command he ne'er withstood,
Though small his pleasure to do good.
As the corselet off he took,
The Dwarf espied the Mighty Book !
Much he marvelled a knight of pride
Like a book-bosomed priest should ride : *
He thought not to search or stanch the wound,
Until the secret he had found.

IX.

The iron band, the iron clasp,
Resisted long the elfin grasp ;
For when the first he had undone,
It closed as he the next begun.
Those iron clasps, that iron band,
Would not yield to unchristened hand,
Till he smeared the cover o'er
With the Borderer's curdled gore ;
A moment then the volume spread,
And one short spell therein he read.
It had much of glamour might,
Could make a ladye seem a knight ;
The cobwebs on a dungeon wall
Seem tapestry in lordly hall ;
A nut-shell seem a gilded barge ;
A sheeling † seem a palace large ;
And youth seem age, and age seem youth—
All was delusion, nought was truth.‡

X.

He had not read another spell
When on his cheek a buffet fell,
So fierce it stretched him on the plain,
Beside the wounded Deloraine.

* See Note 29.

† A shepherd's hut.

‡ See Note 30.

From the ground he rose dismayed,
 And shook his huge and matted head ;
 One word he muttered, and no more—
 “ Man of age, thou smitest sore ! ”—
 No more the Elfin-Page durst try
 Into the wondrous Book to pry ;
 The clasps, though smeared with Christian gore,
 Shut faster than they were before.
 He hid it underneath his cloak.—
 Now, if you ask who gave the stroke,
 I cannot tell, so mot I thrive ;
 It was not given by man alive.

XI.

Unwillingly himself he addressed
 To do his master's high behest :
 He lifted up the living corse,
 And laid it on the weary horse ;
 He led him into Branksome Hall,
 Before the beards of the warders all ;
 And each did after swear and say
 There only passed a wain of hay.
 He took him to Lord David's tower,
 Even to the Ladye's secret bower ;
 And, but that stronger spells were spread,
 And the door might not be openèd,
 He had laid him on her very bed.
 Whate'er he did of gramarye *
 Was always done maliciously :
 He flung the warrior on the ground,
 And the blood welled freshly from the wound.

XII.

As he repassed the outer court,
 He spied the fair young child at sport :
 He thought to train him to the wood ;
 For, at a word, be it understood,
 He was always for ill, and never for good.

Seemed to the boy, some comrade gay
Led him forth to the woods to play :
On the drawbridge the warders stout
Saw a terrier and lurcher passing out.

xiii.

He led the boy o'er bank and fell,
Until they came to a woodland brook ;
The running stream dissolved the spell,*
And his own elvish shape he took.
Could he have had his pleasure vilde,†
He had crippled the joints of the noble child ;
Or, with his fingers long and lean,
Had strangled him in fiendish spleen :
But his awful mother he had in dread,
And also his power was limited ;
So he but scowled on the startled child,
And darted through the forest wild ;
The woodland brook he bounding crossed,
And laughed, and shouted, "Lost ! lost ! lost !"

xiv.

Full sore amazed at the wondrous change,
And frightened as a child might be
At the wild yell and visage strange,
And the dark words of gramarye,
The child, amidst the forest bower,
Stood rooted like a lily flower ;
And when at length, with trembling pace,
He sought to find where Branksome lay,
He feared to see that grisly face
Glare from some thicket on his way.
Thus, starting oft, he journeyed on,
And deeper in the wood is gone,—
For aye the more he sought his way,
The further still he went astray,—
Until he heard the mountains round
Ring to the baying of a hound.

See Note 31.

† Vilde, vile, wicked.

XV.

And hark ! and hark ! the deep-mouthed bark
Comes nigher still, and nigher :
Bursts on the path a 'dark bloodhound,
His tawny muzzle tracked the ground,
And his red eye shot fire.
Soon as the wildered child saw he,
He flew at him right furiouslie.
I ween you would have seen with joy
The bearing of the gallant boy,
When, worthy of his noble sire,
His wet cheek glowed 'twixt fear and ire !
He faced the bloodhound manfully,
And held his little bat on high :
So fierce he struck, the dog, afraid,
At cautious distance hoarsely bayed,
But still in act to spring,
When dashed an archer through the glade,
And when he saw the hound was stayed,
He drew his tough bowstring ;
But a rough voice cried, " Shoot not, hoy !
" Ho ! shoot not, Edward—'tis a boy !"—

XVI.

The speaker issued from the wood,
And checked his fellow's surly mood,
And quelled the ban-dog's ire.
He was an English yeoman good,
And born in Lancashire.
Well could he hit a fallow-deer
Five hundred feet him fro ;
With hand more true, and eye more clear,
No archer bended bow.
His coal-black hair, shorn round and close,
Set off his sun-burned face.
Old England's sign, St. George's Cross,
His barret-cap did grace ;
His bugle-horn hung by his side,
All in a wolf-skin baldric tied ;

And his short falchion, sharp and clear,
Had pierced the throat of many a deer.

XVII.

His kirtle, made of forest green,
Reached scantily to his knee;
And, at his belt, of arrows keen
A furbished sheaf bore he;
His buckler, scarce in breadth a span,
No larger fence had he;
He never counted him a man
Would strike below the knee;*
His slackened bow was in his hand,
And the leash that was his bloodhound's band.

XVIII.

He would not do the fair child harm,
But held him with his powerful arm,
That he might neither fight nor flee;
For when the Red-Cross spied he,
The boy strove long and violently.
"Now, by St. George," the archer cries,
"Edward, methinks we have a prize!
This boy's fair face, and courage free,
Show he is come of high degree."

XIX.

"Yes! I am come of high degree,
For I am the heir of bold Buccleuch;
And if thou dost not set me free,
False Southron, thou shalt dearly rue!
For Walter of Harden shall come with speed,
And William of Deloraine, good at need,
And every Scott from Esk to Tweed,
And, if thou dost not let me go,
Despite thy arrows and thy bow,
I'll have thee hanged to feed the crow!"—

Is out to XX. from 1840

"Gramercy, for thy good-will, fair boy!
My mind was never set so high;

* See Note 32.

But if thou art chief of such a clan,
 And art the son of such a man,
 And ever comest to thy command,
 Our wardens had need to keep good order ;
 My bow of yew to a hazel wand,
 Thou'lt make them work upon the Border.
 Meantime, be pleased to come with me,
 For good Lord Dacre shalt thou see ;
 I think our work is well begun,
 When we have taken thy father's son."—

XXI.

Although the child was led away,
 In Branksome still he seemed to stay,
 For so the Dwarf his part did play ;
 And, in the shape of that young boy,
 He wrought the castle much annoy.
 The comrades of the young Buccleuch
 He pinched, and beat, and overthrew ;
 Nay, some of them he well-nigh slew.
 He tore Dame Maudlin's silken tire,
 And, as Sym Hall stood by the fire,
 He lighted the match of his bandelier,*
 And woefully scorched the hackbuteer.†
 It may be hardly thought or said
 The mischief that the urchin made,
 Till many of the castle guessed,
 That the young Baron was possessed !

XXII.

Well I ween, the charm he held
 The noble Ladye had soon dispelled ;
 But she was deeply busied then
 To tend the wounded Deloraine.
 Much she wondered to find him lie
 On the stone threshold stretched along.
 She thought some spirit of the sky
 Had done the bold moss-trooper wrong,

* Bandelier, belt for carrying ammunition.

† Hackbuteer, musketeer.

Because, despite her precept dread,
Perchance he in the Book had read ;
But the broken lance in his bosom stood,
And it was earthly steel and wood.

XXIII.

She drew the splinter from the wound,
And with a charm she stanch'd the blood ;
She bade the gash be cleansed and bound.
No longer by his couch she stood ;
But she has ta'en the broken lance,
And washed it from the clotted gore,
And salv'd the splinter o'er and o'er.*
William of Deloraine, in trance,
Whene'er she turned it round and round,
Twisted as if she galled his wound.
Then to her maidens she did say,
That he should be whole man and sound
Within the course of a night and day.
Full long she toiled, for she did rue
Mishap to friend so stout and true.

XXIV.

So passed the day—the evening fell,
'Twas near the time of curfew bell ;
The air was mild, the wind was calm,
The stream was smooth, the dew was balm ;
E'en the rude watchman on the tower
Enjoyed and blessed the lovely hour.
Far more fair Margaret loved and blessed
The hour of silence and of rest.
On the high turret sitting lone,
She waked at times the lute's soft tone ;
Touched a wild note, and all between
Thought of the bower of hawthorns green.
Her golden hair streamed free from band,
Her fair cheek rested on her hand,
Her blue eyes sought the west afar,
For lovers love the western star.

* This was called the "cure by sympathy."

XXV.

Is yon the star, o'er Penchryst Pen,
 That rises slowly to her ken,
 And, spreading broad its wavering light,
 Shakes its loose tresses on the night?
 Is yon red glare the western star?—
 O, 'tis the beacon-blaze of war!
 Scarce could she draw her tightened breath,
 For well she knew the fire of death!

XXVI.

The warder viewed it blazing strong,
 And blew his war-note loud and long,
 Till, at the high and haughty sound,
 Rock, wood, and river rung around.
 The blast alarmed the festal hall,
 And startled forth the warriors all;
 Far downward, in the castle-yard,
 Full many a torch and cresset glared;
 And helms and plumes, confusedly tost,
 Were in the blaze half-seen, half-lost;
 And spears in wild disorder shook,
 Like reeds beside a frozen brook.

XXVII.

The Seneschal, whose silver hair
 Was reddened by the torches' glare,
 Stood in the midst, with gesture proud,
 And issued forth his mandates loud.—
 "On Penchryst glows a bale * of fire,
 And three are kindling on Priestthaughswire;
 Ride out, ride out,
 The foe to scout!
 Mount, mount for Branksome, † every man!
 Thou, Todrig, warn the Johnstone clan,
 That ever are true and stout.—
 Ye need not send to Liddesdale;

* Bale, beacon-fagot.

† Mount for Branksome was the gathering word of the Scotts.

For when they see the blazing bale,
Elliot and Armstrongs never fail.—
Ride, Alton, ride, for death and life !
And warn the Warden of the strife.—
Young Gilbert, let our beacon blaze,
Our kin, and clan, and friends to raise.”—

XXVIII.

Fair Margaret, from the turret head,
Heard, far below, the coursers' tread,
While loud the harness rung,
As to their seats, with clamour dread,
The ready horsemen sprung ;
And trampling hoofs, and iron coats,
And leaders' voices, mingled notes,
And out ! and out !
In hasty route,
The horsemen galloped forth ;
Dispersing to the south to scout,
And east, and west, and north,
To view their coming enemies,
And warn their vassals and allies.

XXIX.

The ready page, with hurried hand,
Awaked the need-fire's * slumbering brand,
And ruddy blushed the heaven :
For a sheet of flame, from the turret high,
Waved like a blood-flag on the sky,
All flaring and uneven ;
And soon a score of fires, I ween,
From height, and hill, and cliff, were seen ;
Each with warlike tidings fraught ;
Each from each the signal caught ;
Each after each they glanced to sight,
As stars arise upon the night.
They gleamed on many a dusky tarn, †
Haunted by the lonely earn ; ‡

* Need-fire, beacon.† Tarn, a mountain lake.‡ Earn, the Scottish name of the sea-eagle.

On many a cairn's grey pyramid,
 Where urns of mighty chiefs lie hid ; *
 Till high Dunedin the blazes saw,
 From Soltra and Dumpender Law ;
 And Lothian heard the Regent's order,
 That all should bowne † them for the Border.

XXX.

The livelong night in Branksome rang
 The ceaseless sound of steel ;
 The castle-bell, with backward clang,
 Sent forth the larum peal ;
 Was frequent heard the heavy jar,
 Where massy stone and iron bar
 Were piled on echoing keep and tower,
 To whelm the foe with deadly shower ;
 Was frequent heard the changing guard,
 And watchword from the sleepless ward ;
 While, wearied by the endless din,
 Bloodhound and bandog yelled within.

XXXI.

The noble Dame, amid the broil,
 Shared the grey Seneschal's high toil,
 And spoke of danger with a smile ;
 Cheered the young knights, and council sage
 Held with the chiefs of riper age.
 No tidings of the foe were brought,
 Nor of his numbers knew they aught,
 Nor what in time of truce he sought.
 Some said that there were thousands ten ;
 And others weened that it was nought
 But Leven Clans, or Tynedale men,
 Who came to gather in blackmail ; ‡
 And Liddesdale, with small avail,
 Might drive them lightly back agen.

* See Note 33.

† Bowne, make ready.

‡ Protection money exacted by freebooters.

So passed the anxious night away,
And welcome was the peep of day.

CEASED the high sound—the listening throng
Applaud the Master of the Song ;
And marvel much, in helpless age,
So hard should be his pilgrimage.
Had he no friend—no daughter dear,
His wandering toil to share and cheer ;
No son to be his father's stay,
And guide him on the rugged way ?
“ Ay, once he had—but he was dead ! ”—
Upon the harp he stooped his head,
And busied himself the strings withal,
To hide the tear that fain would fall.
In solemn measure, soft and slow,
Arose a father's notes of woe.

CANTO FOURTH.

I.

SWEET Teviot ! on thy silver tide
The glaring bale-fires blaze no more ;
No longer steel-clad warriors ride
Along thy wild and willowed shore ;
Where'er thou wind'st by dale or hill,
All, all is peaceful, all is still,
As if thy waves, since Time was born,
Since first they rolled upon the Tweed,
Had only heard the shepherd's reed,
Nor started at the bugle-horn.

II.

Unlike the tide of human time,
Which, though it change in ceaseless flow,
Retains each grief, retains each crime
Its earliest course was doomed to know ;

And, darker as it downward bears,
 Is stained with past and present tears.
 Low as that tide has ebb'd with me,
 It still reflects to Memory's eye
 The hour my brave, my only boy,
 Fell by the side of great Dundee.*
 Why, when the volleying musket played
 Against the bloody Highland blade,
 Why was not I beside him laid !—
 Enough—he died the death of fame !
 Enough—he died with conquering Græme !

III.

Now over Border, dale and fell,
 Full wide and far was terror spread ;
 For pathless marsh, and mountain cell,
 The peasant left his lowly shed.†
 The frightened flocks and herds were pent
 Beneath the peel's rude battlement ;
 And maids and matrons dropped the tear,
 While ready warriors seized the spear.
 From Branksome's towers, the watchman's eye
 Dun wreaths of distant smoke can spy,
 Which, curling in the rising sun,
 Showed Southern ravage was begun.

IV.

Now loud the heedful gate-ward cried—
 “Prepare ye all for blows and blood !
 Watt Tinlinn,‡ from the Liddel-side,
 Comes wading through the flood.
 Full oft the Tynedale snatchers knock
 At his lone gate, and prove the lock.
 It was but last St. Barnabright
 They sieged him a whole summer night,
 But fled at morning : well they knew,
 In vain he never twanged the yew.
 Right sharp has been the evening shower,
 That drove him from his Liddel tower ;

* At Killiecrankie.

† See Note 34.

‡ See Note 35.

And, by my faith," the gate-ward said,
 "I think 'twill prove a Warden-Raid." *

V.

While thus he spoke, the bold yeoman
 Entered the echoing barbican.
 He led a small and shaggy nag,
 That through a bog, from hag to hag, †
 Could bound like any Billhope stag.
 It bore his wife and children twain;
 A half-clothed serf was all their train:
 His wife, stout, ruddy, and dark-browed,
 Of silver brooch and bracelet proud,
 Laughed to her friends among the crowd.
 He was of stature passing tall,
 But sparely formed, and lean withal;
 A battered morion on his brow;
 A leather jack, as fence enow,
 On his broad shoulders loosely hung;
 A border axe behind was slung;
 His spear, six Scottish ells in length,
 Seemed newly dyed with gore;
 His shafts and bow, of wondrous strength,
 His hardy partner bore.

VI.

Thus to the Ladye did Tinlinn show
 The tidings of the English foe:—
 "Belted Will Howard ‡ is marching here,
 And hot Lord Dacre, § with many a spear,
 And all the German hackbut-men ||
 Who have long lain at Askerten.
 They crossed the Liddel at curfew hour,
 And burned my little lonely tower:
 The fiend receive their souls therefor!
 It had not been burned this year and more.

* An inroad commanded by the Warden in person.

† The broken ground in a bog.

‡ See Note 36. § See Note 37. || Musketeers. See Note 38.

Barn-yard and dwelling, blazing bright,
 Served to guide me on my flight ;
 But I was chased the livelong night.
 Black John of Akeshaw, and Fergus Græme,
 Fast upon my traces came,
 Until I turned at Priesthaugh Scrogg
 And shot their horses in the bog,
 Slew Fergus with my lance outright—
 I had him long at high despite :
 He drove my cows last Fastern's night.”—

VII.

Now weary scouts from Liddesdale,
 Fast hurrying in, confirmed the tale :
 As far as they could judge by ken,
 Three hours would bring to Teviot's strand
 Three thousand armed Englishmen.
 Meanwhile, full many a warlike band,
 From Teviot, Aill, and Ettrick shade,
 Came in, their Chief's defence to aid.
 There was saddling and mounting in haste,
 There was pricking o'er moor and lea ;
 He that was last at the trysting-place,
 Was but lightly held of his gay ladye.

VIII.

From fair St. Mary's silver wave,
 From dreary Gamescleugh's dusky height,
 His ready lances Thirlestane brave
 Arrayed beneath a banner bright.
 The tressured fleur-de-luce he claims
 To wreath his shield, since royal James,
 Encamped by Fala's mossy wave,
 The proud distinction grateful gave
 For faith 'mid feudal jars ;
 What time, save Thirlestane alone,
 Of Scotland's stubborn barons none
 Would march to Southern wars.
 And hence, in fair remembrance worn,
 Yon sheaf of spears his crest has borne ;

Hence his high motto shines revealed—
“Ready, aye ready,” for the field.*

IX.

An aged Knight, to danger steeled,
With many a moss-trooper, came on ;
And azure in a golden field,
The stars and crescent graced his shield,
Without the bend of Murdieston.†
Wide lay his lands round Oakwood tower,
And wide round haunted Castle-Ower ;
High over Borthwick’s mountain flood,
His wood-embosomed mansion stood ;
In the dark glen, so deep below,
The herds of plundered England low,
His bold retainers’ daily food,
And bought with danger, blows, and blood.
Marauding chief ! his sole delight
The moonlight raid, the morning fight ;
Not even the Flower of Yarrow’s charms,
In youth, might tame his rage for arms ;
And still, in age, he spurned at rest,
And still his brows the helmet pressed,
Albeit the blanchèd locks below
Were white as Dinlay’s spotless snow.
Five stately warriors drew the sword
Before their father’s band :
A braver knight than Harden’s lord
Ne’er belted on a brand.

X.

Scotts of Eskdale, a stalwart band,
Came trooping down the Todshawhill ;
By the sword they won their land,
And by the sword they hold it still.
Hearken, Ladye, to the tale,
How thy sires won fair Eskdale.—
Earl Morton was lord of that valley fair,
The Beattisons were his vassals there.

* See Note 39. † See Note 40.

The Earl was gentle, and mild of mood,
The vassals were warlike, and fierce, and rude ;
High of heart, and haughty of word,
Little they recked of a tame liege lord.
The Earl into fair Eskdale came,
Homage and seignory to claim :
Of Gilbert the Galliard a heriot * he sought,
Saying, " Give thy best steed, as a vassal ought."
—" Dear to me is my bonny white steed,
Oft has he helped me at pinch of need ;
Lord and Earl though thou be, I trow,
I can rein Bucksfoot better than thou."—
Word on word gave fuel to fire,
Till so highly blazed the Beattison's ire,
But that the Earl the flight had ta'en,
The vassals there their lord had slain.
Sore he plied both whip and spur,
As he urged his steed through Eskdale muir ;
And it fell down a weary weight,
Just on the threshold of Branksome gate.

XI.

The Earl was a wrathful man to see,
Full fain avengèd would he be.
In haste to Branksome's Lord he spoke,
Saying—" Take these traitors to thy yoke ;
For a cast of hawks, and a purse of gold,
All Eskdale I'll sell thee, to have and hold.
Beshrew thy heart, of the Beattisons' clan
If thou leavest on Eske a landed man ;
But spare Woodkerrick's lands alone,
For he lent me his horse to escape upon."—
A glad man then was Branksome bold,
Down he flung him the purse of gold ;
To Eskdale soon he spurred amain,
And with him five hundred riders has ta'en.
He left his merry-men in the mist of the hill,
And bade them hold them close and still ;

* The feudal superior, in certain cases, was entitled to the best horse of the vassal, in name of heriot or herezeld.

And alone he wended to the plain,
To meet with the Galliard and all his train.
To Gilbert the Galliard thus he said :—
“ Know thou me for thy liege-lord and head :
Deal not with me as with Morton tame,
For Scotts play best at the roughest game.
Give me in peace my heriot due,
Thy bonny white steed, or thou shalt rue.
If my horn I three times wind,
Eskdale shall long have the sound in mind.”—

XII.

Loudly the Beattison laughed in scorn :
“ Little care we for thy winded horn.
Ne’er shall it be the Galliard’s lot
To yield his steed to a haughty Scott.
Wend thou to Branksome back on foot,
With rusty spur and miry boot.”—
He blew his bugle so loud and hoarse,
That the dun deer started at fair Craikcross ;
He blew again so loud and clear,
Through the grey mountain mist there did lances appear ;
And the third blast rang with such a din
That the echoes answered from Pentoun-linn,
And all his riders came lightly in.
Then had you seen a gallant shock,
When saddles were emptied, and lances broke !
For each scornful word the Galliard had said,
A Beattison on the field was laid.
His own good sword the Chieftain drew,
And he bore the Galliard through and through ;
Where the Beattisons’ blood mixed with the rill,
The Galliard’s-Haugh men call it still.
The Scotts have scattered the Beattison clan,
In Eskdale they left but one landed man.
The valley of Eske, from the mouth to the source,
Was lost and won for that bonny white horse.

XIII.

Whitslade the Hawk, and Headshaw came,
And warriors more than I may name ;

From Yarrow-cleugh to Hindhaugh-swair,
 From Woodhouselie to Chester-glen,
 Trooped man and horse, and bow and spear,
 Their gathering word was Bellenden :
 And better hearts o'er Border sod
 To siege or rescue never rode.

The Ladye marked the aids come in,
 And high her heart of pride arose :
 She bade her youthful son attend,
 That he might know his father's friend,
 And learn to face his foes.

"The boy is ripe to look on war.

I saw him draw a crossbow stiff,
 And his true arrow struck afar

The raven's nest upon the cliff :
 The Red Cross, on a Southern breast,
 Is broader than the raven's nest.

Thou, Whitslade, shalt teach him his weapon to wield,
 And o'er him hold his father's shield."—

XIV.

Well may you think, the wily Page
 Cared not to face the Ladye sage.
 He counterfeited childish fear,
 And shrieked, and shed full many a tear,
 And moaned and plained in manner wild.

The attendants to the Ladye told,
 Some fairy, sure, had changed the child,
 That wont to be so free and bold.

Then wrathful was the noble dame ;
 She blushed blood-red for very shame :—

"Hence ! ere the clan his faintness view ;
 Hence with the weakling to Buccleuch !—
 Watt Tinlinn, thou shalt be his guide
 To Rangleburn's lonely side :—
 Sure some fell fiend has cursed our line,
 That coward should e'er be son of mine !"—

XV.

A heavy task Watt Tinlinn had,
 To guide the counterfeited lad.

Soon as the palfrey felt the weight
Of that ill-omened elfish freight,
He bolted, sprung, and reared amain,
Nor heeded bit, nor curb, nor rein.
It cost Watt Tinlinn mickle toil
To drive him but a Scottish mile ;
 But as a shallow brook they crossed,
The elf, amid the running stream,
His figure changed, like form in dream,
 And fled, and shouted, "Lost ! lost ! lost !"
Full fast the urchin ran and laughed,
But faster still a clothyard shaft
Whistled from startled Tinlinn's yew,
And pierced his shoulder through and through.
Although the imp might not be slain,
And though the wound soon healed again,
Yet, as he ran, he yelled for pain ;
And Watt of Tinlinn, much aghast,
Rode back to Branksome fiery fast.

XVI.

Soon on the hill's steep verge he stood,
That looks o'er Branksome's towers and wood ;
And martial murmurs, from below,
Proclaimed the approaching Southern foe.
Through the dark wood, in mingled tone,
Were Border pipes and bugles blown ;
The coursers' neighing he could ken,
A measured tread of marching men ;
While broke at times the solemn hum,
The Almayn's sullen kettle-drum ;
 And banners tall, of crimson sheen,
 Above the copse appear ;
And, glistening through the hawthorns green,
 Shine helm, and shield, and spear.

XVII.

Light forayers, first, to view the ground,
Spurred their fleet coursers loosely round ;

Behind, in close array, and fast,
 The Kendal archers, all in green,
 Obedient to the bugle blast,
 Advancing from the wood were seen.
 To back and guard the archer band,
 Lord Dacre's billmen were at hand :
 A hardy race, on Irthing bred,
 With kirtles white and crosses red,
 Arrayed beneath the banner tall
 That streamed o'er Acre's conquered wall ;
 And minstrels, as they marched in order,
 Played, "Noble Lord Dacre, he dwells on the Border."

XVIII.

Behind the English bill and bow,
 The mercenaries, firm and slow,
 Moved on to fight, in dark array,
 By Conrad led of Wolfenstein,
 Who brought the band from distant Rhine,
 And sold their blood for foreign pay.
 The camp their home, their law the sword,
 They knew no country, owned no lord.
 They were not armed like England's sons,
 But bore the levin-darting guns ;
 Buff coats, all frounced and 'broidered o'er,
 And morsing-horns * and scarfs they wore ;
 Each better knee was bared, to aid
 The warriors in the escalade :
 All, as they marched, in rugged tongue,
 Songs of Teutonic feuds they sung.

XIX.

But louder still the clamour grew,
 And louder still the minstrels blew,
 When, from beneath the greenwood tree,
 Rode forth Lord Howard's chivalry ;
 His men-at-arms, with glaive and spear,
 Brought up the battle's glittering rear.

* Powder-flasks.

There many a youthful knight, full keen
To gain his spurs, in arms was seen ;
With favour in his crest, or glove,
Memorial of his ladye-love.
So rode they forth in fair array,
Till full their lengthened lines display ;
Then called a halt, and made a stand,
And cried, "St. George for merry England !"

XX.

Now every English eye, intent,
On Branksome's armèd towers was bent.
So near they were, that they might know
The straining harsh of each crossbow ;
On battlement and bartizan
Gleamed axe, and spear, and partisan ;
Falcon and culver,* on each tower,
Stood prompt their deadly hail to shower ;
And flashing armour frequent broke
From eddying whirls of sable smoke,
Where, upon tower and turret head,
The seething pitch and molten lead
Reeked, like a witch's cauldron red.
While yet they gaze, the bridges fall,
The wicket opes, and from the wall
Rides forth the hoary Seneschal.

XXI.

Armèd he rode, all save the head,
His white beard o'er his breastplate spread ;
Unbroke by age, erect his seat,
He ruled his eager courser's gait ;
Forced him, with chastened fire, to prance,
And, high curvetting, slow advance :
In sign of truce, his better hand
Displayed a peelèd willow wand ;
His squire, attending in the rear,
Bore high a gauntlet on a spear.†

* Ancient pieces of artillery.

† See Note 41.

When they espied him riding out,
 Lord Howard and Lord Dacre stout
 Sped to the front of their array,
 To hear what this old knight should say.

XXII.

“Ye English warden lords, of you
 Demands the Ladye of Buccleuch,
 Why, 'gainst the truce of Border tide,
 In hostile guise ye dare to ride,
 With Kendal bow, and Gilsland brand,
 And all yon mercenary band,
 Upon the bounds of fair Scotland?
 My Ladye reads you swith * return;
 And, if but one poor straw you burn,
 Or do our towers so much molest
 As scare one swallow from her nest,
 St. Mary! but we'll light a brand
 Shall warm your hearths in Cumberland.”—

XXIII.

A wrathful man was Dacre's lord,
 But calmer Howard took the word :—
 “May't please thy Dame, Sir Seneschal,
 To seek the castle's outward wall,
 Our pursuivant-at-arms shall show
 Both why we came, and when we go.”—
 The message sped, the noble Dame
 To the wall's outward circle came;
 Each chief around leaned on his spear,
 To see the pursuivant appear.
 All in Lord Howard's livery drest,
 The lion argent decked his breast;
 He led a boy of blooming hue—
 O sight to meet a mother's view!
 It was the heir of great Buccleuch.
 Obeisance meet the herald made,
 And thus his master's will he said :—

* Reads = redes, counsels; swith, instantly.

XXIV.

“ It irks, high Dame, my noble Lords,
’Gainst ladye fair to draw their swords ;
But yet they may not tamely see,
All through the Western Wardenry,
Your law-contemning kinsmen ride,
And burn and spoil the Border-side ;
And ill beseems your rank and birth
To make your towers a flemens-firth.*
We claim from thee William of Deloraine,
That he may suffer march-treason pain.†
It was but last St. Cuthbert’s even
He pricked to Stapleton on Leven,
Harried ‡ the lands of Richard Musgrave,
And slew his brother by dint of glaive.
Then, since a lone and widowed Dame
These restless riders may not tame,
Either receive within thy towers
Two hundred of my master’s powers,
Or straight they sound their warrison,§
And storm and spoil thy garrison ;
And this fair boy, to London led,
Shall good King Edward’s page be bred.”

XXV.

He ceased—and loud the boy did cry,
And stretched his little arms on high ;
Implored for aid each well-known face,
And strove to seek the Dame’s embrace.
A moment changed that Ladye’s cheer,
Gushed to her eye the unbidden tear ;
She gazed upon the leaders round,
And dark and sad each warrior frowned ;
Then, deep within her sobbing breast
She locked the struggling sigh to rest ;
Unaltered and collected stood,
And thus replied, in dauntless mood :—

* An asylum for outlaws.

† See Note 42.

‡ Plundered.

§ Note of assault.

XXVI.

" Say to your Lords of high emprise,
 Who war on women and on boys,
 That either William of Deloraine
 Will cleanse him, by oath, of march-treason stain,
 Or else he will the combat take
 'Gainst Musgrave, for his honour's sake.
 No knight in Cumberland so good,
 But William may count with him kin and blood.
 Knighthood he took of Douglas' sword,*
 When English blood swelled Ancram's ford; †
 And but Lord Dacre's steed was wight,
 And bare him ably in the flight,
 Himself had seen him dubbed a knight.
 For the young heir of Branksome's line,
 God be his aid, and God be mine :
 Through me no friend shall meet his doom ;
 Here, while I live, no foe finds room.
 Then, if thy Lords their purpose urge,
 Take our defiance loud and high ;
 Our slogan is their lyke-wake ‡ dirge,
 Our moat, the grave where they shall lie."—

XXVII.

Proud she looked round, applause to claim—
 Then lightened Thirlestane's eye of flame,
 His bugle Wat of Harden blew ;
 Pensils and pennons wide were flung,
 To heaven the Border slogan rung,
 " St. Mary for the young Buccleuch !"
 The English war-cry answered wide,
 And forward bent each Southern spear ;
 Each Kendal archer made a stride,
 And drew the bowstring to his ear ;
 Each minstrel's war-note loud was blown ;—
 But, ere a grey-goose shaft had flown,
 A horseman galloped from the rear.

* See Note 43. † See Note 44.

‡ Lyke-wake, the watching a corpse previous to interment.

XXVIII.

“ Ah ! noble Lords ! ” he breathless said,
“ What treason has your march betrayed ?
What make you here, from aid so far,
Before you walls, around you war ?
Your foemen triumph in the thought
That in the toils the lion’s caught.
Already on dark Ruberslaw
The Douglas holds his weapon-schaw ; *
The lances, waving in his train,
Clothe the dun heath like autumn grain ;
And on the Liddel’s northern strand,
To bar retreat to Cumberland,
Lord Maxwell ranks his merry-men good,
Beneath the eagle and the rood ;
And Jedwood, Eske, and Teviotdale,
Have to proud Angus comē ;
And all the Merse and Lauderdale
Have risen with haughty Home.
An exile from Northumberland,
In Liddesdale I’ve wandered long ;
But still my heart was with merry England,
And cannot brook my country’s wrong ;
And hard I’ve spurred all night, to show
The mustering of the coming foe.”—

XXIX.

“ And let them come ! ” fierce Dacre cried ;
“ For soon yon crest, my father’s pride,
That swept the shores of Judah’s sea,
And waved in gales of Galilee,
From Branksome’s highest towers displayed,
Shall mock the rescue’s lingering aid !—
Level each harquebus on row ;
Draw, merry archers, draw the bow ;
Up, billmen, to the walls, and cry,
Dacre for England, win or die ! ”—

* Weapon-schaw, the military array of a chief or of a country.

XXX.

“Yet hear,” quoth Howard, “calmly hear,
 Nor deem my words the words of fear;
 For who, in field or foray slack,
 Saw the blanche lion e’er fall back? *
 But thus to risk our Border flower
 In strife against a kingdom’s power,
 Ten thousand Scots ’gainst thousands three,
 Certes, were desperate policy.
 Nay, take the terms the Ladye made,
 Ere conscious of the advancing aid:
 Let Musgrave meet fierce Deloraine
 In single fight, and if he gain,
 He gains for us; but if he’s crossed,
 ’Tis but a single warrior lost:
 The rest, retreating as they came,
 Avoid defeat, and death, and shame.”—

XXXI.

Ill could the haughty Dacre brook
 His brother Warden’s sage rebuke;
 And yet his forward step he stayed,
 And slow and sullenly obeyed.
 But ne’er again the Border side
 Did these two lords in friendship ride;
 And this slight discontent, men say,
 Cost blood upon another day.

XXXII.

The pursuivant-at-arms again
 Before the castle took his stand;
 His trumpet called, with parleying strain,
 The leaders of the Scottish band;
 And he defied, in Musgrave’s right,
 Stout Deloraine to single fight;
 A gauntlet at their feet he laid,
 And thus the terms of fight he said:—
 “If in the lists good Musgrave’s sword
 Vanquish the Knight of Deloraine,

* See Note 45.

Your youthful chieftain, Branksome's Lord,
Shall hostage for his clan remain :
If Deloraine foil good Musgrave,
The boy his liberty shall have.
Howe'er it falls, the English band,
Unharming Scots, by Scots unharmed,
In peaceful march, like men unarmed,
Shall straight retreat to Cumberland."

XXXIII.

Unconscious of the near relief,
The proffer pleased each Scottish chief,
Though much the Ladye sage gainsaid ;
For though their hearts were brave and true,
From Jedwood's recent sack they knew
How tardy was the Regent's aid :
And you may guess the noble Dame
Durst not the secret prescience own,
Sprung from the art she might not name,
By which the coming help was known.
Closed was the compact, and agreed,
That lists should be enclosed with speed,
Beneath the castle, on a lawn :
They fixed the morrow for the strife,
On foot, with Scottish axe and knife,
At the fourth hour from peep of dawn ;
When Deloraine, from sickness freed,
Or else a champion in his stead,
Should for himself and chieftain stand,
Against stout Musgrave, hand to hand.

XXXIV.

I know right well that, in their lay,
Full many minstrels sing and say,
Such combat should be made on horse,
On foaming steed, in full career,
With brand to aid, whenas the spear
Should shiver in the course :
But he, the jovial Harper, taught
Me, yet a youth, how it was fought,

In guise which now I say ;
He knew each ordinance and clause
Of Black Lord Archibald's battle-laws,
In the old Douglas' day.
He brooked not, he, that scoffing tongue
Should tax his minstrelsy with wrong,
Or call his song untrue :
For this, when they the goblet plied,
And such rude taunt had chafed his pride,
The Bard of Reull he slew.
On Teviot's side, in fight they stood,
And tuneful hands were stained with blood ;
Where still the thorn's white branches wave,
Memorial o'er his rival's grave.

xxxv.

Why should I tell the rigid doom,
That dragged my master to his tomb ;
How Ousenam's maidens tore their hair,
Wept till their eyes were dead and dim,
And wrung their hands for love of him,
Who died at Jedwood Air ?
He died !—his scholars, one by one,
To the cold silent grave are gone ;
And I, alas ! survive alone,
To muse o'er rivalries of yore,
And grieve that I shall hear no more
The strains, with envy heard before ;
For, with my minstrel brethren fled,
My jealousy of song is dead.

HE paused : the listening dames again
Applaud the hoary Minstrel's strain.
With many a word of kindly cheer,—
In pity half, and half sincere,—
Marvelled the Duchess how so well
His legendary song could tell—
Of ancient deeds, so long forgot ;
Of feuds, whose memory was not ;

Of forests, now laid waste and bare ;
Of towers, which harbour now the hare ;
Of manners, long since changed and gone ;
Of chiefs, who under their grey stone
So long had slept, that fickle Fame
Had blotted from her rolls their name,
And twined round some new minion's head
The fading wreath for which they bled ;
In sooth, 'twas strange, this old man's verse
Could call them from their marble hearse.

The Harper smiled, well pleased ; for ne'er
Was flattery lost on poet's ear :
A simple race ! they waste their toil
For the vain tribute of a smile.
E'en when in age their flame expires,
Her dulcet breath can fan its fires ;
Their drooping fancy wakes at praise,
And strives to trim the short-lived blaze.

Smiled then, well pleased, the Aged Man,
And thus his tale continued ran.

CANTO FIFTH.

I.

CALL it not vain :—they do not err
Who say, that when the Poet dies,
Mute Nature mourns her worshipper,
And celebrates his obsequies ;
Who say, tall cliff, and cavern lone,
For the departed Bard make moan ;
That mountains weep in crystal rill ;
That flowers in tears of balm distil ;
Through his loved groves that breezes sigh,
And oaks, in deeper groan, reply ;
And rivers teach their rushing wave
To murmur dirges round his grave.

II.

Not that, in sooth, o'er mortal urn
Those things inanimate can mourn ;
But that the stream, the wood, the gale
Is vocal with the plaintive wail
Of those who, else forgotten long,
Lived in the poet's faithful song,
And, with the poet's parting breath,
Whose memory feels a second death.
The Maid's pale shade, who wails her lot,
That love, true love, should be forgot,
From rose and hawthorn shakes the tear
Upon the gentle Minstrel's bier.
The phantom Knight, his glory fled,
Mourns o'er the field he heaped with dead ;
Mounts the wild blast that sweeps amain,
And shrieks along the battle-plain.
The Chief, whose antique crownlet long
Still sparkled in the feudal song,
Now, from the mountain's misty throne,
Sees, in the thanedom once his own,
His ashes undistinguished lie,
His place, his power, his memory die :
His groans the lonely caverns fill,
His tears of rage impel the rill ;—
All mourn the Minstrel's harp unstrung,
Their name unknown, their praise unsung.

III.

Scarcely the hot assault was staid,
The terms of truce were scarcely made,
When they could spy, from Branksome's towers,
The advancing march of martial powers.
Thick clouds of dust afar appeared,
And trampling steeds were faintly heard ;
Bright spears, above the columns dun,
Glanced momentary to the sun ;
And feudal banners fair displayed
The bands that moved to Branksome's aid.

BOOK IV.

Vails not to tell each hardy clan,
 From the fair Middle Marches came;
 The Bloody Heart blazed in the van,
 Announcing Douglas, dreaded name! *
 Vails not to tell what steeds did spurn,
 Where the Seven Spears of Wedderburne
 Their men in battle-order set;
 And Swinton laid the lance in rest,
 That tamed of yore the sparkling crest
 Of Clarence's Plantagenet. †
 Nor list I say what hundreds more,
 From the rich Merse and Lammermore,
 And Tweed's fair borders, to the war,
 Beneath the crest of Old Dunbar,
 And Hepburn's mingled banners come,
 Down the steep mountain glittering far,
 And shouting still, "A Home! a Home!" ‡

BOOK V.

Now squire and knight, from Branksome sent,
 On many a courteous message went;
 To every chief and lord they paid
 Meet thanks for prompt and powerful aid;
 And told them how a truce was made,
 And how a day of fight was ta'en
 'Twixt Musgrave and stout Deloraine;
 And how the Ladye prayed them dear,
 That all would stay the fight to see,
 And deign, in love and courtesy,
 To taste of Branksome cheer.
 Nor, while they bade to feast each Scot,
 Were England's noble Lords forgot;
 Himself, the hoary Seneschal,
 Rode forth, in seemly terms to call
 Those gallant foes to Branksome Hall.
 Accepted Howard, than whom knight
 Was never dubbed, more bold in fight;

* See Note 46.

† See Note 47.

‡ See Note 48.

Nor, when from war and armour free,
More famed for stately courtesy :
But angry Dacre rather chose
In his pavilion to repose.

VI.

Now, noble Dame, perchance you ask,
How these two hostile armies met ?
Deeming it were no easy task
To keep the truce which here was set ;
Where martial spirits, all on fire,
Breathed only blood and mortal ire.—
By mutual inroads, mutual blows,
By habit, and by nation, foes,
They met on Teviot's strand ;—
They met and sate them mingled down,
Without a threat, without a frown,
As brothers meet in foreign land :
The hands, the spear that lately grasped,
Still in the mailed gauntlet clasped,
Were interchanged in greeting dear ;
Visors were raised, and faces shown,
And many a friend, to friend made known,
Partook of social cheer.
Some drove the jolly bowl about ;
With dice and draughts some chased the day ;
And some, with many a merry shout,
In riot, revelry, and rout,
Pursued the football play.*

VII.

Yet, be it known, had bugles blown,
Or sign of war been seen,
Those bands, so fair together ranged,
Those hands, so frankly interchanged,
Had dyed with gore the green ;
The merry shout by Teviot-side
Had sunk in war-cries wild and wide,
And in the groan of death ;

* See Note 49.

And whingers,* now in friendship bare,
The social meal to part and share,
Had found a bloody sheath.
'Twixt truce and war, such sudden change
Was not infrequent, nor held strange,
In the old Border-day : †
But yet on Branksome's towers and town,
In peaceful merriment, sunk down
The sun's declining ray.

VIII.

The blithesome signs of wassel gay
Decayed not with the dying day ;
Soon through the latticed windows tall
Of lofty Branksome's lordly hall,
Divided square by shafts of stone,
Huge flakes of ruddy lustre shone ;
Nor less the gilded rafters rang
With merry harp and beakers' clang :
And frequent, on the darkening plain,
Loud hollo, whoop, or whistle ran,
As bands, their stragglers to regain,
Give the shrill watchword of their clan ; ‡
And revellers, o'er their bowls, proclaim
Douglas' or Dacre's conquering name.

IX.

Less frequent heard, and fainter still,
At length the various clamours died,
And you might hear, from Branksome hill,
No sound but Teviot's rushing tide ;
Save when the changing sentinel
The challenge of his watch could tell ;
And save where, through the dark profound,
The clanging axe and hammer's sound
Rung from the nether lawn ;
For many a busy hand toiled there,
Strong pales to shape, and beams to square,
The lists' dread barriers to prepare
Against the morrow's dawn.

* A sort of knife, or poniard. † See Note 50. ‡ See Note 51.

X:

Margaret from hall did soon retreat,
 Despite the Dame's reproving eye;
 Nor marked she, as she left her seat,
 Full many a stifled sigh;
 For many a noble warrior strove
 To win the Flower of Teviot's love,
 And many a bold ally,—
 With throbbing head and anxious heart,
 All in her lonely bower apart,
 In broken sleep she lay.
 By times, from silken couch she rose;
 While yet the bannered hosts repose,
 She viewed the dawning day:
 Of all the hundreds sunk to rest,
 First woke the loveliest and the best.

XI.

She gazed upon the inner court,
 Which in the tower's tall shadow lay;
 Where coursers' clang, and stamp, and snort
 Had rung the livelong yesterday:
 Now still as death; till, stalking slow,—
 The jingling spurs announced his tread,—
 A stately warrior passed below;
 But when he raised his plumed head—
 Blest Mary! can it be?
 Secure, as if in Ousenam bowers,
 He walks through Branksome's hostile towers,
 With fearless step and free.
 She dared not sign, she dared not speak—
 Oh! if one page's slumbers break,
 His blood the price must pay!
 Not all the pearls Queen Mary wears,
 Not Margaret's yet more precious tears,
 Shall buy his life a day!

XII.

Yet was his hazard small; for well
 You may bethink you of the spell

Of that sly urchin Page^{ETIM}
This to his lord he did impart,
And made him seem, by glamour art,
A knight from Hermitage.
Unchallenged thus, the warder's post,
The court, unchallenged, thus he crossed,
For all the vassalage :
But O ! what magic's quaint disguise
Could blind fair Margaret's azure eyes !
She started from her seat ;
While with surprise and fear she strove,
And both could scarcely master love—
Lord Henry's at her feet.

XIII.

Oft have I mused, what purpose bad
That foul malicious urchin had
To bring this meeting round ;
For happy love's a heavenly sight,
And by a vile malignant sprite
In such no joy is found ;
And oft I've deemed, perchance he thought
Their erring passion might have wrought
Sorrow, and sin, and shame ;
And death to Cranstoun's gallant Knight,
And to the gentle ladye bright,
Disgrace, and loss of fame :
But earthly spirit could not tell
The heart of them that loved so well.
True love's the gift which God has given
To man alone beneath the heaven.
It is not fantasy's hot fire,
Whose wishes, soon as granted, fly ;
It liveth not in fierce desire,
With dead desire it doth not die ;
It is the secret sympathy,
The silver link, the silken tie,
Which heart to heart, and mind to mind,
In body and in soul can bind.—

Now leave we Margaret and her Knight,
To tell you of the approaching fight.

XIV.

Their warning blasts the bugles blew,
The pipe's shrill port * aroused each clan ;
In haste, the deadly strife to view,
The trooping warriors eager ran :
Thick round the lists their lances stood,
Like blasted pines in Ettrick wood ;
To Branksome many a look they threw,
The combatants' approach to view,
And bandied many a word of boast
About the knight each favoured most.

XV.

Meantime full anxious was the Dame ;
For now arose disputed claim,
Of who should fight for Deloraine,
'Twixt Harden and 'twixt Thirlestane :
They 'gan to reckon kin and rent,
And frowning brow on brow was bent ;
But yet not long the strife—for, lo !
Himself, the Knight of Deloraine,
Strong, as it seemed, and free from pain,
In armour sheathed from top to toe,
Appeared, and craved the combat due.
The Dame her charm successful knew,†
And the fierce chiefs their claims withdrew.

XVI.

When for the lists they sought the plain,
The stately Lady's silken rein
Did noble Howard hold ;
Unarmèd by her side he walked,
And much, in courteous phrase, they talked
Of feats of arms of old.

* A martial piece of music adapted to the bagpipes.

† See Canto III. stanza xxiii., p. 39.

Costly his garb—his Flemish ruff
Fell o'er his doublet, shaped of buff,
 With satin slashed and lined ;
Tawny his boot, and gold his spur,
His cloak was all of Poland fur,
 His hose with silver twined ;
His Bilboa blade, by Marchmen felt,
Hung in a broad and studded belt—
Hence, in rude phrase, the Borderers still Called noble Howard, Belted Will.

XVII.

Behind Lord Howard and the Dame,
Fair Margaret on her palfrey came,
 Whose footcloth swept the ground ;
White was her wimple, and her veil,
And her loose locks a chaplet pale
 Of whitest roses bound.
The lordly Angus, by her side,
In courtesy to cheer her tried ;
Without his aid, her hand in vain
Had strove to guide her broidered rein.
He deemed she shuddered at the sight
Of warriors met for mortal fight ;
But cause of terror, all unguessed,
Was fluttering in her gentle breast,
When, in their chairs of crimson placed,
The Dame and she the barriers graced.

XVIII.

Prize of the field, the young Buccleuch,
An English knight led forth to view :
Scarce rued the boy his present plight,
So much he longed to see the fight.
Within the lists, in knightly pride,
High Home and haughty Dacre ride ;
Their leading staffs of steel they wield
As marshals of the mortal field ;
While to each knight their care assigned
Like vantage of the sun and wind.

Then heralds hoarse did loud proclaim,
 In King and Queen, and Warden's name,
 That none, while lasts the strife,
 Should dare, by look, or sign, or word,
 Aid to a champion to afford,
 On peril of his life;
 And not a breath the silence broke,
 Till thus the alternate Herald spoke :—

XIX.

English Herald.

" Here standeth Richard of Musgrave,
 Good knight and true, and freely born,
 Amends from Deloraine to crave,
 For foul despiteous scathe and scorn.
 He sayeth, that William of Deloraine
 Is traitor false by Border laws;
 This with his sword he will maintain,
 So help him God, and his good cause!"

XX.

Scottish Herald.

" Here standeth William of Deloraine,
 Good knight and true, of noble strain,
 Who sayeth, that foul treason's stain,
 Since he bore arms, ne'er soiled his coat;
 And that, so help him God above!
 He will on Musgrave's body prove,
 He lies most foully in his throat."

Lord Dacre.

" Forward, brave champions, to the fight!
 Sound trumpets!"—

Lord Home.

—" God defend the right!"—
 Then, Teviot! how thine echoes rang,
 When bugle-sound and trumpet-clang
 Let loose the martial foes,

And in mid list, with shield poised high,
And measured step and wary eye,
The combatants did close.

XXI.

Ill would it suit your gentle ear,
Ye lovely listeners, to hear
How to the axe the helms did sound,
And blood poured down from many a wound ;
For desperate was the strife and long,
And either warrior fierce and strong.
But, were each dame a listening knight,
I well could tell how warriors fight !
For I have seen war's lightning flashing,
Seen the claymore with bayonet clashing,
Seen through red blood the war-horse dashing,
And scorned, amid the reeling strife,
To yield a step for death or life.—

XXII.

'Tis done, 'tis done ! that fatal blow
Has stretched him on the bloody plain ;
He strives to rise—Brave Musgrave, no !
Thence never shalt thou rise again !
He chokes in blood—some friendly hand
Undo the visor's barrèd band,
Unfix the gorget's iron clasp,
And give him room for life to gasp !—
O, bootless aid !—haste, holy Friar,
Haste, ere the sinner shall expire !
Of all his guilt let him be shriven,
And smooth his path from earth to heaven !

XXIII.

In haste the holy Friar sped ;—
His naked foot was dyed with red,
As through the lists he ran ;
Unmindful of the shouts on high,
That hailed the conqueror's victory,
He raised the dying man ;

Loose waved his silver beard and hair,
 As o'er him he kneeled down in prayer;
 And still the crucifix on high
 He holds before his darkening eye;
 And still he bends an anxious ear,
 His faltering penitence to hear;
 Still props him from the bloody sod,
 Still, even when soul and body part,
 Pours ghostly comfort on his heart,
 And bids him trust in God!
 Unheard he prays;—the death-pang's o'er!
 Richard of Musgrave breathes no more.

XXIV.

As if exhausted in the fight,
 Or musing o'er the piteous sight,
 The silent victor stands; plumèd
 His beaver did he not unclasp,
 Marked not the shouts, felt not the grasp
 Of gratulating hands.
 When, lo! strange cries of wild surprise,
 Mingled with seeming terror, rise
 Among the Scottish bands;
 And all, amid the thronged array,
 In panic haste gave open way
 To a half-naked, ghastly man,
 Who downward from the castle ran.
 He crossed the barriers at a bound,
 And wild and haggard looked around,
 As dizzy, and in pain;
 And all, upon the armèd ground,
 Knew William of Deloraine!
 Each ladye sprung from seat with speed;
 Vaulted each marshal from his steed;
 "And who art thou," they cried,
 "Who hast this battle fought and won?"
 His plumèd helm was soon undone—
 "Cranstoun of Teviot-side!
 For this fair prize I've fought and won,"—
 And to the Ladye led her son.

XXV.

Full oft the rescued boy she kissed,
And often pressed him to her breast ;
For, under all her dauntless show,
Her heart had throbb'd at every blow :
Yet not Lord Cranstoun deign'd she greet,
Though low he kneelèd at her feet.
Me lists not tell what words were made,
What Douglas, Home, and Howard said—

For Howard was a generous foe—
And how the clan united pray'd,
The Ladye would the feud forego,
And deign to bless the nuptial hour
Of Cranstoun's Lord and Teviot's Flower.

XXVI.

She looked to river, looked to hill,
Thought on the Spirit's prophecy,
Then broke her silence stern and still,—
“Not you, but Fate, has vanquished me :
Their influence kindly stars may shower
On Teviot's tide and Branksome's tower,

For pride is quelled, and love is free.”—
She took fair Margaret by the hand,
Who, breathless, trembling, scarce might stand ;
That hand to Cranstoun's Lord gave she :—

“As I am true to thee and thine,
Do thou be true to me and mine !

This clasp of love our bond shall be ,
For this is your betrothing day,
And all these noble lords shall stay,
To grace it with their company.”

XXVII.

All as they left the listed plain,
Much of the story she did gain :
How Cranstoun fought with Deloraine,
And of his Page, and of the Book
Which from the wounded knight he took ;

And how he sought her castle high,
 That morn, by help of gramarye ;
 How, in Sir William's armour dight,
 Stolen by his Page while slept the knight,
 He took on him the single fight.
 But half his tale he left unsaid,
 And lingered till he joined the maid.—
 Cared not the Ladye to betray
 Her mystic arts in view of day ;
 But well she thought, ere midnight came,
 Of that strange Page the pride to tame,
 From his foul hands the Book to save,
 And send it back to Michael's grave.—
 Needs not to tell each tender word
 'Twixt Margaret and 'twixt Cranstoun's Lord ;
 Nor how she told of former woes,
 And how her bosom fell and rose,
 While he and Musgrave bandied blows.—
 Needs not these lovers' joys to tell ;
 One day, fair maids, you'll know them well.

XXVIII.

William of Deloraine, some chance
 Had wakened from his deathlike trance ;
 And taught that, in the listed plain,
 Another, in his arms and shield,
 Against fierce Musgrave axe did wield,
 Under the name of Deloraine.
 Hence, to the field, unarmed, he ran,
 And hence his presence scared the clan,
 Who held him for some fleeting wraith,*
 And not a man of blood and breath.
 Not much this new ally he loved,
 Yet, when he saw what hap had proved,
 He greeted him right heartilie :
 He would not waken old debate,
 For he was void of rancorous hate,
 Though rude, and scant of courtesy ;

* The spectral apparition of a living person.

In raids he spilt but seldom blood,
 Unless when men-at-arms withstood,
 Or as was meet for deadly feud.
 He ne'er bore grudge for stalwart blow,
 Ta'en in fair fight from gallant foe :
 And so 'twas seen of him, e'en now,
 When on dead Musgrave he looked down,
 Grief darkened on his rugged brow,
 Though half disguisèd with a frown ;
 And thus, while sorrow bent his head,
 His foeman's epitaph he made :—

XXIX.

“ Now, Richard Musgrave, liest thou here !
 I ween, my deadly enemy ;
 For, if I slew thy brother dear,
 Thou slew'st a sister's son to me ;
 And when I lay in dungeon dark
 Of Naworth Castle, long months three,
 Till ransomed for a thousand mark,
 Dark Musgrave, it was long of thee.
 And, Musgrave, could our fight be tried,
 And thou wert now alive as I,
 No mortal man should us divide,
 Till one, or both of us, did die.
 Yet rest thee God ! for well I know
 I ne'er shall find a nobler foe.
 In all the northern counties here,
 Whose word is Snaffle, spur, and spear,*
 Thou wert the best to follow gear !
 'Twas pleasure, as we looked behind,
 To see how thou the chase couldst wind,
 Cheer the dark bloodhound on his way, †
 And with the bugle rouse the fray !
 I'd give the lands of Deloraine,
 Dark Musgrave were alive again.”

* The lands, that over Ouse to Berwick forth do bear,
 Have for their blazon had, the snaffle, spur, and spear.

Poly-Albion, Song xiii.

† See Note 52.

XXX.

So mourned he, till Lord Dacre's band
Were bowning back to Cumberland.
They raised brave Musgrave from the field,
And laid him on his bloody shield ;
On levelled lances, four and four,
By turns, the noble burden bore.
Before, at times, upon the gale,
Was heard the Minstrel's plaintive wail ;
Behind, four priests, in sable stole,
Sung requiem for the warrior's soul ;
Around, the horsemen slowly rode,
With trailing pikes the spearmen trode :
And thus the gallant knight they bore,
Through Liddesdale, to Leven's shore ;
Thence to Holme Coltrame's lofty nave,
And laid him in his father's grave.

THE harp's wild notes, though hushed the song,
The mimic march of death prolong :
Now seems it far, and now a-near,
Now meets, and now eludes the ear ;
Now seems some mountain side to sweep,
Now faintly dies in valley deep ;
Seems now as if the Minstrel's wail,
Now the sad requiem, loads the gale ;
Last, o'er the warrior's closing grave,
Rung the full choir in choral stave.

After due pause, they bade him tell,
Why he, who touched the harp so well,
Should thus, with ill-rewarded toil,
Wander a poor and thankless soil,
When the more generous Southern Land
Would well requite his skilful hand.

The Aged Harper, howsoe'er
His only friend, his harp, was dear,
Liked not to hear it ranked so high
Above his flowing poesy ;

Less liked he still, that scornful jeer
Misprized the land he loved so dear ;
High was the sound, as thus again
The Bard resumed his minstrel strain.

CANTO SIXTH.

I.

BREATHES there the man, with soul so dead,
Who never to himself hath said,

 This is my own, my native land !
Whose heart hath ne'er within him burned,
As home his footsteps he hath turned

 From wandering on a foreign strand !
If such there be, go, mark him well ;
For him no Minstrel raptures swell ;
High though his titles, proud his name,
Boundless his wealth as wish can claim ;
Despite those titles, power, and pelf,
The wretch, concentrated all in self,
Living, shall forfeit fair renown,
And doubly dying, shall go down
To the vile dust, from whence he sprung,
Unwept, unhonoured, and unsung.

II.

O Caledonia ! stern and wild,
Meet nurse for a poetic child !
Land of brown heath and shaggy wood,
Land of the mountain and the flood,
Land of my sires ! what mortal hand
Can e'er untie the filial band,
That knits me to thy rugged strand !
Still, as I view each well-known scene,
Think what is now and what hath been,
Seems as, to me, of all bereft,
Sole friends thy woods and streams were left ;

And thus I love them better still,
Even in extremity of ill;
By Yarrow's streams still let me stray,
Though none should guide my feeble way ;
Still feel the breeze down Ettrick break,
Although it chill my withered cheek ;
Still lay my head by Teviot Stone,
Though there, forgotten and alone,
The Bard may draw his parting groan.

III.

Not scorned like me ! to Branksome Hall
The Minstrels came, at festive call ;
Trooping they came, from near and far,
The jovial priests of mirth and war ;
Alike for feast and fight prepared,
Battle and banquet both they shared.
Of late, before each martial clan,
They blew their death-note in the van,
But now, for every merry mate,
Rose the portcullis' iron grate ;
They sound the pipe, they strike the string,
They dance, they revel, and they sing,
Till the rude turrets shake and ring.

IV.

Me lists not at this tide declare
The splendour of the spousal rite,
How mustered in the chapel fair
Both maid and matron, squire and knight ;
Me lists not tell of owches rare,
Of mantles green, and braided hair,
And kirtles furred with miniver ;
What plumage waved the altar round,
How spurs and ringing chainlets sound :
And hard it were for bard to speak
The changeful hue of Margaret's cheek ;
That lovely hue which comes and flies,
As awe and shame alternate rise !

V. Alzred unscathed

Some bards have sung, the Ladye high
Chapel or altar came not nigh ;
Nor durst the rites of spousal grace,
So much she feared each holy place.
False slanders these :—I trust right well
She wrought not by forbidden spell : *
For mighty words and signs have power
O'er sprites in planetary hour :
Yet scarce I praise their venturous part,
Who tamper with such dangerous art.

But this for faithful truth I say,
The Ladye by the altar stood ;
Of sable velvet her array,
And on her head a crimson hood,
With pearls embroidered and entwined,
Guarded with gold, with ermine lined ;
A merlin sat upon her wrist,
Held by a leash of silken twist. †

VI.

The spousal rites were ended soon.
'Twas now the merry hour of noon,
And in the lofty arch'd hall
Was spread the gorgeous festival.
Steward and squire, with heedful haste,
Marshall'd the rank of every guest ;
Pages, with ready blade, were there,
The mighty meal to carve and share :
O'er capon, heron-shew, and crane,
And princely peacock's gilded train,
And o'er the boar-head, garnished brave, ‡
And cygnet from St. Mary's wave ;
O'er ptarmigan and venison,
The priest had spoke his benison.
Then rose the riot and the din,
Above, beneath, without, within !
For, from the lofty balcony,
Rung trumpet, shalm, and psaltery :

* See Note 53.

† See Note 54.

‡ See Note 55.

Their clanging bowls old warriors quaffed,
 Loudly they spoke, and loudly laughed ;
 Whispered young knights, in tone more mild,
 To ladies fair ; and ladies smiled.
 The hooded hawks, high perched on beam,
 The clamour joined with whistling scream,
 And flapped their wings, and shook their bells,
 In concert with the staghounds' yells.
 Round go the flasks of ruddy wine,
 From Bourdeaux, Orleans, or the Rhine ;
 Their tasks the busy sewers ply,
 And all is mirth and revelry.

VII.

The Goblin-Page, omitting still
 No opportunity of ill,
 Strove now, while blood ran hot and high,
 To rouse debate and jealousy ;
 Till Conrad, Lord of Wolfenstein,
 By nature fierce, and warm with wine,
 And now in humour highly crossed,
 About some steeds his band had lost,
 High words to words succeeding still,
 Smote, with his gauntlet, stout Hunthill ; *
 A hot and hardy Rutherford,
 Whom men call Dickon Draw-the-sword.
 He took it on the Page's saye,
 Hunthill had driven these steeds away.
 Then Howard, Home, and Douglas rose,
 The kindling discord to compose :
 Stern Rutherford right little said,
 But bit his glove, † and shook his head.—
 A fortnight thence, in Inglewood,
 Stout Conrad, cold, and drenched in blood,
 His bosom gored with many a wound,
 Was by a woodman's lyme-dog found :
 Unknown the manner of his death,
 Gone was his brand, both sword and sheath ;
 But ever from that time, 'twas said,
 That Dickon wore a Cologne blade.

* See Note 56. † See Note 57.

VIII.

The Dwarf, who feared his master's eye
Might his foul treachery espie,
Now sought the castle buttery,
Where many a yeoman, bold and free,
Revelled as merrily and well
As those that sat in lordly selle.
Watt Tinlinn there did frankly raise
The pledge to Arthur Fire-the-Braes;
And he, as by his breeding bound,
To Howard's merry-men sent it round.
To quit them, on the English side,
Red Roland Forster loudly cried,
"A deep carouse to yon fair bride!"—
At every pledge, from vat and pail,
Foamed forth in floods the nut-brown ale;
While shout the riders every one:
Such day of mirth ne'er cheered their clan,
Since old Buccleuch the name did gain,
When in the cleuch the buck was ta'en.

IX.

The wily Page, with vengeful thought,
Remembered him of Tinlinn's yew,
And swore it should be dearly bought,
That ever he the arrow drew.
First, he the yeoman did molest
With bitter gibe and taunting jest—
Told how he fled at Solway strife,
And how Hob Armstrong cheered his wife.
Then, shunning still his powerful arm,
At unawares he wrought him harm:
From trencher stole his choicest cheer,
Dashed from his lips his can of beer;
Then, to his knee sly creeping on,
With bodkin pierced him to the bone;
The venom'd wound, and festering joint,
Long after rued that bodkin's point.

The startled yeoman swore and spurned,
And board and flagons overturned.
Riot and clamour wild began ;
Back to the hall the Urchin ran ;
Took in a darkling nook his post,
And grinned, and muttered, "Lost ! lost ! lost !"

X.

By this, the Dame, lest further fray
Should mar the concord of the day,
Had bid the Minstrels tune their lay.
And first stept forth old Albert Græme,
The Minstrel of that ancient name : *
Was none who struck the harp so well,
Within the Land Debatable.
Well friended too, his hardy kin,
Whoever lost, were sure to win ;
They sought the beeves that made their broth,
In Scotland and in England both.
In homely guise, as nature bade,
His simple song the Borderer said.

XI.

Albert Græme.

It was an English ladye bright
(The sun shines fair on Carlisle wall),
And she would marry a Scottish knight,
For Love will still be lord of all.

Blithely they saw the rising sun,
When he shone fair on Carlisle wall ;
But they were sad ere day was done,
Though Love was still the lord of all.

Her sire gave brooch and jewel fine,
Where the sun shines fair on Carlisle wall ;
Her brother gave but a flask of wine,
For ire that Love was lord of all.

[* See Note 58.

For she had lands, both meadow and lea,
Where the sun shines fair on Carlisle wall,
And he swore her death, ere he would see
A Scottish knight the lord of all !

XII.

That wine she had not tasted well
(The sun shines fair on Carlisle wall),
When dead, in her true love's arms, she fell,
For Love was still the lord of all !

He pierced her brother to the heart,
Where the sun shines fair on Carlisle wall :—
So perish all would true love part,
That Love may still be lord of all !

And then he took the Cross divine
(Where the sun shines fair on Carlisle wall),
And died for her sake in Palestine,
So Love was still the lord of all !

Now all ye lovers, that faithful prove
(The sun shines fair on Carlisle wall),
Pray for their souls who died for love,
For Love shall still be lord of all !

XIII.

As ended Albert's simple lay,
Arose a bard of loftier port ;
For sonnet, rhyme, and roundelay,
Renowned in haughty Henry's court :
There rung thy harp, unrivalled long,
Fitztraver of the silver song !
The gentle Surrey loved his lyre—
Who has not heard of Surrey's fame ? *
His was the hero's soul of fire,
And his the bard's immortal name,
And his was love, exalted high
By all the glow of chivalry.

* See Note 59.

XIV.

They sought, together, climes afar,
And oft, within some olive grove,
When even came with twinkling star,
They sung of Surrey's absent love.
His step the Italian peasant stayed,
And deemed that spirits from on high,
Round where some hermit saint was laid,
Were breathing heavenly melody ;
So sweet did harp and voice combine,
To praise the name of Geraldine.

XV.

Fitztraver ! O what tongue may say
The pangs thy faithful bosom knew,
When Surrey, of the deathless lay,
Ungrateful Tudor's sentence slew ?
Regardless of the tyrant's frown,
His harp called wrath and vengeance down.
He left, for Naworth's iron towers,
Windsor's green glades and courtly bowers,
And, faithful to his patron's name,
With Howard still Fitztraver came ;
Lord William's foremost favourite he,
And chief of all his minstrelsy.

XVI.

Fitztraver.

'Twas All-souls' eve, and Surrey's heart beat high ;
He heard the midnight bell with anxious start,
Which told the mystic hour, approaching nigh,
When wise Cornelius promised, by his art,
To show to him the ladye of his heart,
Albeit betwixt them roared the ocean grim ;
Yet so the sage had hight to play his part,
That he should see her form in life and limb,
And mark, if still she loved, and still she thought of him.

XVII.

Dark was the vaulted room of gramarye,
To which the wizard led the gallant Knight,
Save that before a mirror, huge and high,
A hallowed taper shed a glimmering light
On mystic implements of magic might ;
On cross, and character, and talisman,
And almagest, and altar, nothing bright :
For fitful was the lustre, pale and wan,
As watchlight by the bed of some departing man.

XVIII.

But soon, within that mirror huge and high,
Was seen a self-emitted light to gleam ;
And forms upon its breast the Earl 'gan spy,
Cloudy and indistinct, as feverish dream ;
Till, slow arranging, and defined, they seem
To form a lordly and a lofty room,
Part lighted by a lamp with silver beam,
Placed by a couch of Agra's silken loom,
And part by moonshine pale, and part was hid in gloom.

XIX.

Fair all the pageant—but how passing fair
The slender form, which lay on couch of Ind !
O'er her white bosom strayed her hazel hair,
Pale her dear cheek, as if for love she pined ;
All in her night-robe loose she lay reclined,
And, pensive, read from tablet eburnine
Some strain, that seemed her inmost soul to find ;—
That favoured strain was Surrey's raptured line,
That fair and lovely form, the Lady Geraldine !

XX. THE MOUNTAIN

Slow rolled the clouds upon the lovely form,
And swept the goodly vision all away ;
So royal envy rolled the murky storm
O'er my beloved Master's glorious day.
Thou jealous, ruthless tyrant ! Heaven repay
On thee, and on thy children's latest line,

The wild caprice of thy despotic sway,
 The gory bridal bed, the plundered shrine,
 The murdered Surrey's blood, the tears of Geraldine !

XXI.

Both Scots and Southern chiefs prolong
 Applauses of Fitztraver's song :
 These hated Henry's name as death,
 And those still held the ancient faith.—
 Then, from his seat, with lofty air,
 Rose Harold, bard of brave St. Clair ;
 St. Clair, who, feasting high at Home,
 Had with that lord to battle come.
 Harold was born where restless seas
 Howl round the storm-swept Orcades ;
 Where erst St. Clairs held princely sway *
 O'er isle and islet, strait and bay ;—
 Still nods their palace to its fall,
 Thy pride and sorrow, fair Kirkwall !—†
 Thence oft he marked fierce Pentland rave,
 As if grim Odin rode her wave ;
 And watched, the whilst, with visage pale,
 And throbbing heart, the struggling sail ;
 For all of wonderful and wild
 Had rapture for the lonely child.

XXII.

And much of wild and wonderful
 In these rude isles might fancy cull ;
 For thither came, in times afar,
 Stern Lochlin's sons of roving war,
 The Norsemen, trained to spoil and blood,
 Skilled to prepare the raven's food,
 Kings of the main their leaders brave,
 Their barks the dragons of the wave.‡
 And there, in many a stormy vale,
 The Scald had told his wondrous tale ;
 And many a Runic column high
 Had witnessed grim idolatry.

* See Note 60.

† See Note 61.

‡ See Note 62.

And thus had Harold, in his youth,
Learned many a Saga's rhyme uncouth,—
Of that Sea-Snake, tremendous curled,*
Whose monstrous circle girds the world;
Of those dread Maids, whose hideous yell †
Maddens the battle's bloody swell;
Of Chiefs, who, guided through the gloom
By the pale death-lights of the tomb,
Ransacked the graves of warriors old,
Their falchions wrenched from corpses' hold, ‡
Waked the deaf tomb with war's alarms,
And bade the dead arise to arms!
With war and wonder all on flame,
To Roslin's bowers young Harold came,
Where, by sweet glen and greenwood tree,
He learned a milder minstrelsy;
Yet something of the Northern spell
Mixed with the softer numbers well.

XXIII.

Harold.

O listen, listen, ladies gay!
No haughty feat of arms I tell;
Soft is the note, and sad the lay,
That mourns the lovely Rosabelle.§

“Moor, moor the barge, ye gallant crew!
And, gentle ladye, deign to stay!
Rest thee in Castle Ravensheuch, ||
Nor tempt the stormy firth to-day.

“The blackening wave is edged with white;
To inch and rock the sea-mews fly;
The fishers have heard the Water Sprite,
Whose screams forebode that wreck is nigh.

“Last night the gifted Seer did view
A wet shroud swathed round ladye gay;
Then stay thee, Fair, in Ravensheuch:
Why cross the gloomy firth to-day?”—

* Note 63. † Note 64. ‡ Note 65. § Note 66. || Note 67.

"'Tis not because Lord Lindesay's heir
To-night at Roslin leads the ball,
But that my ladye-mother there
Sits lonely in her castle-hall.

"'Tis not because the ring they ride,
And Lindesay at the ring rides well,
But that my sire the wine will chide,
If 'tis not filled by Rosabelle."—

O'er Roslin all that dreary night
A wondrous blaze was seen to gleam ;
'Twas broader than the watch-fire's light,
And redder than the bright moonbeam.

It glared on Roslin's castled rock,
It ruddied all the copsewood glen ;
'Twas seen from Dryden's groves of oak,
And seen from caverned Hawthornden.

Seemed all on fire that chapel proud,*
Where Roslin's chiefs uncoffined lie ;
Each Baron, for a sable shroud,
Sheathed in his iron panoply.

Seemed all on fire within, around,
Deep sacristy and altar's pale,
Shone every pillar foliage-bound,
And glimmered all the dead men's mail.

Blazed battlement and pinnet high,
Blazed every rose-carved buttress fair—
So still they blaze, when fate is nigh
The lordly line of high St. Clair.

There are twenty of Roslin's barons bold
Lie buried within that proud chapelle ;
Each one the holy vault doth hold—
But the sea holds lovely Rosabelle !

* See Note 68.

And each St. Clair was buried there,
With candle, with book, and with knell ;
But the sea-caves rung, and the wild winds sung,
The dirge of lowly Rosabelle.

XXIV.

So sweet was Harold's piteous lay,
Scarce marked the guests the darkened hall,
Though, long before the sinking day,
A wondrous shade involved them all :
It was not eddying mist or fog,
Drained by the sun from fen or bog ;
Of no eclipse had sages told ;
And yet, as it came on apace,
Each one could scarce his neighbour's face,
Could scarce his own stretched hand behold.
A secret horror checked the feast,
And chilled the soul of every guest ;
Even the high Dame stood half aghast,
She knew some evil on the blast ;
The elvish Page fell to the ground,
And, shuddering, muttered, "Found ! found !
found !"

XXV.

Then sudden, through the darkened air,
A flash of lightning came ;
So broad, so bright, so red the glare,
The castle seemed on flame.
Glanced every rafter of the hall,
Glanced every shield upon the wall ;
Each trophied beam, each sculptured stone,
Were instant seen, and instant gone ;
Full through the guests' bedazzled band
Resistless flashed the levin-brand,
And filled the hall with smouldering smoke,
As on the elvish Page it broke.
It broke, with thunder long and loud,
Dismayed the brave, appalled the proud,—
From sea to sea the larum rung ;

On Berwick wall, and at Carlisle withal,
 To arms the startled warders sprung.
 When ended was the dreadful roar,
 The elvish Dwarf was seen no more !

XXVI.

Some heard a voice in Branksome Hall,
 Some saw a sight, not seen by all ;
 That dreadful voice was heard by some,
 Cry, with loud summons, "GYLBIN, COME !"
 And on the spot where burst the brand,
 Just where the Page had flung him down,
 Some saw an arm, and some a hand,
 And some the waving of a gown.
 The guests in silence prayed, and shook,
 And terror dimmed each lofty look.
 But none of all the astonished train
 Was so dismayed as Deloraine.
 His blood did freeze, his brain did burn,
 'Twas feared his mind would ne'er return ;
 For he was speechless, ghastly, wan,
 Like him, of whom the story ran,
 Who spoke the spectre-hound in Man.*
 At length, by fits, he darkly told,
 With broken hint and shuddering cold—
 That he had seen, right certainly,
A shape with amice wrapped around,
With a wrought Spanish baldric bound,
Like pilgrim from beyond the sea ;
 And knew—but how it mattered not—
 It was the wizard, Michael Scott.

XXVII.

The anxious crowd, with horror pale,
 All trembling, heard the wondrous tale.
 No sound was made, no word was spoke,
 Till noble Angus silence broke ;
 And he a solemn sacred plight

* The Isle of Man. See Note 69.

Did to St. Bride of Douglas make,*
That he a pilgrimage would take
To Melrose Abbey, for the sake
Of Michael's restless sprite.
Then each, to ease his troubled breast,
To some bless'd saint his prayers addressed ;
Some to St. Modan made their vows,
Some to St. Mary of the Lowes,
Some to the Holy Rood of Lisle,
Some to our Ladye of the Isle ;
Each did his patron witness make
That he such pilgrimage would take,
And monks should sing, and bells should toll,
All for the weal of Michael's soul.
While vows were ta'en, and prayers were prayed,
'Tis said the noble Dame, dismayed,
Renounced for aye dark magic's aid.

XXVIII.

Nought of the bridal will I tell,
Which after in short space befell ;
Nor how brave sons and daughters fair
Bless'd Teviot's Flower and Cranstoun's heir :
After such dreadful scene, 'twere vain
To wake the note of mirth again.

More meet it were to mark the day
Of penitence and prayer divine,
When pilgrim-chiefs, in sad array,
Sought Melrose' holy shrine.

XXIX.

With naked foot, and sackcloth vest,
And arms enfolded on his breast,
Did every pilgrim go ;
The standers-by might hear uneath,†
Footstep, or voice, or high-drawn breath,
Through all the lengthened row :
No lordly look, nor martial stride,
Gone was their glory, sunk their pride,

* See Note 70.

† Uneath, barely, scarcely.

Forgotten their renown;
 Silent and slow, like ghosts they glide
 To the high altar's hallowed side,
 And there they knelt them down.
 Above the suppliant chieftains wave
 The banners of departed brave;
 Beneath the lettered stones were laid
 The ashes of their fathers dead;
 From many a garnished niche around
 Stern saints and tortured martyrs frowned.

XXX.

And slow up the dim aisle afar,
 With sable cowl and scapular,
 And snow-white stoles, in order due,
 The holy fathers, two and two,
 In long procession came;
 Taper, and Host, and book they bare,
 And holy banner, flourished fair
 With the Redeemer's name.
 Above the prostrate pilgrim band
 The mitred Abbot stretched his hand,
 And blessed them as they kneeled;
 With holy cross he signed them all,
 And prayed they might be sage in hall
 And fortunate in field:
 Then mass was sung, and prayers were said,
 And solemn requiem for the dead;
 And bells tolled out their mighty peal
 For the departed spirit's weal;
 And ever in the office close
 The hymn of intercession rose;
 And far the echoing aisles prolong
 The awful burthen of the song,—
 DIES IRÆ, DIES ILLA,
 SOLVET SÆCLUM IN FAVILLA;
 While the pealing organ rung.
 Were it meet with sacred strain
 To close my lay so light and vain,
 Thus the holy fathers sung:—

XXXI.

Hymn for the Dead.

That day of wrath, that dreadful day,
When heaven and earth shall pass away,
What power shall be the sinner's stay?
How shall he meet that dreadful day?

When, shrivelling like a parchèd scroll,
The flaming heavens together roll;
When louder yet, and yet more dread,
Swells the high trump that wakes the dead,—

Oh! on that day, that wrathful day,
When man to judgment wakes from clay,
Be THOU the trembling sinner's stay,
Though heaven and earth shall pass away!

HUSHED is the harp—the Minstrel gone.
And did he wander forth alone?
Alone, in indigence and age,
To linger out his pilgrimage?
No:—close beneath proud Newark's tower
Arose the Minstrel's lowly bower—
A simple hut; but there was seen
The little garden hedged with green,
The cheerful hearth, and lattice clean.
There sheltered wanderers by the blaze,
Oft heard the tale of other days;
For much he loved to ope his door,
And give the aid he begged before.
So passed the winter's day; but still,
When summer smiled on sweet Bowhill,
And July's eve, with balmy breath,
Waved the blue-bells on Newark heath;
When throstles sung in Harehead-shaw,
And corn was green on Carterhaugh,
And flourished, broad, Blackandro's oak,
The aged Harper's soul awoke!

Then would he sing achievements high,
And circumstance of chivalry,
Till the rapt traveller would stay,
Forgetful of the closing day ;
And noble youths, the strain to hear,
Forsook the hunting of the deer ;
And Yarrow, as he rolled along,
Bore burden to the Minstrel's song.

A TALE OF FLODDEN FIELD.

A POEM

IN SIX CANTOS.

“Alas! that Scottish Maid should sing
The combat where her lover fell!
That Scottish Bard should wake the string,
The triumph of our foes to tell!”

LEYDEN.

TO
THE RIGHT HONOURABLE
HENRY, LORD MONTAGU,
ETC., ETC., ETC.,

THIS ROMANCE IS INSCRIBED BY THE AUTHOR.

ADVERTISEMENT TO THE FIRST EDITION, 1808.

It is hardly to be expected that an Author, whom the Public have honoured with some degree of applause, should not be again a trespasser on their kindness. Yet the Author of MARMION must be supposed to feel some anxiety concerning its success, since he is sensible that he hazards, by this second intrusion, any reputation which his first Poem may have procured him. The present story turns upon the private adventures of a fictitious character; but is called a Tale of Flodden Field, because the hero's fate is connected with that memorable defeat, and the causes which led to it. The design of the Author was, if possible, to apprise his readers, at the outset, of the date of his Story, and to prepare them for the manners of the Age in which it is laid. Any Historical Narrative, far more an attempt at Epic composition, exceeded his plan of a Romantic Tale; yet he may be permitted to hope, from the popularity of THE LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL, that an attempt to paint the manners of the feudal times, upon a broader scale, and in the course of a more interesting story, will not be unacceptable to the Public.

The Poem opens about the commencement of August, and concludes with the defeat of Flodden, 9th September 1513.

MARMION.

INTRODUCTION TO CANTO FIRST.

TO WILLIAM STEWART ROSE, ESQ.*

Ashiestiel, Ettrick Forest.

NOVEMBER'S sky is chill and drear,
November's leaf is red and sear :
Late, gazing down the steepy linn,
That hems our little garden in,
Low in its dark and narrow glen,
You scarce the rivulet might ken,
So thick the tangled greenwood grew,
So feeble trilled the streamlet through :
Now murmuring hoarse, and frequent seen
Through bush and brier, no longer green,
An angry brook, it sweeps the glade,
Brawls over rock and wild cascade,
And, foaming brown with doubled speed,
Hurries its waters to the Tweed.

No longer Autumn's glowing red
Upon our Forest hills is shed ;
No more, beneath the evening beam,
Fair Tweed reflects their purple gleam ;
Away hath passed the heather-bell,
That bloomed so rich on Needpath-fell ;
Sallow his brow, and russet bare
Are now the sister-heights of Yair.

* For the origin and progress of Scott's acquaintance with Mr. Rose, see Life. Part of Marmion was composed at Mr. Rose's seat in the New Forest.

The sheep, before the pinching heaven,
To sheltered dale and down are driven,
Where yet some faded herbage pines,
And yet a watery sunbeam shines :
In meek despondency they eye
The withered sward and wintry sky,
And far beneath their summer hill,
Stray sadly by Glenkinnon's rill.
The shepherd shifts his mantle's fold,
And wraps him closer from the cold ;
His dogs no merry circles wheel,
But, shivering, follow at his heel ;
A cowering glance they often cast,
As deeper moans the gathering blast.

My imps, though hardy, bold, and wild,
As best befits the mountain child,
Feel the sad influence of the hour,
And wail the daisy's vanished flower ;
Their summer gambols tell, and mourn,
And anxious ask, Will spring return,
And birds and lambs again be gay,
And blossoms clothe the hawthorn spray ?

Yes, prattlers, yes. The daisy's flower
Again shall paint your summer bower ;
Again the hawthorn shall supply
The garlands you delight to tie ;
The lambs upon the lea shall bound,
The wild birds carol to the round,
And while you frolic light as they,
Too short shall seem the summer day.

To mute and to material things
New life revolving summer brings ;
The genial call dead Nature hears,
And in her glory reappears.
But oh ! my country's wintry state
What second spring shall renovate ?
What powerful call shall bid arise
The buried warlike and the wise ;

The mind that thought for Britain's weal,
The hand that grasped the victor steel?
The vernal sun new life bestows
Even on the meanest flower that blows;
But vainly, vainly, may he shine,
Where Glory weeps o'er NELSON's shrine,
And vainly pierce the solemn gloom
That shrouds, O PITT, thy hallowed tomb!

Deep graved in every British heart,
O never let those names depart!
Say to your sons, Lo, here his grave,
Who victor died on Gadite wave.*
To him, as to the burning levin,
Short, bright, resistless course was given;
Where'er his country's foes were found,
Was heard the fated thunder's sound,
Till burst the bolt on yonder shore,
Rolled, blazed, destroyed,—and was no more.

Nor mourn ye less his perished worth,
Who bade the conqueror go forth,
And launched that thunderbolt of war
On Egypt, Hafnia,† Trafalgar;
Who, born to guide such high emprise,
For Britain's weal was early wise;
Alas! to whom the Almighty gave,
For Britain's sins, an early grave!
His worth, who, in his mightiest hour,
A bauble held the pride of power,
Spurned at the sordid lust of pelf,
And served his Albion for herself;
Who, when the frantic crowd amain
Strained at subjection's bursting rein,
O'er their wild mood full conquest gained,
The pride, he would not crush, restrained,
Showed their fierce zeal a worthier cause,
And brought the freeman's arm to aid the freeman's laws.

† Copenhagen.

Hadst thou but lived, though stripped of power,
 A watchman on the lonely tower,
 Thy thrilling trump had roused the land
 When fraud or danger were at hand ;
 By thee, as by the beacon-light,
 Our pilots had kept course aright ;
 As some proud column, though alone,
 Thy strength had propped the tottering throne.
 Now is the stately column broke,
 The beacon-light is quenched in smoke,
 The trumpet's silver sound is still,
 The warder silent on the hill !

Oh, think, how to his latest day,
 When Death, just hovering, claimed his prey,
 With Palinure's unaltered mood,
 Firm at his dangerous post he stood !
 Each call for needful rest repelled,
 With dying hand the rudder held ;
 Till, in his fall, with fateful sway,
 The steerage of the realm gave way !
 Then, while on Britain's thousand plains
 One unpolluted church remains,
 Whose peaceful bells ne'er sent around
 The bloody tocsin's maddening sound,
 But still, upon the hallowed day,
 Convoke the swains to praise and pray ;
 While faith and civil peace are dear,
 Grace this cold marble with a tear,—
 He who preserved them, PITT, lies here !

Nor yet suppress the generous sigh,
 Because his rival slumbers nigh ;
 Nor be thy requiescat dumb,
 Lest it be said o'er Fox's tomb.
 For talents mourn, untimely lost,
 When best employed, and wanted most ;
 Mourn genius high, and lore profound,
 And wit that loved to play, not wound ;

And all the reasoning powers divine,
To penetrate, resolve, combine ;
And feelings keen, and fancy's glow,—
They sleep with him who sleeps below.
And if thou mourn'st they could not save
From error him who owns this grave,
Be every harsher thought suppressed,
And sacred be the last long rest.
Here, where the end of earthly things
Lays heroes, patriots, bards, and kings ;
Where stiff the hand, and still the tongue,
Of those who fought, and spoke, and sung ;
Here, where the fretted aisles prolong
The distant notes of holy song,
As if some angel spoke agen,
" All peace on earth, good-will to men ;"
If ever from an English heart,
O, here let prejudice depart,
And, partial feeling cast aside,
Record that Fox a Briton died !
When Europe crouched to France's yoke,
And Austria bent, and Prussia broke,
And the firm Russian's purpose brave
Was bartered by a timorous slave,
Even then dishonour's peace he spurned,
The sullied olive-branch returned,
Stood for his country's glory fast,
And nailed her colours to the mast !
Heaven, to reward his firmness, gave
A portion in this honoured grave ;
And ne'er held marble in its trust
Of two such wondrous men the dust.

With more than mortal powers endowed,
How high they soared above the crowd !
Theirs was no common party race,
Jostling by dark intrigue for place ;
Like fabled gods, their mighty war
Shook realms and nations in its jar ;

Beneath each banner proud to stand,
 Looked up the noblest of the land,
 Till through the British world were known
 The names of PITT and FOX alone.
 Spells of such force no wizard grave
 E'er framed in dark Thessalian cave,
 Though his could drain the ocean dry,
 And force the planets from the sky.
 These spells are spent, and, spent with these,
 The wine of life is on the lees.
 Genius, and taste, and talent gone,
 For ever tombed beneath the stone,
 Where—taming thought to human pride!—
 The mighty chiefs sleep side by side.
 Drop upon FOX's grave the tear,
 'Twill trickle to his rival's bier;
 O'er PITT's the mournful requiem sound,
 And FOX's shall the notes rebound.
 The solemn echo seems to cry,—
 "Here let their discord with them die.
 Speak not for those a separate doom,
 Whom Fate made brothers in the tomb;
 But search the land of living men,
 Where wilt thou find their like agen?"

Rest, ardent Spirits! till the cries
 Of dying Nature bid you rise;
 Not even your Britain's groans can pierce
 The leaden silence of your hearse:
 Then, O, how impotent and vain
 This grateful tributary strain!
 Though not unmarked from northern clime,
 Ye heard the Border Minstrel's rhyme:
 His Gothic harp has o'er you rung;
 The Bard you deigned to praise, your deathless names has sung.

Stay yet, illusion, stay a while,
 My wildered fancy still beguile!
 From this high theme how can I part,
 Ere half unloaded is my heart!

For all the tears e'er sorrow drew,
And all the raptures fancy knew,
And all the keener rush of blood,
That throbs through bard in bardlike mood,
Were here a tribute mean and low,
Though all their mingled streams could flow—
Woe, wonder, and sensation high,
In one spring-tide of ecstasy.—
It will not be—it may not last—
The vision of enchantment's past :
Like frostwork in the morning ray,
The fancied fabric melts away ;
Each Gothic arch, memorial stone,
And long, dim, lofty aisle, are gone,
And, lingering last, deception dear,
The choir's high sounds die on my ear.
Now slow return the lonely down,
The silent pastures bleak and brown,
The farm begirt with copsewood wild,
The gambols of each frolic child,
Mixing their shrill cries with the tone
Of Tweed's dark waters rushing on.

Prompt on unequal tasks to run,
Thus Nature disciplines her son :
Meeter, she says, for me to stray,
And waste the solitary day,
In plucking from yon fen the reed,
And watch it floating down the Tweed ;
Or idly list the shrilling lay
With which the milkmaid cheers her way,
Marking its cadence rise and fall,
As from the field, beneath her pail,
She trips it down the uneven dale :
Meeter for me, by yonder cairn,
The ancient shepherd's tale to learn ;
Though oft he stop in rustic fear
Lest his old legends tire the ear
Of one, who, in his simple mind,
May boast of book-learned taste refined.

But thou, my friend, canst fitly tell
 (For few have read romance so well)
 How still the legendary lay
 O'er poet's bosom holds its sway ;
 How on the ancient minstrel strain
 Time lays his palsied hand in vain ;
 And how our hearts at doughty deeds,
 By warriors wrought in steely weeds,
 Still throb for fear and pity's sake ;
 As when the Champion of the Lake
 Enters Morgana's fated house,
 Or in the Chapel Perilous,
 Despising spells and demons' force,
 Holds converse with the unburied corse ; *
 Or when, Dame Ganore's grace to move
 (Alas, that lawless was their love !)
 He sought proud Tarquin in his den,
 And freed full sixty knights ; or when,
 A sinful man, and unconfessed,
 He took the Sangreal's holy quest,
 And, slumbering, saw the vision high,
 He might not view with waking eye. †

The mightiest chiefs of British song
 Scorned not such legends to prolong :
 'They gleam through Spenser's elfin dream,
 And mix in Milton's heavenly theme ;
 And Dryden, in immortal strain,
 Had raised the Table Round again, ‡
 But that a ribald King and Court
 Bade him toil on, to make them sport ;
 Demanded for their niggard pay,
 Fit for their souls, a looser lay,
 Licentious satire, song, and play ;
 The world defrauded of the high design,
 Profaned the God-given strength, and marred
 the lofty line.

Warmed by such names, well may we then,
 Though dwindled sons of little men,

Essay to break a feeble lance
In the fair fields of old romance ;
Or seek the moated castle's cell,
Where long, through talisman and spell,
While tyrants ruled, and damsels wept,
Thy Genius, Chivalry, hath slept.
There sound the harpings of the North.
Till he awake and sally forth,
On venturous quest to prick again,
In all his arms, with all his train,
Shield, lance, and brand, and plume and scarf,
Fay, giant, dragon, squire, and dwarf,
And wizard with his wand of might,
And errant maid on palfrey white.
Around the Genius weave their spells,
Pure Love, who scarce his passion tells ;
Mystery, half-veiled and half-revealed ;
And Honour, with his spotless shield ;
Attention, with fixed eye ; and Fear,
That loves the tale she shrinks to hear ;
And gentle Courtesy ; and Faith,
Unchanged by sufferings, time, or death ;
And Valour, lion-mettled lord,
Leaning upon his own good sword.

Well has thy fair achievement shown,
A worthy meed may thus be won ;
Ytene's * oaks—beneath whose shade
Their theme the merry minstrels made,
Of Ascapart, and Bevis bold,†
And that Red King,‡ who, while of old,
Through Boldrewood the chase he led,
By his loved huntsman's arrow bled—
Ytene's oaks have heard again
Renewed such legendary strain ;
For thou hast sung how he of Gaul,
That Amadis so famed in hall,

For Oriana, foiled in fight
 The Necromancer's felon might ;
 And well in modern verse hast wove
 Partenopex's mystic love :
 Hear, then, attentive to my lay,
 A knightly tale of Albion's elder day.

CANTO FIRST.

THE CASTLE.

I.

DAY set on Norham's castled steep,
 And Tweed's fair river, broad and deep,
 And Cheviot's mountains lone : *
 The battled towers, the donjon keep, †
 The loophole grates where captives weep,
 The flanking walls that round it sweep,
 In yellow lustre shone.
 The warriors on the turrets high,
 Moving athwart the evening sky,
 Seemed forms of giant height :
 Their armour, as it caught the rays,
 Flashed back again the western blaze
 In lines of dazzling light.

II.

Saint George's banner, broad and gay,
 Now faded, as the fading ray
 Less bright, and less, was flung ;
 The evening gale had scarce the power
 To wave it on the Donjon Tower,
 So heavily it hung.
 The scouts had parted on their search,
 The Castle gates were barred ;
 Above the gloomy portal arch,
 Timing his footsteps to a march,
 The Warder kept his guard,

* See Note 5. † See Note 6.

Low humming, as he paced along,
Some ancient Border gathering-song.

III.

A distant trampling sound he hears ;
He looks abroad, and soon appears,
O'er Horncliff-hill, a plump * of spears,
 Beneath a pennon gay ;
A horseman, darting from the crowd
Like lightning from a summer cloud,
Spurs on his mettled courser proud,
 Before the dark array.
Beneath the sable palisade
That closed the Castle barricade
 His bugle-horn he blew ;
The Warder hasted from the wall,
And warned the Captain in the hall,
 For well the blast he knew ;
And joyfully that Knight did call,
To sewer, squire, and seneschal :—

IV.

“ Now broach ye a pipe of Malvoisie,
 Bring pasties of the doe,
And quickly make the entrance free,
And bid my heralds ready be,
And every minstrel sound his glee,
 And all our trumpets blow ;
And, from the platform, spare ye not
To fire a noble salvo-shot ;—
 Lord Marmion waits below ! ”
Then to the Castle's lower ward
 Sped forty yeomen tall,
The iron-studded gates unbarred,
Raised the portcullis' ponderous guard,
The lofty palisade unsparred,
 And let the drawbridge fall.

* This word properly applies to a flight of water-fowl, but is applied, by analogy, to a body of horse.

“ There is a Knight of the North Country,
Which leads a lusty plump of spears.”—Flodden Field.

V.

Along the bridge Lord Marmion rode,
 Proudly his red-roan charger trod.
 His helm hung at the saddlebow ;
 Well, by his visage, you might know
 He was a stalworth knight, and keen,
 And had in many a battle been ;
 The scar on his brown cheek revealed
 A token true of Bosworth field ;
 His eyebrow dark, and eye of fire,
 Showed spirit proud and prompt to ire ;
 Yet lines of thought upon his cheek,
 Did deep design and counsel speak.
 His forehead, by his casque worn bare,
 His thick moustache, and curly hair,
 Coal-black, and grizzled here and there,
 But more through toil than age ;
 His square-turned joints, and strength of limb,
 Showed him no carpet knight so trim,
 But in close fight a champion grim,
 In camps a leader sage.

VI.

Well was he armed from head to heel,
 In mail and plate of Milan steel ; *
 But his strong helm, of mighty cost,
 Was all with burnished gold embossed ;
 Amid the plumage of the crest,
 A falcon hovered on her nest,
 With wings outspread, and forward breast ;
 E'en such a falcon, on his shield,
 Soared sable in an azure field ;
 The golden legend bore aright,
 " WHO CHECKS AT ME, TO DEATH IS DIGHT." †
 Blue was the charger's broidered rein ;
 Blue ribbons decked his arching mane ;
 The knightly housing's ample fold
 Was velvet blue, and trapped with gold.

* See Note 7. † See Note 8.

VII.

Behind him rode two gallant squires,
Of noble name and knightly sires :
They burned the gilded spurs to claim ;
For well could each a war-horse tame,
Could draw the bow, the sword could sway,
And lightly bear the ring away ;
Nor less with courteous precepts stored,
Could dance in hall, and carve at board,
And frame love-ditties passing rare,
And sing them to a lady fair.

VIII.

Four men-at-arms came at their backs,
With halbert, bill, and battle-axe :
They bore Lord Marmion's lance so strong,
And led his sumpter-mules along,
And ambling palfrey, when at need
Him listed ease his battle-steed.
The last and trustiest of the four,
On high his forky pennon bore ;
Like swallow's tail, in shape and hue,
Fluttered the streamer glossy blue,
Where, blazoned sable, as before,
The towering falcon seemed to soar.
Last, twenty yeomen, two and two,
In hosen black and jerkins blue,
With falcons broidered on each breast,
Attended on their lord's behest.
Each, chosen for an archer good,
Knew hunting-craft by lake or wood ;
Each one a six-foot bow could bend,
And far a clothyard shaft could send ;
Each held a boar-spear tough and strong,
And at their belts their quivers rung.
Their dusty palfreys, and array,
Showed they had marched a weary way.

IX.

'Tis meet that I should tell you now
 How fairly armed, and ordered how,
 The soldiers of the guard,
 With musket, pike, and morion,
 To welcome noble Marmion,
 Stood in the Castle-yard;
 Minstrels and trumpeters were there,
 The gunner held his linstock yare,*
 For welcome-shot prepared;—
 Entered the train, and such a clang,
 As then through all his turrets rang,
 Old Norham never heard.

X.

The guards their morrice-pikes advanced,
 The trumpets flourished brave,
 The cannon from the ramparts glanced,
 And thundering welcome gave.
 A blithe salute, in martial sort,
 The minstrels well might sound,
 For, as Lord Marmion crossed the court,
 He scattered angels round.
 "Welcome to Norham, Marmion!
 Stout heart and open hand!
 Well dost thou brook thy gallant roan,
 Thou flower of English land!"

XI.

Two pursuivants, whom tabarts deck,
 With silver scutcheon round their neck,
 Stood on the steps of stone,
 By which you reach the donjon gate,
 And there, with herald pomp and state,
 They hailed Lord Marmion;
 They hailed him Lord of Fontenaye,
 Of Lutterward, and Scrivelbaye,
 Of Tamworth tower and town;†
 And he, their courtesy to requite,

* Yare, ready. † See Note 9.

Gave them a chain of twelve marks weight,
All as he lighted down.

“Now, largesse, largesse,* Lord Marmion,
Knight of the crest of gold!
A blazoned shield, in battle won,
Ne’er guarded heart so bold.”—

XII.

They marshalled him to the Castle-hall,
Where the guests stood all aside,
And loudly flourished the trumpet-call,
And the heralds loudly cried,—
“Room, lordings, room for Lord Marmion,
With the crest and helm of gold!
Full well we know the trophies won
In the lists at Cottiswold:
There, vainly, Ralph de Wilton strove
’Gainst Marmion’s force to stand;
To him he lost his lady-love,
And to the King his land.
Ourselves beheld the listed field,
A sight both sad and fair:
We saw Lord Marmion pierce his shield,
And saw his saddle bare;
We saw the victor win the crest
He wears with worthy pride;
And on the gibbet-tree, reversed,
His foeman’s scutcheon tied.
Place, nobles, for the Falcon-Knight!
Room, room, ye gentles gay,
For him who conquered in the right,
Marmion of Fontenaye!”—

XIII.

Then stepped to meet that noble Lord
Sir Hugh the Heron bold,

* The cry by which heralds and pursuivants expressed their thanks for the bounty of the nobles. The heralds, like the minstrels, were allowed to have great claims upon the liberality of the knights, of whose feats they kept a record, and proclaimed them aloud upon suitable occasions.

Baron of Twisell, and of Ford,
 And Captain of the Hold.*
 He led Lord Marmion to the deas,†
 Raised o'er the pavement high,
 And placed him in the upper place—
 They feasted full and high :
 The whiles a Northern harper rude
 Chanted a rhyme of deadly feud,
 “ *How the fierce Thirwalls, and Riddleys all,
 Stout Willimondswick,
 And Hard-riding Dick,
 And Hughie of Hawdon, and Will o' the Wall,
 Have set on Sir Albany Featherstonhaugh,
 And taken his life at the Deadman's-shaw.* ”—
 Scantly Lord Marmion's ear could brook
 The harper's barbarous lay ;
 Yet much he praised the pains he took,
 And well those pains did pay :
 For lady's suit, and minstrel's strain,
 By knight should ne'er be heard in vain.

XIV.

“ Now, good Lord Marmion,” Heron says,
 “ Of your fair courtesy, and will
 I pray you bide some little space,
 In this poor tower with me.
 Here may you keep your arms from rust,
 May breathe your war-horse well ;
 Seldom hath passed a week but giust
 Or feat of arms befell ;
 The Scots can rein a mettled steed,
 And love to couch a spear ;—
 Saint George ! a stirring life they lead
 That have such neighbours near.
 Then stay with us a little space,
 Our northern wars to learn ;
 I pray you, for your lady's grace ! ”—
 Lord Marmion's brow grew stern.

* See Note 10.

† The principal table, or the raised part on which it was placed.

XV.

The Captain marked his altered look,
And gave a squire the sign ;
A mighty wassail-bowl he took,
And crowned it high with wine.
“ Now pledge me here, Lord Marmion :
But first I pray thee fair,
Where hast thou left that page of thine,
That used to serve thy cup of wine,
Whose beauty was so rare ?
When last in Raby towers we met,
The boy I closely eyed,
And often marked his cheeks were wet
With tears he fain would hide :
His was no rugged horse-boy's hand,
To burnish shield or sharpen brand,
Or saddle battle-steed ;
But meeter seemed for lady fair,
To fan her cheek or curl her hair,
Or through embroidery, rich and rare,
The slender silk to lead ;
His skin was fair, his ringlets gold,
His bosom—when he sighed,
The russet doublet's rugged fold
Could scarce repel its pride !
Say, hast thou given that lovely youth
To serve in lady's bower ?
Or was the gentle page, in sooth,
A gentle paramour ? ”

XVI.

Lord Marmion ill could brook such jest ;
He rolled his kindling eye,
With pain his rising wrath suppressed,
Yet made a calm reply :
“ That boy thou thought'st so goodly fair,
He might not brook the northern air.
More of his fate if thou wouldst learn,
I left him sick in Lindisfarn :
Enough of him.—But, Heron, say,

Why does thy lovely lady gay
 Disdain to grace the hall to-day?
 Or has that dame, so fair and sage,
 Gone on some pious pilgrimage?"—
 He spoke in covert scorn, for fame
 Whispered light tales of Heron's dame.

XVII.

Unmarked, at least unrecked, the taunt,
 Careless the Knight replied :
 "No bird, whose feathers gaily flaunt,
 Delights in cage to bide :
 Norham is grim, and grated close,
 Hemmed in by battlement and fosse,
 And many a darksome tower ;
 And better loves my lady bright
 To sit in liberty and light,
 In fair Queen Margaret's bower.
 We hold our greyhound in our hand,
 Our falcon on our glove ;
 But where shall we find leash or band
 For dame that loves to rove?
 Let the wild falcon soar her swing,
 She'll stoop when she has tired her wing."—

XVIII.

"Nay, if with Royal James's bride
 The lovely Lady Heron bide,
 Behold me here, a messenger,
 Your tender greetings prompt to bear ;
 For, to the Scottish court addressed,
 I journey at our King's behest,
 And pray you, of your grace, provide
 For me and mine a trusty guide.
 I have not ridden in Scotland since
 James backed the cause of that mock prince,
 Warbeck, that Flemish counterfeit,
 Who on the gibbet paid the cheat.
 Then did I march with Surrey's power,
 What time we razed old Ayton tower."*—

* See Note II.

XIX.

“For such like need, my Lord, I trow,
Norham can find you guides enow ;
For here be some have pricked as far,
On Scottish ground, as to Dunbar ;
Have drunk the monks of St. Bothan’s ale,
And driven the beeves of Lauderdale ;
Harried the wives of Greenlaw’s goods,
And given them light to set their hoods.”*—

XX.

“Now, in good sooth,” Lord Marmion cried,
“Were I in warlike-wise to ride,
A better guard I would not lack,
Than your stout forayers at my back ;
But, as in form of peace I go,
A friendly messenger, to know
Why through all Scotland, near and far,
Their King is mustering troops for war,
The sight of plundering Border spears
Might justify suspicious fears,
And deadly feud, or thirst of spoil,
Break out in some unseemly broil :
A herald were my fitting guide ;
Or friar, sworn in peace to bide ;
Or pardoner, or travelling priest,
Or strolling pilgrim, at the least.”—

XXI.

The Captain mused a little space,
And passed his hand across his face.
“Fain would I find the guide you want,
But ill may spare a pursuivant,
The only men that safe can ride
Mine errands on the Scottish side :
And, though a bishop built this fort,
Few holy brethren here resort ;
Even our good chaplain, as I ween,
Since our last siege, we have not seen :

* See Note 12.

The mass he might not sing or say,
 Upon one stinted meal a day ;
 So, safe he sat in Durham aisle,
 And prayed for our success the while.
 Our Norham vicar, woe betide,
 Is all too well in case to ride.
 The priest of Shoreswood—he could rein
 The wildest war-horse in your train ; *
 But then, no spearman in the hall
 Will sooner swear, or stab, or brawl.
 Friar John of Tillmouth were the man :
 A blithesome brother at the can,
 A welcome guest in hall and bower,
 He knows each castle, town, and tower,
 In which the wine and ale is good,
 'Twixt Newcastle and Holy-Rood.
 But that good man, as ill befalls,
 Hath seldom left our castle walls,
 Since, on the vigil of St. Bede,
 In evil hour, he crossed the Tweed,
 To teach Dame Alison her creed.
 Old Bughtrig found him with his wife ;
 And John, an enemy to strife,
 Sans frock and hood, fled for his life.
 The jealous churl hath deeply swore,
 That, if again he ventures o'er,
 He shall shrieve penitent no more.
 Little he loves such risks, I know ;
 Yet, in your guard, perchance will go.”—

XXII.

Young Selby, at the fair hall-board,
 Carved to his uncle and that lord,
 And reverently took up the word :
 “ Kind uncle, woe were we each one,
 If harm should hap to brother John.
 He is a man of mirthful speech,
 Can many a game and gambol teach ;
 Full well at tables can he play,
 And sweep at bowls the stake away.

* See Note 13.

None can a lustier carol bawl,
 The needfullest among us all
 When time hangs heavy in the hall,
 And snow comes thick at Christmas tide,
 And we can neither hunt, nor ride
 A foray on the Scottish side.
 The vowed revenge of Bughtrig rude,
 May end in worse than loss of hood.
 Let Friar John, in safety, still
 In chimney-corner snore his fill,
 Roast hissing crabs, or flagons swill :
 Last night, to Norham there came one,
 Will better guide Lord Marmion."—
 "Nephew," quoth Heron, "by my fay,
 Well hast thou spoke ; say forth thy say."—

XXIII.

"Here is a holy Palmer come,
 From Salem first, and last from Rome ;
 One that hath kissed the blessed tomb,
 And visited each holy shrine
 In Araby and Palestine ;
 On hills of Armenie hath been,
 Where Noah's ark may yet be seen ;
 By that Red Sea, too, hath he trod,
 Which parted at the prophet's rod ;
 In Sinai's wilderness, he saw
 The Mount where Israel heard the law,
 'Mid thunder dint, and flashing levin,
 And shadows, mists, and darkness, given.
 He shows Saint James's cockle-shell ;
 Of fair Montserrat, too, can tell ;
 And of that Grot where Olives nod,
 Where, darling of each heart and eye,
 From all the youth of Sicily,
 Saint Rosalie retired to God.*

XXIV.

"To stout Saint George of Norwich merry,
 Saint Thomas, too, of Canterbury,

* See Note 14.

Cuthbert of Durham and Saint Bede,
For his sins' pardon hath he prayed.
He knows the passes of the North,
And seeks far shrines beyond the Forth ;
Little he eats, and long will wake,
And drinks but of the stream or lake.
This were a guide o'er moor and dale ;
But, when our John hath quaffed his ale,
As little as the wind that blows
And warms itself against his nose,
Kens he, or cares, which way he goes."—

XXV.

"Gramercy !" quoth Lord Marmion,
"Full loath were I that Friar John,
That venerable man, for me,
Were placed in fear or jeopardy.
If this same Palmer will me lead
From hence to Holy-Rood,
Like his good saint, I'll pay his meed,
Instead of cockle-shell, or bead,
With angels fair and good.
I love such holy rambles : still
They know to charm a weary hill,
With song, romance, or lay ;
Some jovial tale, or glee, or jest,
Some lying legend at the least,
They bring to cheer the way."—

XXVI.

"Ah ! noble sir," young Selby said,
And finger on his lip he laid,
"This man knows much, perchance e'en more
Than he could learn by holy lore.
Still to himself he's muttering,
And shrinks as at some unseen thing.
Last night we listened at his cell ;
Strange sounds we heard, and, sooth to tell,
He murmured on till morn, how'er
No living mortal could be near.

Sometimes I thought I heard it plain,
 As other voices spoke again.
 I cannot tell—I like it not—
 Friar John hath told us it is wrote,
 No conscience clear, and void of wrong,
 Can rest awake, and pray so long.
 Himself still sleeps before his beads
 Have marked ten aves and two creeds.” *

XXVII. THE PALMER.

—“Let pass,” quoth Marmion; “by my fay,
 This man shall guide me on my way,
 Although the great arch-fiend and he
 Had sworn themselves of company.
 So please you, gentle youth, to call
 This Palmer to the Castle-hall.”—
 The summoned Palmer came in place; †
 His sable cowl o’erhung his face;
 In his black mantle was he clad,
 With Peter’s keys, in cloth of red,
 On his broad shoulders wrought;
 The scallop-shell his cap did deck;
 The crucifix around his neck
 Was from Lorétto brought;
 His sandals were with travel tore,
 Staff, budget, bottle, scrip he wore;
 The faded palm-branch in his hand
 Showed pilgrim from the Holy Land.

XXVIII.

Whenas the Palmer came in hall,
 Nor lord, nor knight, was there more tall,
 Or had a statelier step withal,
 Or looked more high and keen;
 For no saluting did he wait,
 But strode across the hall of state,
 And fronted Marmion where he sate,
 As he his peer had been.
 But his gaunt frame was worn with toil;

* See Note 15.

† See Note 16.

His cheek was sunk, alas the while !
 And when he struggled at a smile,
 His eye looked haggard wild :
 Poor wretch ! the mother that him bare,
 If she had been in presence there,
 In his wan face, and sun-burned hair,
 She had not known her child.
 Danger, long travel, want, or woe,
 Soon change the form that best we know—
 For deadly fear can time outgo,
 And blanch at once the hair ;
 Hard toil can roughen form and face,
 And want can quench the eye's bright grace,
 Nor does old age a wrinkle trace,
 More deeply than despair.
 Happy whom none of these befall,
 But this poor Palmer knew them all.

XXIX.

Lord Marmion then his boon did ask ;
 The Palmer took on him the task,
 So he would march with morning tide,
 To Scottish court to be his guide.
 “ But I have solemn vows to pay,
 And may not linger by the way,
 To fair Saint Andrews bound,
 Within the ocean-cave to pray
 Where good Saint Rule his holy lay,
 From midnight to the dawn of day,
 Sung to the billows' sound ; *
 Thence to Saint Fillan's blessed well,
 Whose spring can frenzied dreams dispel,
 And the crazed brain restore :—†
 Saint Mary grant, that cave or spring
 Could back to peace my bosom bring,
 Or bid it throb no more ! ”—

XXX.

And now the midnight draught of sleep,
 Where wine and spices richly steep,

* See Note 17. :

† See Note 18.

In massive bowl of silver deep,
The page presents on knee.
Lord Marmion drank a fair good rest,
The Captain pledged his noble guest,
The cup went through among the rest,
Who drained it merrily ;
Alone the Palmer passed it by,
Though Selby pressed him courteously.
This was a sign the feast was o'er ;
It hushed the merry wassel roar,
The minstrels ceased to sound.
Soon in the Castle nought was heard,
But the slow footstep of the guard
Pacing his sober round.

XXXI.

With early dawn Lord Marmion rose :
And first the chapel doors unclosed ;
Then, after morning rites were done,
(A hasty mass from Friar John,)
And knight and squire had broke their fast
On rich substantial repast,
Lord Marmion's bugles blew to horse.
Then came the stirrup-cup in course :
Between the Baron and his host,
No point of courtesy was lost ;
High thanks were by Lord Marmion paid,
Solemn excuse the Captain made,
Till, filing from the gate, had passed
That noble train, their Lord the last.
Then loudly rung the trumpet-call ;
Thundered the cannon from the wall,
And shook the Scottish shore ;
Around the Castle eddied, slow,
Volumes of smoke as white as snow,
And hid its turrets hoar ;
Till they rolled forth upon the air,
And met the river breezes there,
Which gave again the prospect fair.

INTRODUCTION TO CANTO SECOND

TO THE REV. JOHN MARRIOTT, M.A.

Ashestiel, Ettrick Forest.

THE scenes are desert now, and bare,
 Where flourished once a forest fair,*
 When these waste glens with copse were lined,
 And peopled with the hart and hind.
 Yon thorn—perchance whose prickly spears
 Have fenced him for three hundred years,
 While fell around his green compeers—
 Yon lonely thorn, would he could tell
 The changes of his parent dell,
 Since he, so grey and stubborn now,
 Waved in each breeze a sapling bough;
 Would he could tell how deep the shade
 A thousand mingled branches made;
 How broad the shadows of the oak,
 How clung the rowan † to the rock,
 And through the foliage showed his head,
 With narrow leaves and berries red;
 What pines on every mountain sprung,
 O'er every dell what birches hung,
 In every breeze what aspens shook,
 What alders shaded every brook!

"Here, in my shade," methinks he'd say,
 "The mighty stag at noontide lay:
 The wolf I've seen, a fiercer game,
 (The neighbouring dingle bears his name,)
 With lurching step around me prowl,
 And stop against the moon to howl;
 The mountain boar, on battle set,
 His tusks upon my stem would whet;
 While doe and roe, and red-deer good,
 Have bounded by through gay greenwood.
 Then oft, from Newark's riven tower,
 Sallied a Scottish monarch's power:

* See Note 19.

† Rowan, mountain ash.

A thousand vassals mustered round,
 With horse, and hawk, and horn, and hound ;
 And I might see the youth, intent,
 Guard every pass with crossbow bent ;
 And through the brake the rangers stalk,
 And falc'ners hold the ready hawk ;
 And foresters, in greenwood trim,
 Lead in the leash the gazehounds grim,
 Attentive, as the bratchet's * bay
 From the dark covert drove the prey,
 To slip them as he broke away.
 The startled quarry bounds amain,
 As fast the gallant greyhounds strain ;
 Whistles the arrow from the bow,
 Answers the harquebus below ;
 While all the rocking hills reply,
 To hoof-clang, hound, and hunter's cry,
 And bugles ringing lightsomely."—

Of such proud huntings, many tales
 Yet linger in our lonely dales ;
 Up pathless Ettrick, and on Yarrow,
 Where erst the Outlaw drew his arrow.†
 But not more blithe that silvan court,
 Than we have been at humbler sport ;
 Though small our pomp, and mean our game,
 Our mirth, dear Marriott, was the same.
 Remember'st thou my greyhounds true ?
 O'er holt or hill there never flew,
 From slip or leash there never sprang,
 More fleet of foot, or sure of fang.
 Nor dull, between each merry chase,
 Passed by the intermitted space ;
 For we had fair resource in store,
 In Classic and in Gothic lore :
 We marked each memorable scene,
 And held poetic talk between ;
 Nor hill, nor brook, we paced along,
 But had its legend or its song.

* Bratchet, slowhound. † Murray, the Robin Hood of Ettrick Forest.

All silent now—for now are still
Thy bowers, untenanted Bowhill ! *
No longer, from thy mountains dun,
The yeoman hears the well-known gun,
And, while his honest heart glows warm,
At thought of his paternal farm,
Round to his mates a brimmer fills,
And drinks, “The Chieftain of the Hills !”
No fairy forms, in Yarrow’s bowers,
Trip o’er the walks, or tend the flowers,
Fair as the elves whom Janet saw
By moonlight dance on Carterhaugh ;
No youthful Baron’s left to grace
The Forest-Sheriff’s lonely chase,
And ape, in manly step and tone,
The majesty of Oberon.
And she is gone, whose lovely face
Is but her least and lowest grace ;
Though if to Sylphid Queen ’twere given
To show our earth the charms of heaven,
She could not glide along the air
With form more light or face more fair.
No more the widow’s deafened ear
Grows quick that lady’s step to hear :
At noontide she expects her not,
Nor busies her to trim the cot ;
Pensive she turns her humming wheel,
Or pensive cooks her orphans’ meal ;
Yet blesses, ere she deals their bread,
The gentle hand by which they’re fed.

From Yair,—which hills so closely bind,
Scarce can the Tweed his passage find,
Though much he fret, and chafe, and toil,
Till all his eddying currents boil,—
Her long-descended lord is gone,
And left us by the stream alone.
And much I miss those sportive boys,
Companions of my mountain joys,

* A seat of the Duke of Buccleuch, on the Yarrow, in Ettrick Forest.

Just at the age 'twixt boy and youth,
When thought is speech, and speech is truth.
Close to my side, with what delight,
They pressed to hear of Wallace wight,
When, pointing to his airy mound,
I called his ramparts holy ground ! *
Kindled their brows to hear me speak ;
And I have smiled, to feel my cheek,
Despite the difference of our years,
Return again the glow of theirs.
Ah, happy boys ! such feelings pure,
They will not, cannot long endure :
Condemned to stem the world's rude tide,
You may not linger by the side ;
For Fate shall thrust you from the shore,
And Passion ply the sail and oar.
Yet cherish the remembrance still
Of the lone mountain, and the rill ;
For trust, dear boys, the time will come,
When fiercer transport shall be dumb,
And you will think right frequently,
But, well I hope, without a sigh,
On the free hours that we have spent,
Together, on the brown hill's bent.

When, musing on companions gone,
We doubly feel ourselves alone,
Something, my friend, we yet may gain,—
There is a pleasure in this pain :
It soothes the love of lonely rest,
Deep in each gentler heart impressed.
'Tis silent amid worldly toils,
And stifled soon by mental broils ;
But, in a bosom thus prepared,
Its still small voice is often heard,
Whispering a mingled sentiment,
'Twixt resignation and content.

* There is, on a high mountainous ridge above the farm of Ashestiel, a fosse called Wallace's Trench.

Oft in my mind such thoughts awake,
 By lone St. Mary's silent lake ; *
 Thou know'st it well—nor fen, nor sedge,
 Pollute the pure lake's crystal edge ;
 Abrupt and sheer, the mountains sink
 At once upon the level brink ;
 And just a trace of silver sand
 Marks where the water meets the land.
 Far in the mirror, bright and blue,
 Each hill's huge outline you may view ;
 Shaggy with heath, but lonely bare,
 Nor tree, nor bush, nor brake is there,
 Save where, of land, yon slender line
 Bears thwart the lake the scattered pine.
 Yet even this nakedness has power,
 And aids the feeling of the hour :
 Nor thicket, dell, nor copse you spy,
 Where living thing concealed might lie ;
 Nor point, retiring, hides a dell,
 Where swain, or woodman lone, might dwell ;
 There's nothing left to fancy's guess,
 You see that all is loneliness :
 And silence aids—though the steep hills
 Send to the lake a thousand rills ;
 In summer tide, so soft they weep,
 The sound but lulls the ear asleep ;
 Your horse's hoof-tread sounds too rude,
 So stilly is the solitude.

Nought living meets the eye or ear,
 But well I ween the dead are near ;
 For though, in feudal strife, a foe
 Hath laid Our Lady's chapel low, †
 Yet still, beneath the hallowed soil,
 The peasant rests him from his toil,
 And, dying, bids his bones be laid
 Where erst his simple fathers prayed.

If age had tamed the passions' strife,
 And fate had cut my ties to life,

* See Note 20.

† See Note 21.

Here, have I thought, 'twere sweet to dwell,
And rear again the chaplain's cell,
Like that same peaceful hermitage,
Where Milton longed to spend his age.
'Twere sweet to mark the setting day,
On Bourhope's lonely top decay ;
And, as it faint and feeble died,
On the broad lake, and mountain's side,
To say, "Thus pleasures fade away ;
Youth, talents, beauty, thus decay,
And leave us dark, forlorn, and grey ;"—
Then gaze on Dryhope's ruined tower,
And think on Yarrow's faded Flower :
And when that mountain-sound I heard,
Which bids us be for storm prepared,—
The distant rustling of his wings,
As up his force the Tempest brings,
'Twere sweet, ere yet his terrors rave,
To sit upon the Wizard's grave ;
That Wizard Priest's, whose bones are thrust
From company of holy dust ; *
On which no sunbeam ever shines—
(So superstition's creed divines)—
Thence view the lake, with sullen roar,
Heave her broad billows to the shore ;
And mark the wild-swans mount the gale,
Spread wide through mist their snowy sail,
And ever stoop again, to lave
Their bosoms on the surging wave :
Then, when against the driving hail
No longer might my plaid avail,
Back to my lonely home retire,
And light my lamp, and trim my fire ;
There ponder o'er some mystic lay,
Till the wild tale had all its sway,
And, in the bittern's distant shriek,
I heard unearthly voices speak,
And thought the Wizard Priest was come,
To claim again his ancient home !

* See Note 22.

And bade my busy fancy range,
To frame him fitting shape and strange ;
Till from the task my brow I cleared,
And smiled to think that I had feared.

But chief, 'twere sweet to think such life,
(Though but escape from fortune's strife,)
Something most matchless good and wise,
A great and grateful sacrifice ;
And deem each hour, to musing given,
A step upon the road to heaven.

Yet him, whose heart is ill at ease,
Such peaceful solitudes displease :
He loves to drown his bosom's jar
Amid the elemental war :
And my black Palmer's choice had been
Some ruder and more savage scene,
Like that which frowns round dark Loch-skene.*
There eagles scream from isle to shore ;
Down all the rocks the torrents roar ;
O'er the black waves incessant driven,
Dark mists infect the summer heaven ;
Through the rude barriers of the lake
Away its hurrying waters break,
Faster and whiter dash and curl,
Till down yon dark abyss they hurl.
Rises the fog-smoke white as snow,
Thunders the viewless stream below,
Diving, as if condemned to lave
Some demon's subterranean cave,
Who, prisoned by enchanter's spell,
Shakes the dark rock with groan and yell.
And well that Palmer's form and mien
Had suited with the stormy scene,
Just on the edge, straining his ken
To view the bottom of the den,
Where, deep deep down, and far within,
Toils with the rocks the roaring linn ;

* See Note 23.

Then, issuing forth one foamy wave,
And wheeling round the Giant's Grave,
White as the snowy charger's tail,
Drives down the pass of Moffatdale.

Marriott, thy harp, on Isis strung,
To many a Border theme has rung :
Then list to me, and thou shalt know
Of this mysterious Man of Woe.

CANTO SECOND.

THE CONVENT.

I.

THE breeze, which swept away the smoke,
Round Norham Castle rolled,
When all the loud artillery spoke,
With lightning-flash and thunder-stroke,
As Marmion left the Hold.
It curled not Tweed alone, that breeze ;
For, far upon Northumbrian seas,
It freshly blew, and strong,
Where, from high Whitby's cloistered pile,*
Bound to St. Cuthbert's Holy Isle,†
It bore a bark along.
Upon the gale she stooped her side,
And bounded o'er the swelling tide,
As she were dancing home ;
The merry seamen laughed, to see
Their gallant ship so lustily
Furrow the green sea-foam.
Much joyed they in their honoured freight ;
For, on the deck, in chair of state,
The Abbess of Saint Hilda placed,
With five fair nuns, the galley graced.

II.

'Twas sweet to see these holy maids,
Like birds escaped to greenwood shades,

* See Note 24. † See Note 25.

Their first flight from the cage ;
 How timid, and how curious too,
 For all to them was strange and new,
 And all the common sights they view,
 Their wonderment engage.
 One eyed the shrouds and swelling sail,
 With many a benedicite ;
 One at the rippling surge grew pale,
 And would for terror pray ;
 Then shrieked, because the sea-dog, nigh,
 His round black head, and sparkling eye,
 Reared o'er the foaming spray :
 And one would still adjust her veil,
 Disordered by the summer gale,
 Perchance lest some more worldly eye
 Her dedicated charms might spy ;
 Perchance because such action graced
 Her fair-turned arm and slender waist.
 Light was each simple bosom there,
 Save two, who ill might pleasure share—
 The Abbess and the Novice Clare.

III.

The Abbess was of noble blood,
 But early took the veil and hood,
 Ere upon life she cast a look,
 Or knew the world that she forsook.
 Fair too she was, and kind had been
 As she was fair ; but ne'er had seen
 For her a timid lover sigh,
 Nor knew the influence of her eye.
 Love, to her ear, was but a name,
 Combined with vanity and shame ;
 Her hopes, her fears, her joys were all
 Bounded within the cloister wall :
 The deadliest sin her mind could reach,
 Was of monastic rule the breach ;
 And her ambition's highest aim,
 To emulate Saint Hilda's fame.

For this she gave her ample dower
To raise the convent's eastern tower;
For this, with carving rare and quaint,
She decked the chapel of the saint;
And gave the relic-shrine of cost,
With ivory and gems embossed.
The poor her convent's bounty blessed,
The pilgrim in its halls found rest.

IV.

Black was her garb, her rigid rule
Reformed on Benedictine school;
Her cheek was pale, her form was spare;
Vigils and penitence austere
Had early quenched the light of youth,
But gentle was the dame, in sooth;
Though vain of her religious sway,
She loved to see her maids obey,
Yet nothing stern was she in cell,
And the nuns loved their Abbess well.
Sad was this voyage to the dame;
Summoned to Lindisfarne, she came,
There, with Saint Cuthbert's Abbot old,
And Tynemouth's Prioress, to hold
A chapter of Saint Benedict,
For inquisition stern and strict,
On two apostates from the faith,
And, if need were, to doom to death.

V.

Nought say I here of Sister Clare,
Save this, that she was young and fair:
As yet a novice unprofessed,
Lovely and gentle, but distressed.
She was betrothed to one now dead—
Or worse, who had dishonoured fled.
Her kinsmen bade her give her hand
To one who loved her for her land:
Herself, almost heartbroken now,
Was bent to take the vestal vow,

And shroud, within Saint Hilda's gloom,
Her blasted hopes and withered bloom.

VI.

She sate upon the galley's prow,
And seemed to mark the waves below ;
Nay seemed, so fixed her look and eye,
To count them as they glided by.
She saw them not—'twas seeming all—
Far other scene her thoughts recall :
A sun-scorched desert, waste and bare,
Nor wave nor breezes murmured there ;
There saw she, where some careless hand
O'er a dead corpse had heaped the sand,
To hide it till the jackals come
To tear it from the scanty tomb.—
See what a woeful look was given,
As she raised up her eyes to heaven !

VII.

Lovely, and gentle, and distressed—
These charms might tame the fiercest breast :
Harpers have sung, and poets told,
That he, in fury uncontrolled,
The shaggy monarch of the wood,
Before a virgin, fair and good,
Hath pacified his savage mood.
But passions in the human frame
Oft put the lion's rage to shame ;
And jealousy, by dark intrigue,
With sordid avarice in league,
Had practised, with their bowl and knife,
Against the mourner's harmless life.
This crime was charged 'gainst those who lay
Prisoned in Cuthbert's islet grey.

VIII.

And now the vessel skirts the strand
Of mountainous Northumberland ;

Towns, towers, halls, successive rise,
And catch the nuns' delighted eyes.
Monk-Wearmouth soon behind them lay,
And Tynemouth's priory and bay ;
They marked, amid her trees, the hall
Of lofty Seaton-Delaval ;
They saw the Blythe and Wansbeck floods
Rush to the sea through sounding woods ;
They passed the tower of Widderington,
Mother of many a valiant son ;
At Coquet-isle their beads they tell,
To the good Saint who owned the cell ;
Then did the Alne attention claim,
And Warkworth, proud of Percy's name ;
And next, they crossed themselves, to hear
The whitening breakers sound so near,
Where, boiling through the rocks, they roar,
On Dunstanborough's caverned shore ;
Thy tower, proud Bamborough, marked they there,
King Ida's castle, huge and square,
From its tall rock look grimly down,
And on the swelling ocean frown ;
Then from the coast they bore away,
And reached the Holy Island's bay.

IX.

The tide did now its flood-mark gain,
And girdled in the Saint's domain :
For, with the flow and ebb, its style
Varies from continent to isle ;
Dryshod, o'er sands, twice every day,
The pilgrims to the shrine find way ;
Twice every day the waves efface
Of staves and sandalled feet the trace.
As to the port the galley flew,
Higher and higher rose to view
The Castle, with its battled walls,
The ancient Monastery's halls,
A solemn, huge, and dark-red pile,
Placed on the margin of the isle.

X.

In Saxon strength that Abbey frowned,
 With massive arches broad and round,
 That rose alternate, row and row,
 On ponderous columns, short and low,
 Built ere the art was known,
 By pointed aisle, and shafted stalk,
 The arcades of an alleyed walk
 To emulate in stone.
 On the deep walls, the heathen Dane
 Had poured his impious rage in vain ;
 And needful was such strength to these,
 Exposed to the tempestuous seas,
 Scourged by the wind's eternal sway,
 Open to rovers fierce as they,
 Which could twelve hundred years withstand
 Winds, waves, and northern pirates' hand.
 Not but that portions of the pile,
 Rebuilt in a later style,
 Showed where the spoiler's hand had been ;
 Not but the wasting sea-breeze keen
 Had worn the pillar's carving quaint,
 And mouldered in his niche the saint,
 And rounded, with consuming power,
 The pointed angles of each tower :
 Yet still entire the Abbey stood,
 Like veteran, worn, but unsubdued.

XI.

Soon as they neared his turrets strong,
 The maidens raised Saint Hilda's song,
 And with the sea-wave and the wind,
 Their voices, sweetly shrill, combined,
 And made harmonious close ;
 Then, answering from the sandy shore,
 Half-drowned amid the breakers' roar,
 According chorus rose :
 Down to the haven of the isle,
 The monks and nuns in order file,
 From Cuthbert's cloisters grim ;

Banner, and cross, and relics there,
 To meet Saint Hilda's maids, they bare;
 And, as they caught the sounds on air,
 They echoed back the hymn.
 The islanders, in joyous mood,
 Rushed emulously through the flood
 To hale the bark to land;
 Conspicuous by her veil and hood,
 Signing the cross, the Abbess stood,
 And blessed them with her hand.

XII.

Suppose we now the welcome said,
 Suppose the Convent banquet made:
 All through the holy dome,
 Through cloister, aisle, and gallery,
 Wherever vestal maid might pry,
 Nor risk to meet unhallowed eye,
 The stranger sisters roam;
 Till fell the evening damp with dew,
 And the sharp sea-breeze coldly blew,
 For there, even summer night is chill.
 Then, having strayed and gazed their fill,
 They closed around the fire;
 And all, in turn, essayed to paint
 The rival merits of their saint,
 A theme that ne'er can tire
 A holy maid; for, be it known,
 That their saint's honour is their own.

XIII.

Then Whitby's nuns exulting told
 How to their house three Barons bold
 Must menial service do,*
 While horns blow out a note of shame,
 And monks cry, "Fie upon your name!
 In wrath, for loss of silvan game,
 Saint Hilda's priest ye slew.—
 "This, on Ascension-day, each year,

* See Note 26.

While labouring on our harbour pier,
 Must Herbert, Bruce, and Percy hear."—
 They told how, in their convent cell,
 A Saxon princess once did dwell,
 The lovely Edelfled ; *
 And how, of thousand snakes, each one
 Was changed into a coil of stone,
 When holy Hilda prayed ;
 Themselves, within their holy bound,
 Their stony folds had often found.
 They told how sea-fowls' pinions fail,
 As over Whitby's towers they sail, †
 And, sinking down, with flutterings faint,
 They do their homage to the saint.

XIV.

Nor did Saint Cuthbert's daughters fail,
 To vie with these in holy tale :
 His body's resting-place, of old,
 How oft their patron changed, they told ; ‡
 How, when the rude Dane burned their pile,
 The monks fled forth from Holy Isle ;
 O'er northern mountain, marsh, and moor
 From sea to sea, from shore to shore,
 Seven years Saint Cuthbert's corpse they bore.
 They rested them in fair Melrose ;
 But though, alive, he loved it well,
 Not there his relics might repose :
 For, wondrous tale to tell !
 In his stone coffin forth he rides
 (A ponderous bark for river tides),
 Yet light as gossamer it glides,
 Downward to Tillmouth cell.
 Nor long was his abiding there,
 For southward did the saint repair ;
 Chester-le-Street and Rippon saw
 His holy corpse, ere Wardilaw
 Hailed him with joy and fear ;
 And, after many wanderings past,

* See Note 27.

† See Note 28.

‡ See Note 29.

He chose his lordly seat at last,
 Where his cathedral, huge and vast,
 Looks down upon the Wear.
 There, deep in Durham's Gothic shade,
 His relics are in secret laid;
 But none may know the place,
 Save of his holiest servants three,
 Deep sworn to solemn secrecy,
 Who share that wondrous grace.

XV.

Who may his miracles declare!
 Even Scotland's dauntless king, and heir,
 (Although with them they led
 Galwegians, wild as ocean's gale,
 And Lodon's knights, all sheathed in mail,
 And the bold men of Teviotdale,)
 Before his standard¹ fled.*¹ B WCI
 'Twas he, to vindicate his reign,
 Edged Alfred's falchion on the Dane,
 And turned the Conqueror back again,†
 When, with his Norman bowyer band,
 He came to waste Northumberland.

XVI.

But fain Saint Hilda's nuns would learn
 If, on a rock by Lindisfarne,
 Saint Cuthbert sits, and toils to frame
 The sea-born beads that bear his name:‡
 Such tales had Whitby's fishers told,
 And said they might his shape behold,
 And hear his anvil sound;
 A deadened clang,—a huge dim form,
 Seen but, and heard, when gathering storm,
 And night were closing round.
 But this, as tale of idle fame,¹²¹³
 The nuns of Lindisfarne disclaim.

XVII.

While round the fire such legends go,
 Far different was the scene of woe,

* See Note 30.

† See Note 31.

‡ See Note 32.

Where, in a secret aisle beneath,
Council was held of life and death.

It was more dark and lone that vault
Than the worst dungeon cell ;
Old Colwulf * built it, for his fault,
In penitence to dwell,
When he, for cowl and beads, laid down
The Saxon battle-axe and crown.

This den, which, chilling every sense
Of feeling, hearing, sight,
Was called the Vault of Penitence,
Excluding air and light,
Was, by the prelate Sexhelm, made
A place of burial for such dead
As, having died in mortal sin,
Might not be laid the church within.
'Twas now a place of punishment ;
Whence if so loud a shriek were sent,
As reached the upper air,
The hearers blessed themselves, and said,
The spirits of the sinful dead
Bemoaned their torments there.

XVIII.

But though, in the monastic pile,
Did of this penitential aisle
Some vague tradition go,
Few only, save the Abböt, knew
Where the place lay ; and still more few
Were those, who had from him the clew
To that dread vault to go.
Victim and executioner
Were blindfold when transported there.
In low dark rounds the arches hung,
From the rude rock the side-walls sprung ;
The gravestones, rudely sculptured o'er,
Half sunk in earth, by time half wore,
Were all the pavement of the floor ;
The mildew drops fell one by one,
With tinkling splash, upon the stone.

* See Note 33.

A cresset,* in an iron chain,
Which served to light this drear domain,
With damp and darkness seemed to strive,
As if it scarce might keep alive ;
And yet it dimly served to show
The awful conclave met below.

XIX.

There, met to doom in secrecy,
Were placed the heads of convents three :
All servants of Saint Benedict,
The statutes of whose order strict
On iron table lay ;
In long black dress, on seats of stone,
Behind were these three judges shown
By the pale cresset's ray.
The Abbess of Saint Hilda, there,
Sat for a space with visage bare,
Until, to hide her bosom's swell,
And tear-drops that for pity fell,
She closely drew her veil :
Yon shrouded figure, as I guess,
By her proud mien and flowing dress,
Is Tynemouth's haughty Prioress,†
And she with awe looks pale :
And he, that Ancient Man, whose sight
Has long been quenched by age's night,
Upon whose wrinkled brow alone
Nor ruth nor mercy's trace is shown,
Whose look is hard and stern,—
Saint Cuthbert's Abbot is his style ;
For sanctity called, through the isle,
The Saint of Lindisfarne.

XX.

Before them stood a guilty pair ;
But, though an equal fate they share,
Yet one alone deserves our care.
Her sex a page's dress belied ;

* Cresset, an antique chandelier.

† See Note 34.

The cloak and doublet, loosely tied,
Obscured her charms, but could not hide.
Her cap down o'er her face she drew ;
And, on her doublet breast,
She tried to hide the badge of blue,
Lord Marmion's falcon crest.
But, at the Prioress' command,
A monk undid the silken band,
That tied her tresses fair,
And raised the bonnet from her head,
And down her slender form they spread,
In ringlets rich and rare.
Constance de Beverley they know,
Sister professed of Fontevraud,
Whom the Church numbered with the dead
For broken vows, and convent fled.

XXI.

When thus her face was given to view,
(Although so pallid was her hue,
It did a ghastly contrast bear
To those bright ringlets glistening fair,)
Her look composed, and steady eye,
Bespoke a matchless constancy ;
And there she stood so calm and pale,
That, but her breathing did not fail,
And motion slight of eye and head,
And of her bosom, warranted
That neither sense nor pulse she lacks,
You might have thought a form of wax,
Wrought to the very life, was there ;
So still she was, so pale, so fair.

XXII.

Her comrade was a sordid soul,
Such as does murder for a meed ;
Who, but of fear, knows no control,
Because his conscience, seared and foul,
Feels not the import of his deed ;

One whose brute feeling ne'er aspires
Beyond his own more brute desires.
Such tools the Tempter ever needs
To do the savagest of deeds :
For them no visioned terrors daunt,
Their nights no fancied spectres haunt ;
One fear with them, of all most base—
The fear of death—alone finds place.
This wretch was clad in frock and cowl,
And shamed not loud to moan and howl,
His body on the floor to dash,
And crouch, like hound beneath the lash ;
While his mute partner, standing near,
Waited her doom without a tear.

XXIII.

Yet well the luckless wretch might shriek,
Well might her paleness terror speak !
For there were seen, in that dark wall,
Two niches, narrow, deep, and tall ;—
Who enters at such grisly door,
Shall ne'er, I ween, find exit more.
In each a slender meal was laid,
Of roots, of water, and of bread ;
By each, in Benedictine dress,
Two haggard monks stood motionless,
Who, holding high a blazing torch,
Showed the grim entrance of the porch :
Reflecting back the smoky beam,
The dark-red walls and arches gleam ;
Hewn stones and cement were displayed,
And building tools in order laid.

do do red XXIV.

These executioners were chose,
As men who were with mankind foes,
And, with despite and envy fired,
Into the cloister had retired ;
Or who, in desperate doubt of grace,
Strove, by deep penance, to efface

Of some foul crime the stain ;
For, as the vassals of her will,
Such men the Church selected still,
As either joyed in doing ill,
Or thought more grace to gain,
If, in her cause, they wrestled down
Feelings their nature strove to own.
By strange device were they brought there,
They knew not how, and knew not where.

XXV.

And now that blind old Abbot rose,
To speak the Chapter's doom,
On those the wall was to enclose,
Alive, within the tomb ; *
But stopped, because that woeful maid,
Gathering her powers, to speak essayed.
Twice she essayed, and twice in vain,
Her accents might no utterance gain ;
Nought but imperfect murmurs slip
From her convulsed and quivering lip ;
'Twixt each attempt all was so still,
You seemed to hear a distant rill—
'Twas ocean's swells and falls ;
For though this vault of sin and fear
Was to the sounding surge so near,
A tempest there you scarce could hear,
So massive were the walls.

XXVI.

At length an effort sent apart
The blood that curdled to her heart,
And light came to her eye,
And colour dawned upon her cheek,
A hectic and a fluttered streak,
Like that left on the Cheviot peak
By Autumn's stormy sky ;
And when her silence broke at length,
Still as she spoke she gathered strength,

* See Note 35.

And armed herself to bear.
It was a fearful sight to see
Such high resolve and constancy,
In form so soft and fair.

XXVII.

"I speak not to implore your grace ;
Well know I, for one minute's space
 Successless might I sue :
Nor do I speak your prayers to gain ;
For if a death of lingering pain,
To cleanse my sins, be penance vain,
 Vain are your masses too.—
I listened to a traitor's tale,
I left the convent and the veil ;
For three long years I bowed my pride,
A horse-boy in his train to ride ;
And well my folly's meed he gave,
Who forfeited, to be his slave,
All here, and all beyond the grave.—
He saw young Clara's face more fair,
He knew her of broad lands the heir,
Forgot his vows, his faith forswore,
And Constance was beloved no more.—
 'Tis an old tale, and often told ;
 But, did my fate and wish agree,
 Ne'er had been read, in story old,
 Of maiden true betrayed for gold,
 That loved, or was avenged, like me !

XXVIII.

"The King approved his favourite's aim ;
In vain a rival barred his claim,
 Whose faith with Clare's was plight,
For he attaints that rival's fame
With treason's charge—and on they came,
In mortal lists to fight.
 Their oaths are said,
 Their prayers are prayed,
 Their lances in the rest are laid,

They meet in mortal shock ;
And, hark ! the throng, with thundering cry,
Shout, " Marmion, Marmion, to the sky !

De Wilton to the block ! "

Say ye, who preach Heaven shall decide
When in the lists two champions ride—

Say, was Heaven's justice here,
When, loyal in his love and faith,
Wilton found overthrow or death,

Beneath a traitor's spear ?

How false the charge, how true he fell,
This guilty packet best can tell."—

Then drew a packet from her breast,
Paused, gathered voice, and spoke the rest :—

XXIX.

" Still was false Marmion's bridal staid ;

To Whitby's convent fled the maid,

The hated match to shun.

' Ho ! shifts she thus ? ' King Henry cried ;

' Sir Marmion, she shall be thy bride,

If she were sworn a nun.'

One way remained : the King's command

Sent Marmion to the Scottish land ;

I lingered here, and rescue planned

For Clara and for me.

This caitiff monk, for gold, did swear,

He would to Whitby's shrine repair,

And, by his drugs, my rival fair

A saint in heaven should be.

But ill the dastard kept his oath,

Whose cowardice hath undone us both.

XXX.

" And now my tongue the secret tells,

Not that remorse my bosom swells,

But to assure my soul that none

Shall ever wed with Marmion.

Had fortune my last hope betrayed,

This packet, to the King conveyed,

Had given him to the headsman's stroke,
Although my heart that instant broke.—
Now, men of death, work forth your will,
For I can suffer, and be still;
And come he slow, or come he fast,
It is but Death who comes at last.

XXXI.

“Yet dread me, from my living tomb,
Ye vassal slaves of bloody Rome!
If Marmion's late remorse should wake,
Full soon such vengeance will he take,
That you shall wish the fiery Dane
Had rather been your guest again.
Behind, a darker hour ascends:
The altars quake, the crosier bends,
The ire of a despotic King
Rides forth upon destruction's wing;
Then shall these vaults, so strong and deep,
Burst open to the sea-winds' sweep;
Some traveller then shall find my bones,
Whitening amid disjointed stones,
And, ignorant of priests' cruelty,
Marvel such relics here should be.”—

XXXII.

Fixed was her look, and stern her air;
Back from her shoulders streamed her hair;
The locks, that wont her brow to shade,
Stared up erectly from her head;
Her figure seemed to rise more high;
Her voice, despair's wild energy
Had given a tone of prophecy.
Appalled the astonished conclave sate;
With stupid eyes, the men of fate
Gazed on the light inspired form,
And listened for the avenging storm;
The judges felt the victim's dread;
No hand was moved, no word was said,

Till thus the Abbot's doom was given,
Raising his sightless balls to heaven :—
“ Sister, let thy sorrows cease ;
Sinful brother, part in peace ! ”—
From that dire dungeon, place of doom,
Of execution too, and tomb,
Paced forth the judges three ;
Sorrow it were, and shame, to tell
The butcher-work that there befell,
When they had glided from the cell
Of sin and misery.

XXXIII.

An hundred winding steps convey
That conclave to the upper day ;
But, ere they breathed the fresher air,
They heard the shriekings of despair,
And many a stifled groan.
With speed their upward way they take,
(Such speed as age and fear can make,)
And crossed themselves for terror's sake,
As hurrying, tottering on ;
Even in the vesper's heavenly tone
They seemed to hear a dying groan,
And bade the passing knell to toll
For welfare of a parting soul.
Slow o'er the midnight wave it swung,
Northumbrian rocks in answer rung ;
To Warkworth cell the echoes rolled,
His beads the wakeful hermit told ;
The Bamborough peasant raised his head,
But slept ere half a prayer he said ;
So far was heard the mighty knell,
The stag sprung up on Cheviot Fell,
Spread his broad nostril to the wind,
Listed before, aside, behind,
Then couched him down beside the hind,
And quaked among the mountain fern,
To hear that sound so dull and stern.

INTRODUCTION TO CANTO THIRD.

TO WILLIAM ERSKINE, ESQ.*

Ashetiel, Ettrick Forest.

LIKE April morning clouds that pass,
 With varying shadow, o'er the grass,
 And imitate, on field and furrow,
 Life's chequered scene of joy and sorrow ;
 Like streamlet of the mountain north,
 Now in a torrent racing forth,
 Now winding slow its silver train,
 And almost slumbering on the plain ;
 Like breezes of the Autumn day,
 Whose voice inconstant dies away,
 And ever swells again as fast,
 When the ear deems its murmur past :
 Thus various, my romantic theme
 Flits, winds, or sinks, a morning dream.
 Yet pleased, our eye pursues the trace
 Of Light and Shade's inconstant race ;
 Pleased, views the rivulet afar,
 Weaving its maze irregular ;
 And pleased, we listen as the breeze
 Heaves its wild sigh through Autumn trees ;
 Then, wild as cloud, or stream, or gale,
 Flow on, flow unconfined, my Tale !

Need I to thee, dear Erskine, tell,
 I love the license all too well,
 In sounds now lowly, and now strong,
 To raise the desultory song ?
 Oft, when 'mid such capricious chime,
 Some transient fit of lofty rhyme,
 To thy kind judgment seemed excuse
 For many an error of the muse—
 Oft hast thou said, " If still misspent
 Thine hours to poetry are lent,

* William Erskine, Esq., advocate, Sheriff-depute of the Orkneys (afterwards Lord Kinneir), was a most intimate friend of the poet, and his chief confidant and adviser as to all literary matters.

Go, and to tame thy wandering course,
Quaff from the fountain at the source ;
Approach those masters, o'er whose tomb
Immortal laurels ever bloom :
Instructive of the feeble bard,
Still from the grave their voice is heard ;
From them, and from the paths they showed,
Choose honoured guide and practised road ;
Nor ramble on through brake and maze,
With harpers rude of barbarous days.

“ Or deem'st thou not our later time
Yields topic meet for classic rhyme ?
Hast thou no elegiac verse
For Brunswick's venerable hearse ?
What ! not a line, a tear, a sigh,
When valour bleeds for liberty ?—
Oh, hero of that glorious time,
When, with unrivalled light sublime —
Though martial Austria, and though all
The might of Russia, and the Gaul,
Though banded Europe stood her foes—
The star of Brandenburg arose !
Thou couldst not live to see her beam
For ever quenched in Jena's stream.
Lamented chief !—it was not given
To thee to change the doom of Heaven,
And crush that dragon in its birth,
Predestined scourge of guilty earth.
Lamented chief !—not thine the power,
To save in that presumptuous hour,
When Prussia hurried to the field
And snatched the spear, but left the shield ;
Valour and skill 'twas thine to try,
And, tried in vain, 'twas thine to die.
Ill had it seemed thy silver hair
The last, the bitterest pang to share,
For princedoms reft, and scutcheons riven,
And birthrights to usurpers given ;
Thy land's, thy children's wrongs to feel,

And witness woes thou couldst not heal!
On thee relenting Heaven bestows
For honoured life an honoured close;
And when revolves, in time's sure change,
The hour of Germany's revenge—
When, breathing fury for her sake,
Some new Arminius shall awake,
Her champion, ere he strike, shall come
To whet his sword on BRUNSWICK's tomb.

“Or of the Red-Cross hero * teach,
Dauntless in dungeon as on breach:
Alike to him the sea, the shore,
The brand, the bridle, or the oar;
Alike to him the war that calls
Its votaries to the shattered walls,
Which the grim Turk, besmeared with blood,
Against the Invincible made good;
Or that, whose thundering voice could wake
The silence of the polar lake,
When stubborn Russ, and metalled Swede,
On the warped wave their death-game played;
Or that, where Vengeance and Affright
Howled round the father of the fight,
Who snatched, on Alexandria's sand,
The conqueror's wreath with dying hand.†

“Or, if to touch such chord be thine,
Restore the ancient tragic line,
And emulate the notes that wrung
From the wild harp which silent hung
By silver Avon's holy shore,
Till twice an hundred years rolled o'er;
When she, the bold Enchantress,‡ came,
With fearless hand and heart on flame!
From the pale willow snatched the treasure,
And swept it with a kindred measure,
Till Avon's swans, while rung the grove
With Montfort's hate and Basil's love,

* Sir Sidney Smith. † Sir Ralph Abercromby. ‡ Joanna Bailie.

Awakening at the inspirèd strain,
Deemed their own Shakespeare lived again.”—

Thy friendship thus thy judgment wronging,
With praises not to me belonging,
In task more meet for mightiest powers,
Wouldst thou engage my thriftless hours.
But say, my Erskine, hast thou weighed
That secret power by all obeyed,
Which warps not less the passive mind,
Its source concealed or undefined ;
Whether an impulse, that has birth
Soon as the infant wakes on earth,
One with our feelings and our powers,
And rather part of us than ours ;
Or whether fitlier termed the sway
Of habit formed in early day ?
Howe’er derived, its force confessed
Rules with despotic sway the breast,
And drags us on by viewless chain,
While taste and reason plead in vain.
Look east, and ask the Belgian why,
Beneath Batavia’s sultry sky,
He seeks not eager to inhale
The freshness of the mountain gale,
Content to rear his whitened wall
Beside the dank and dull canal ?
He’ll say, from youth he loved to see
The white sail gliding by the tree.—
Or see yon weather-beaten hind,
Whose sluggish herds before him wind,
Whose tattered plaid and rugged cheek
His northern clime and kindred speak ;
Through England’s laughing meads he goes,
And England’s wealth around him flows :
Ask, if it would content him well,
At ease in these gay plains to dwell,
Where hedgerows spread a verdant screen,
And spires and forests intervene,
And the neat cottage peeps between ?

No ! not for these will he exchange
His dark Lochaber's boundless range,
Nor for fair Devon's meads forsake
Bennevis grey and Garry's lake.

Thus, while I ape the measure wild
Of tales that charmed me yet a child,
Rude though they be, still with the chime,
Return the thoughts of early time ;
And feelings, roused in life's first day,
Glow in the line, and prompt the lay.
Then rise those crags, that mountain tower,
Which charmed my fancy's wakening hour.
Though no broad river swept along,
To claim, perchance, heroic song ;
Though sighed no groves in summer gale,
To prompt of love a softer tale ;
Though scarce a puny streamlet's speed
Claimed homage from a shepherd's reed,
Yet was poetic impulse given,
By the green hill and clear blue heaven.
It was a barren scene, and wild,
Where naked cliffs were rudely piled ;
But ever and anon between
Lay velvet tufts of loveliest green ;
And well the lonely infant knew
Recesses where the wall-flower grew,
And honeysuckle loved to crawl
Up the low crag and ruined wall,
I deemed such nooks the sweetest shade
The sun in all its round surveyed ;
And still I thought that shattered tower *
The mightiest work of human power ;
And marvelled, as the aged hind
With some strange tale bewitched my mind,
Of forayers, who, with headlong force,
Down from that strength had spurred their horse,
Their Southern rapine to renew
Far in the distant Cheviots blue,

* Smailholm Tower, in Berwickshire.

And, home returning, filled the hall
With revel, wassel-rout, and brawl.
Methought that still with trump and clang
The gateway's broken arches rang ;
Methought grim features, seamed with scars,
Glared through the window's rusty bars.
And ever, by the winter hearth,
Old tales I heard of woe or mirth,
Of lovers' slights, of ladies' charms,
Of witches' spells, of warriors' arms ;
Of patriot battles, won of old
By Wallace wight and Bruce the bold ;
Of later fields of feud and fight,
When, pouring from their Highland height,
The Scottish clans, in headlong sway,
Had swept the scarlet ranks away.
While stretched at length upon the floor,
Again I fought each combat o'er,
Pebbles and shells, in order laid,
The mimic ranks of war displayed ;
And onward still the Scottish Lion bore,
And still the scattered Southron fled before.

Still, with vain fondness, could I trace,
Anew, each kind familiar face,
That brightened at our evening fire ;
From the thatched mansion's grey-haired Sire,*
Wise without learning, plain and good,
And sprung of Scotland's gentler blood ;
Whose eye, in age, quick, clear, and keen,
Showed what in youth its glance had been ;
Whose doom discording neighbours sought,
Content with equity unbought ;
To him the venerable Priest,
Our frequent and familiar guest,
Whose life and manners well could paint
Alike the student and the saint ;
Alas ! whose speech too oft I broke
With gambol rude and timeless joke :

* Robert Scott of Sandyknowes, grandfather of the poet.

For I was wayward, bold, and wild,
A self-willed imp, a grandame's child ;
But half a plague, and half a jest,
Was still endured, beloved, caressed.

From me, thus nurtured, dost thou ask
The classic poet's well-conned task ?
Nay, Erskine, nay—on the wild hill
Let the wild heathbell flourish still ;
Cherish the tulip, prune the vine,
But freely let the woodbine twine,
And leave untrimmed the eglantine :
Nay, my friend, nay—since oft thy praise
Hath given fresh vigour to my lays ;
Since oft thy judgment could refine
My flattened thought or cumbrous line ;
Still kind, as is thy wont, attend,
And in the minstrel spare the friend.
Though wild as cloud, as stream, as gale,
Flow forth, flow unrestrained, my Tale !

CANTO THIRD.

THE HOSTEL, OR INN.

I.

THE livelong day Lord Marmion rode :
The mountain path the Palmer showed ;
By glen and streamlet winded still,
Where stunted birches hid the rill.
They might not choose the lowland road,
For the Merse forayers were abroad,
Who, fired with hate and thirst of prey,
Had scarcely failed to bar their way.
Oft on the trampling band, from crown
Of some tall cliff, the deer looked down ;
On wing of jet, from his repose
In the deep heath, the blackcock rose ;
Sprung from the gorse the timid roe,
Nor waited for the bending bow ;

And when the stony path began,
 By which the naked peak they wan,
 Up flew the snowy ptarmigan.
 The noon had long been passed, before
 They gained the height of Lammermoor ;
 Thence winding down the northern way,
 Before them, at the close of day,
 Old Gifford's towers and hamlet lay.

II.

No summons calls them to the tower,
 To spend the hospitable hour.
 To Scotland's camp the Lord was gone ;
 His cautious dame, in bower alone,
 Dreaded her castle to unclose ;
 So late, to unknown friends or foes.
 On through the hamlet as they paced,
 Before a porch, whose front was graced
 With bush and flagon trimly placed,
 Lord Marmion drew his rein :
 The village inn * seemed large, though rude ;
 Its cheerful fire and hearty food
 Might well relieve his train.
 Down from their seats the horsemen sprung,
 With jingling spurs the courtyard rung ;
 They bind their horses to the stall,
 For forage, food, and firing call,
 And various clamour fills the hall ;
 Weighing the labour with the cost,
 Toils everywhere the bustling host.

III.

Soon, by the chimney's merry blaze,
 Through the rude hostel might you gaze ;
 Might see, where, in dark nook aloof,
 The rafters of the sooty roof,
 Bore wealth of winter cheer ;
 Of sea-fowl dried, and solands store,
 And gammons of the tusky boar,
 And savoury haunch of deer.

* See Note 36.

The chimney arch projected wide ;
Above, around it, and beside,
Were tools for housewives' hand :
Nor wanted, in that martial day,
The implements of Scottish fray,
The buckler, lance, and brand.
Beneath its shade, the place of state,
On oaken settle Marmion sate,
And viewed, around the blazing hearth,
His followers mix in noisy mirth ;
Whom with brown ale, in jolly tide,
From ancient vessels ranged aside,
Full actively their host supplied.

IV.

Theirs was the glee of martial breast,
And laughter theirs at little jest ;
And oft Lord Marmion deigned to aid,
And mingle in the mirth they made :
For though, with men of high degree,
The proudest of the proud was he,
Yet, trained in camps, he knew the art
To win the soldier's hardy heart.
They love a captain to obey,
Boisterous as March, yet fresh as May ;
With open hand, and brow as free,
Lover of wine and minstrelsy,
Ever the first to scale a tower,
As venturous in a lady's bower :—
Such buxom chief shall lead his host
From India's fires to Zembla's frost.

V.

Resting upon his pilgrim staff,
Right opposite the Palmer stood ;
His thin dark visage seen but half,
Half hidden by his hood.
Still fixed on Marmion was his look,
Which he, who ill such gaze could brook,

Strove by a frown to quell ;
But not for that, though more than once
Full met their stern encountering glance,
The Palmer's visage fell.

VI.

By fits less frequent from the crowd
Was heard the burst of laughter loud ;
For still, as squire and archer stared
On that dark face and matted beard,
Their glee and game declined.
All gazed at length in silence drear,
Unbroke, save when in comrade's ear
Some yeoman, wondering in his fear,
Thus whispered forth his mind :—
“ Saint Mary ! saw'st thou e'er such sight ?
How pale his cheek, his eye how bright,
Whene'er the firebrand's fickle light
Glances beneath his cowl !
Full on our Lord he sets his eye ;
For his best palfrey, would not I
Endure that sullen scowl.”—

VII.

But Marmion, as to chase the awe
Which thus had quelled their hearts, who saw
The ever-varying firelight show
That figure stern and face of woe,
Now called upon a squire :—
“ Fitz-Eustace, know'st thou not some lay,
To speed the lingering night away ?
We slumber by the fire.”—

VIII.

“ So please you,” thus the youth rejoined,
“ Our choicest minstrel's left behind.
Ill may we hope to please your ear,
Accustomed Constant's strains to hear.
The harp full deftly can he strike,
And wake the lover's lute alike ;

To dear Saint Valentine, no thrush
Sings livelier from a spring-tide bush ;
No nightingale her love-lorn tune
More sweetly warbles to the moon.
Woe to the cause, whate'er it be,
Detains from us his melody,
Lavished on rocks, and billows stern,
Or duller monks of Lindisfarne.
Now must I venture, as I may,
To sing his favourite roundelay."—

IX.

A mellow voice Fitz-Eustace had,
The air he chose was wild and sad.
Such have I heard, in Scottish land,
Rise from the busy harvest band,
When falls before the mountaineer,
On Lowland plains, the ripened ear :
Now one shrill voice the notes prolong,
Now a wild chorus swells the song.
Oft have I listened, and stood still,
As it came softened up the hill,
And deemed it the lament of men
Who languished for their native glen ;
And thought how sad would be such sound,
On Susquehana's swampy ground,
Kentucky's wood-encumbered brake,
Or wild Ontario's boundless lake,
Where heart-sick exiles, in the strain,
Recalled fair Scotland's hills again !

X.

Song.

Where shall the lover rest,
Whom the Fates sever
From his true maiden's breast,
Parted for ever ?
Where, through groves deep and high,
Sounds the far billow,

Where early violets die,
Under the willow.

CHORUS.

Eleu loro, etc. Soft shall be his pillow.

There, through the summer day,
Cool streams are laving ;
There, while the tempests sway,
Scarce are boughs waving ;
There, thy rest shalt thou take,
Parted for ever,
Never again to wake—
Never, O never !

CHORUS.

Eleu loro, etc. Never, O never !

XI.

Where shall the traitor rest,
He, the deceiver,
Who could win maiden's breast,
Ruin, and leave her ?
In the lost battle,
Borne down by the flying,
Where mingles war's rattle
With groans of the dying.

CHORUS.

Eleu loro, etc. There shall he be lying.

Her wing shall the eagle flap
O'er the false-hearted ;
His warm blood the wolf shall lap,
Ere life be parted.
Shame and dishonour sit
By his grave ever ;
Blessing shall hallow it—
Never, O never !

CHORUS.

Eleu loro, etc. Never, O never !

XII.

It ceased, the melancholy sound ;
And silence sunk on all around.
The air was sad ; but sadder still
It fell on Marmion's ear, more
And plained as if disgrace and ill,
And shameful death, were near.
He drew his mantle past his face,
Between it and the band,
And rested with his head a space,
Reclining on his hand.
His thoughts I scan not ; but I ween
That, could their import have been seen,
The meanest groom in all the hall,
That e'er tied courser to a stall,
Would scarce have wished to be their prey,
For Lutterward and Fontenaye.

XIII.

High minds, of native pride and force,
Most deeply feel thy pangs, Remorse !
Fear, for their scourge, mean villains have,
Thou art the torturer of the brave !
Yet fatal strength they boast to steel
Their minds to bear the wounds they feel ;
Even while they writhe beneath the smart
Of civil conflict in the heart.
For soon Lord Marmion raised his head,
And, smiling, to Fitz-Eustace said :—
“ Is it not strange, that, as ye sung,
Seemed in mine ear a death-peal rung,
Such as in nunneries they toll
For some departing sister's soul ?
Say, what may this portend ? ”—
Then first the Palmer silence broke,
(The livelong day he had not spoke,)
“ The death of a dear friend.” *

* See Note 37.

XIV.

Marmion, whose steady heart and eye
Ne'er changed in worst extremity ;
Marmion, whose soul could scanty brook,
Even from his King, a haughty look ;
Whose accent of command controlled,
In camps, the boldest of the bold—
Thought, look, and utterance failed him now,
Fallen was his glance, and flushed his brow :

For either in the tone,
Or something in the Palmer's look,
So full upon his conscience strook,
That answer he found none.
Thus oft it haps, that when within
They shrink at sense of secret sin,
A feather daunts the brave ;
A fool's wild speech confounds the wise,
And proudest princes veil their eyes
Before their meanest slave.

XV.

Well might he falter !—By his aid
Was Constance Beverley betrayed.
Not that he augured of the doom
Which on the living closed the tomb ;
But tired to hear the desperate maid
Threaten by turns, beseech, upbraid ;
And wroth because, in wild despair,
She practised on the life of Clare ;
Its fugitive the Church he gave,
Though not a victim, but a slave ;
And deemed restraint in convent strange
Would hide her wrongs, and her revenge.
Himself, proud Henry's favourite peer,
Held Romish thunders idle fear,
Secure his pardon he might hold
For some slight mulct of penance-gold.
Thus judging, he gave secret way,
When the stern priests surprised their prey.

His train but deemed the favourite page
Was left behind, to spare his age ;
Or other if they deemed, none dared
To mutter what he thought and heard :
Woe to the vassal who durst pry
Into Lord Marmion's privacy !

XVI.

His conscience slept—he deemed her well,
And safe secured in distant cell.
But, wakened by her favourite lay,
And that strange Palmer's boding say,
That fell so ominous and drear
Full on the object of his fear,
To aid Remorse's venom'd throes,
Dark tales of convent vengeance rose ;
And Constance, late betrayed and scorned,
All lovely on his soul returned—
Lovely as when, at treacherous call,
She left her convent's peaceful wall,
Crimsoned with shame, with terror mute,
Dreading alike escape, pursuit,
Till love, victorious o'er alarms,
Hid fears and blushes in his arms.

XVII.

" Alas ! " he thought, " how changed that mien !
How changed those timid looks have been,
Since years of guilt, and of disguise,
Have steeled her brow and armed her eyes !
No more of virgin terror speaks
The blood that mantles in her cheeks ;
Fierce, and unfeminine, are there
Frenzy for joy, for grief despair ;
And I the cause—for whom were given
Her peace on earth, her hopes in heaven !—
Would," thought he, as the picture grows,
" I on its stalk had left the rose !

Oh, why should man's success remove
The very charms that wake his love !—
Her convent's peaceful solitude
Is now a prison harsh and rude ;
And, pent within the narrow cell,
How will her spirit chafe and swell !
How brook the stern monastic laws !
The penance how—and I the cause !
Vigil and scourge—perchance even worse !”—
And twice he rose to cry, “To horse !”
And twice his Sovereign's mandate came,
Like damp upon a kindling flame ;
And twice he thought, “Gave I not charge
She should be safe, though not at large ?
They durst not, for their island, shred
One golden ringlet from her head.”—

XVIII.

While thus in Marmion's bosom strove
Repentance and reviving love,
Like whirlwinds, whose contending sway
I've seen Loch Vennachar obey,
Their Host the Palmer's speech had heard,
And, talkative, took up the word :—
“Ay, reverend Pilgrim, you who stray
From Scotland's simple land away,
To visit realms afar,
Full often learn the art to know
Of future weal, or future woe,
By word, or sign, or star ;
Yet might a knight his fortune hear,
If, knight-like, he despises fear,
Not far from hence ;—if fathers old
Aright our hamlet legend told.”—
These broken words the menials move,
(For marvels still the vulgar love ;)
And Marmion giving license cold,
His tale the Host thus gladly told :—

XIX.

The Host's Tale:

"A clerk could tell what years have flown
Since Alexander filled our throne,
(Third monarch of that warlike name,)
And eke the time when here he came
To seek Sir Hugo, then our lord.
A braver never drew a sword;
A wiser never, at the hour
Of midnight, spoke the word of power;
The same, whom ancient records call
The founder of the Goblin-Hall.*
I would, Sir Knight, your longer stay
Gave you that cavern to survey.
Of lofty roof, and ample size,
Beneath the castle deep it lies:
To hew the living rock profound,
The floor to pave, the arch to round,
There never toiled a mortal arm,
It all was wrought by word and charm;
And I have heard my grandsire say,
That the wild clamour and affray
Of those dread artisans of hell,
Who laboured under Hugo's spell,
Sounded as loud as ocean's war,
Among the caverns of Dunbar."

XX.

"The King Lord Gifford's castle sought,
Deep labouring with uncertain thought;
Even then he mustered all his host,
To meet upon the western coast;
For Norse and Danish galleys plied
Their oars within the frith of Clyde.
There floated Haco's banner trim,
Above Norweyan warriors grim,†
Savage of heart, and large of limb;
Threatening both continent and isle,
Bute, Arran, Cunninghame, and Kyle.

* See Note 38.

† See Note 39.

Lord Gifford, deep beneath the ground,
 Heard Alexander's bugle sound,
 And tarried not his garb to change,
 But, in his wizard habit strange,*
 Came forth—a quaint and fearful sight !
 His mantle lined with fox-skins white ;
 His high and wrinkled forehead bore
 A pointed cap, such as of yore
 Clerks say that Pharaoh's Magi wore ;
 His shoes were marked with cross and spell ;
 Upon his breast a pentacle ; †
 His zone, of virgin parchment thin,
 Or, as some tell, of dead man's skin,
 Bore many a planetary sign,
 Combust, and retrograde, and trine ;
 And in his hand he held prepared
 A naked sword without a guard.

XXI.

“ Dire dealings with the fiendish race
 Had marked strange lines upon his face ;
 Vigil and fast had worn him grim,
 His eyesight dazzled seemed, and dim,
 As one unused to upper day ;
 Even his own menials with dismay
 Beheld, Sir Knight, the grisly Sire,
 In his unwonted wild attire ;—
 Unwonted, for traditions run,
 He seldom thus beheld the sun.—
 ‘ I know,’ he said—his voice was hoarse,
 And broken seemed its hollow force—
 ‘ I know the cause, although untold,
 Why the King seeks his vassal's hold :
 Vainly from me my liege would know
 His kingdom's future weal or woe ;
 But yet, if strong his arm and heart,
 His courage may do more than art.

XXII.

“ ‘ Of middle air the demons proud,
 Who ride upon the racking cloud,

* See Note 40.

† See Note 41.

Can read, in fixed or wandering star,
The issue of events afar ;
But still their sullen aid withhold,
Save when by mightier force controlled.
Such late I summoned to my hall ;
And though so potent was the call,
That scarce the deepest nook of hell
I deemed a refuge from the spell,
Yet, obstinate in silence still,
The haughty demon mocks my skill.
But thou—who little know'st thy might,
As born upon that blessed night,
When yawning graves, and dying groan,
Proclaimed hell's empire overthrown—*
With untaught valour shalt compel
Response denied to magic spell.'—
'Gramercy,' quoth our Monarch free,
Place him but front to front with me,
And, by this good and honoured brand,
The gift of Cœur-de-Lion's hand,
Soothly I swear that, tide what tide,
The demon shall a buffet bide.'—
His bearing bold the wizard viewed,
And thus, well pleased, his speech renewed :—
'There spoke the blood of Malcolm !—mark :
Forth pacing hence, at midnight dark,
The rampart seek, whose circling crown
Crests the ascent of yonder down :
A southern entrance shalt thou find ;
There halt, and there thy bugle wind,
And trust thine elfin foe to see,
In guise of thy worst enemy :
Couch then thy lance, and spur thy steed—
Upon him ! and Saint George to speed !
If he go down, thou soon shalt know
Whate'er these airy sprites can show ;—
If thy heart fail thee in the strife,
I am no warrant for thy life.'

* See Note 42.

XXIII.

" Soon as the midnight bell did ring,
 Alone, and armed, forth rode the King
 To that old camp's deserted round ;—
 Sir Knight, you well might mark the mound,
 Left hand the town,—the Pictish race
 The trench, long since, in blood did trace ;
 The moor around^d is brown and bare,
 The space within is green and fair.
 The spot our village children know,
 For there the earliest wild-flowers grow ;
 But woe betide the wandering wight
 That treads its circle in the night !
 The breadth across, a bowshot clear,
 Gives ample space for full career ;
 Opposed to the four points of heaven,
 By four deep gaps are entrance given.
 The southernmost our Monarch passed,
 Halted, and blew a gallant blast ;
 And on the north, within the ring,
 Appeared the form of England's King ;
 Who then, a thousand leagues afar,
 In Palestine waged holy war.
 Yet arms like England's did he wield,
 Alike the leopards in the shield,
 Alike his Syrian courser's frame,
 The rider's length of limb the same :
 Long afterwards did Scotland know,
 Fell Edward * was her deadliest foe.

XXIV.

" The vision made our Monarch start,
 But soon he manned his noble heart,
 And in the first career they ran,
 The Elfin Knight fell, horse and man ;
 Yet did a splinter of his lance
 Through Alexander's visor glance,
 And razed the skin—a puny wound.
 The King, light leaping to the ground,

* Edward I., surnamed Longshanks.

With naked blade his phantom foe
 Compelled the future war to show.
 Of Largs he saw the glorious plain,
 Where still gigantic bones remain,
 Memorial of the Danish war;
 Himself he saw, amid the field,
 On high his brandished war-axe wield,
 And strike proud Haco from his car,
 While, all around the shadowy Kings,
 Denmark's grim ravens cowered their wings.
 'Tis said that, in that awful night,
 Remoter visions met his sight,
 Foreshowing future conquests far,
 When our sons' sons wage northern war:
 A royal city, tower and spire,
 Reddened the midnight sky with fire;
 And shouting crews her navy bore,
 Triumphant, to the victor shore.*
 Such signs may learned clerks explain,
 They pass the wit of simple swain.

THE BATTLE OF LARGS, 1185.
 Canto III. XXV. Lines 1-10.

"The joyful King turned home again,
 Headed his host, and quelled the Dane;
 But yearly, when returned the night
 Of his strange combat with the sprite,
 His wound must bleed and smart;
 Lord Gifford then would gibing say,
 'Bold as ye were, my liege, ye pay
 The penance of your start,'
 Long since, beneath Dunfermline's nave,
 King Alexander fills his grave,
 Our Lady give him rest!
 Yet still the knightly spear and shield
 The Elfin Warrior doth wield,
 Upon the brown hill's breast; †
 And many a knight hath proved his chance,
 In the charmed ring to break a lance,
 But all have foully sped;

* An allusion to the Battle of Copenhagen, 1801.

† See Note 43.

Save two, as legends tell, and they
Were Wallace wight, and Gilbert Hay.—
Gentles, my tale is said.”—

XXVI.

The quaighs * were deep, the liquor strong,
And on the tale the yeoman throng
Had made a comment sage and long,
But Marmion gave a sign,
And, with their lord, the squires retire.
The rest, around the hostel fire,
Their drowsy limbs recline ;
For pillow, underneath each head,
The quiver and the targe were laid.
Deep slumbering on the hostel floor,
Oppressed with toil and ale, they snore ;
The dying flame, in fitful change,
Threw on the group its shadows strange.

XXVII.

Apart, and nestling in the hay
Of a waste loft, Fitz-Eustace lay ;
Scarce, by the pale moonlight, was seen
The foldings of his mantle green :
Lightly he dreamt, as youth will dream,
Of sport by thicket, or by stream,
Of hawk or hound, of ring or glove,
Or, lighter yet, of lady's love.
A cautious tread his slumber broke,
And, close beside him, when he woke,
In moonbeam half, and half in gloom,
Stood a tall form, with nodding plume ;
But, ere his dagger Eustace drew,
His master Marmion's voice he knew.

XXVIII.

—“ Fitz-Eustace ! rise—I cannot rest ;
Yon churl's wild legend haunts my breast,
And graver thoughts have chafed my mood :
The air must cool my feverish blood ;

* Quaigh, a wooden cup, composed of staves hooped together.

And fain would I ride forth, to see,
The scene of Elfin chivalry.
Arise, and saddle me my steed ;
And, gentle Eustace, take good heed
Thou dost not rouse these drowsy slaves ;
I would not that the prating knaves
Had cause for saying, o'er their ale,
That I could credit such a tale."—
Then softly down the steps they slid,
Eustace the stable-door undid,
And, darkling, Marmion's steed arrayed,
While, whispering, thus the Baron said :—

XXIX.

" Didst never, good my youth, hear tell,
That on the hour when I was born,
Saint George, who graced my sire's chapelle,
Down from his steed of marble fell,
A weary wight forlorn ?
The flattering chaplains all agree
The champion left his steed to me.
I would, the omen's truth to show,
That I could meet this Elfin Foe !
Blithe would I battle, for the right
To ask one question at the sprite :—
Vain thought ! for elves, if elves there be,
An empty race, by fount or sea,
To dashing waters dance and sing,
Or round the green oak wheel their ring."—
Thus speaking, he his steed bestrode,
And from the hostel slowly rode.

XXX.

Fitz-Eustace followed him abroad,
And marked him pace the village road,
And listened to his horse's tramp,
Till, by the lessening sound,
He judged that of the Pictish camp
Lord Marmion sought the round.

Wonder it seemed, in the squire's eyes,
 That one, so wary held; and wise,—
 Of whom 'twas said, he scarce received
 For gospel, what the Church believed,—
 Should, stirred by idle tale,
 Ride forth in silence of the night,
 As hoping half to meet a sprite,
 Arrayed in plate and mail.
 For little did Fitz-Eustace know,
 That passions, in contending flow,
 Unfix the strongest mind;
 Wearied from doubt to doubt to flee,
 We welcome fond credulity,
 Guide confident, though blind.

XXXI.

Little for this Fitz-Eustace cared,
 But, patient, waited till he heard,
 At distance, pricked to utmost speed,
 The foot-tramp of a flying steed,
 Come town-ward rushing on :
 First, dead, as if on turf it trode,
 Then clattering on the village road,—
 In other pace than forth he yode,*
 Returned Lord Marmion.
 Down hastily he sprung from selle,
 And, in his haste, well-nigh he fell;
 To the squire's hand the rein he threw,
 And spoke no word as he withdrew :
 But yet the moonlight did betray,
 The falcon crest was soiled with clay;
 And plainly might Fitz-Eustace see,
 By stains upon the charger's knee,
 And his left side, that on the moor
 He had not kept his footing sure.
 Long musing on these wondrous signs,
 At length to rest the squire reclines,
 Broken and short; for still, between,
 Would dreams of terror intervene :

* Yode, used by old poets for went.

Eustace did ne'er so blithely mark
The first notes of the morning lark.

INTRODUCTION TO CANTO FOURTH.

TO JAMES SKENE, ESQ.*

Ashestiel, Eddrick Forest.

AN ancient minstrel sagely said,
"Where is the life which late we led?"—
That motley clown, in Arden wood,
Whom humorous Jacques with envy viewed,
Not even that clown could amplify
On this trite text, so long as 'I.
Eleven years we now may tell
Since we have known each other well;
Since, riding side by side, our hand
First drew the voluntary brand;
And sure, through many a varied scene,
Unkindness never came between.
Away these wingèd years have flown,
To join the mass of ages gone:
And though deep marked, like all below,
With chequered shades of joy and woe;
Though thou o'er realms and seas hast ranged,
Marked cities lost and empires changed,
While here, at home, my narrower ken
Somewhat of manners saw, and men;
Though varying wishes, hopes, and fears,
Fevered the progress of these years,
Yet now, days, weeks, and months, but seem
The recollection of a dream:
So still we glide down to the sea
Of fathomless eternity.

Even now it scarcely seems a day,
Since first I tuned this idle lay;

* James Skene, Esq., of Rubislaw, Aberdeenshire, was cornet in the Royal Edinburgh Light Horse Volunteers, of which Sir Walter Scott was quarter-master.

A task so often thrown aside,
When leisure graver cares denied,
That now, November's dreary gale,
Whose voice inspired my opening tale,
That same November gale once more
Whirls the dry leaves on Yarrow shore ;
Their vexed boughs streaming to the sky,
Once more our naked birches sigh ;
And Blackhouse heights, and Ettrick Pen,
Have donned their wintry shrouds again ;
And mountain dark, and flooded mead,
Bid us forsake the banks of Tweed.
Earlier than wont along the sky,
Mixed with the rack, the snow-mists fly :
The shepherd, who, in summer sun,
Had something of our envy won,
As thou with pencil, I with pen,
The features traced of hill and glen ;
He who, outstretched the livelong day,
At ease among the heath-flowers lay ;
Viewed the light clouds with vacant look,
Or slumbered o'er his tattered book,
Or idly busied him to guide
His angle o'er the lessened tide ;—
At midnight now, the snowy plain
Finds sterner labour for the swain.

When red hath set the beamless sun,
Through heavy vapours dank and dun ;
When the tired ploughman, dry and warm,
Hears, half asleep, the rising storm
Hurling the hail, and sleeted rain,
Against the casement's tinkling pane ;
The sounds that drive wild deer, and fox,
To shelter in the brake and rocks,
Are warnings which the shepherd ask
To dismal and to dangerous task.
Oft he looks forth, and hopes, in vain,
The blast may sink in mellowing rain ;

Till, dark above, and white below,
Decided drives the flaky snow,
And forth the hardy swain must go.
Long, with dejected look and whine,
To leave the hearth his dogs repine ;
Whistling and cheering them to aid,
Around his back he wreathes the plaid :
His flock he gathers, and he guides
To open downs, and mountain sides,
Where, fiercest though the tempest blow,
Least deeply lies the drift below.
The blast, that whistles o'er the fells,
Stiffens his locks to icicles ;
Oft he looks back, while streaming far,
His cottage window seems a star—
Loses its feeble gleam—and then
Turns patient to the blast again,
And, facing to the tempest's sweep,
Drives through the gloom his lagging sheep.
If fails his heart, if his limbs fail,
Benumbing death is in the gale ;
His paths, his landmarks, all unknown,
Close to the hut, no more his own,
Close to the aid he sought in vain,
The morn may find the stiffened swain.*
The widow sees, at dawning pale,
His orphans raise their feeble wail ;
And, close beside him in the snow,
Poor Yarrow, partner of their woe,
Couches upon his master's breast,
And licks his cheek, to break his rest.

Who envies now the shepherd's lot,
His healthy fare, his rural cot,
His summer couch by greenwood tree,
His rustic kirn's† loud revelry,
His native hill-notes, tuned on high,
To Marion of the blithesome eye ;

* See Note 44.

† Kirn, the Scottish harvest-home.

His crook, his scrip, his oaten reed,
And all Arcadia's golden creed?

Changes not so with us, my Skene,
Of human life the varying scene?
Our youthful summer oft we see
Dance by on wings of game and glee;
While the dark storm reserves its rage,
Against the winter of our age:
As he, the ancient Chief of Troy,
His manhood spent in peace and joy;
But Grecian fires, and loud alarms,
Called ancient Priam forth to arms.
Then happy those—since each must drain
His share of pleasure, share of pain—
Then happy those, beloved of Heaven,
To whom the mingled cup is given;
Whose lenient sorrows find relief,
Whose joys are chastened by their grief.
And such a lot, my Skene, was thine,
When thou of late wert doomed to twine,
Just when thy bridal hour was by,
The cypress with the myrtle tie;
Just on thy bride her Sire had smiled,
And blessed the union of his child,
When love must change its joyous cheer,
And wipe affection's filial tear:
Nor did the actions next his end
Speak more the father than the friend.
Scarce had lamented Forbes* paid
The tribute to his Minstrel's shade—
The tale of friendship scarce was told,
Ere the narrator's heart was cold:
Far may we search before we find
A heart so manly and so kind!
But not around his honoured urn
Shall friends alone and kindred mourn:
The thousand eyes his care had dried,
Pour at his name a bitter tide;

* See Note 45.

And frequent falls the grateful dew,
For benefits the world ne'er knew.
If mortal charity dare claim
The Almighty's attributed name,
Inscribe above his mouldering clay,
"The widow's shield, the orphan's stay."
Nor, though it wake thy sorrow, deem
My verse intrudes on this sad theme;
For sacred was the pen that wrote,
"Thy father's friend forget thou not :"
And grateful title may I plead,
For many a kindly word and deed,
To bring my tribute to his grave,—
'Tis little, but 'tis all I have.

To thee, perchance, this rambling strain
Recalls our summer walks again ;
When doing nought—and, to speak true,
Not anxious to find aught to do—
The wild unbounded hills we ranged,
While oft our talk its topic changed,
And, desultory, as our way,
Ranged, unconfined, from grave to gay.
Even when it flagged, as oft will chance,
No effort made to break its trance,
We could right pleasantly pursue
Our sports in social silence too ;
Thou gravely labouring to portray
The blighted oak's fantastic spray ;
I spelling o'er, with much delight,
The legend of that antique knight,
Tirante by name, yclept the White.
At either's feet a trusty squire,
Pandour and Camp,* with eyes of fire,
Jealous, each other's motions viewed,
And scarce suppressed their ancient feud.
The laverock † whistled from the cloud ;
The stream was lively, but not loud ;

* Camp was a favourite dog of the poet's, a bull-terrier of extraordinary sagacity.

† Laverock, the lark.

From the white thorn the May-flower shed
 Its dewy fragrance round our head :
 Not Ariel lived more merrily
 Under the blossomed bough, than we.

And blithesome nights, too, have been ours,
 When Winter stripped the summer's bowers :
 Careless we heard, what now I hear,
 The wild blast sighing deep and drear,
 When fires were bright, and lamps beamed gay,
 And ladies tuned the lovely lay ;
 And he was held a laggard soul
 Who shunned to quaff the sparkling bowl.
 Then he, whose absence we deplore,*
 Who breathes the gales of Devon's shore,
 The longer missed, bewailed the more ;
 And thou, and I, and dear-loved R——,†
 And one whose name I may not say—
 For not Mimosa's tender tree
 Shrinks sooner from the touch than he—
 In merry chorus well combined,
 With laughter drowned the whistling wind.
 Mirth was within, and Care without
 Might gnaw her nails to hear our shout.
 Not but amid the buxom scene
 Some grave discourse might intervene—
 Of the good horse that bore him best,
 His shoulder, hoof, and arching crest :
 For, like mad Tom's,‡ our chiefest care,
 Was horse to ride and weapon wear.
 Such nights we've had ; and, though the game
 Of manhood be more sober tame,
 And though the field-day, or the drill,
 Seem less important now—yet still
 Such may we hope to share again.
 The sprightly thought inspires my strain !
 And mark, how, like a horseman true,
 Lord Marmion's march I thus renew.

CANTO FOURTH.

THE CAMP.

I.

EUSTACE, I said, did blithely mark
The first notes of the merry lark.
The lark sung shrill, the cock he crew,
And loudly Marmion's bugles blew,
And with their light and lively call
Brought groom and yeoman to the stall.

Whistling they came, and free of heart :

But soon their mood was changed ;

Complaint was heard on every part,

Of something disarranged.

Some clamoured loud for armour lost ;

Some brawled and wrangled with the host ;

"By Becket's bones," cried one, "I fear,
That some false Scot has stolen my spear!"—

Young Blount, Lord Marmion's second squire.

Found his steed wet with sweat and mire,

Although the rated horse-boy sware

Last night he dressed him sleek and fair.

While chafed the impatient squire like thunder.

Old Hubert shouts, in fear and wonder,

"Help, gentle Blount ! help, comrades all !

Bevis lies dying in his stall !

To Marmion who the plight dare tell,

Of the good steed he loves so well ?"—

Gaping for fear and ruth, they saw

The charger panting on his straw ;

Till one, who would seem wisest, cried,

"What else but evil could betide,

With that cursed Palmer for our guide ?

Better we had through mire and bush

Been lanthorn-led by Friar Rush." *

* See Note 46.

II.

Fitz-Eustace, who the cause but guessed,
Nor wholly understood,
His comrades' clamorous plaints suppressed ;
He knew Lord Marmion's mood.
Him, ere he issued forth, he sought,
And found deep plunged in gloomy thought,
And did his tale display
Simply, as if he knew of nought
To cause such disarray.
Lord Marmion gave attention cold,
Nor marvelled at the wonders told—
Passed them as accidents of course,
And bade his clarions sound to horse.

III.

Young Henry Blount, meanwhile, the cost
Had reckoned with their Scottish host ;
And, as the charge he cast and paid,
" Ill thou deserv'st thy hire," he said.
" Dost see, thou knave, my horse's plight ?
Fairies have ridden him all the night,
And left him in a foam !
I trust that soon a conjuring band,
With English cross and blazing brand,
Shall drive the devils from this land,
To their infernal home ;
For in this haunted den, I trow,
All night they trampled to and fro."—
The laughing host looked on the hire :
" Gramercy, gentle Southern squire,
And if thou comest among the rest,
With Scottish broadsword to be blest,
Sharp be the brand, and sure the blow,
And short the pang to undergo."—
Here stayed their talk, for Marmion
Gave now the signal to set on.
The Palmer showing forth the way,
They journeyed all the morning day.

: IV

The greensward way was smooth and good,
Through Humble's and through Saltoun's wood ;
A forest glade, which, varying still,
Here gave a view of dale and hill ;
There narrower closed, till overhead
A vaulted screen the branches made.
"A pleasant path," Fitz-Eustace said ;
"Such as where errant knights might see
Adventures of high chivalry ;
Might meet some damsel flying fast,
With hair unbound and looks aghast ;
And smooth and level course were here,
In her defence to break a spear.
Here, too, are twilight nooks and dells ;
And oft, in such, the story tells,
The damsel kind, from danger freed,
Did grateful pay her champion's meed."
He spoke to cheer Lord Marmion's mind :
Perchance to show his lore designed ;
For Eustace much had pored
Upon a huge romantic tome,
In the hall-window of his home,
Imprinted at the antique dome
Of Caxton, or De Worde.
Therefore he spoke,—but spoke in vain,
For Marmion answered nought again.

V.

Now sudden distant trumpets shrill,
In notes prolonged by wood and hill,
Were heard to echo far ;
Each ready archer grasped his bow,
But by the flourish soon they know,
They breathed no point of war.
Yet cautious, as in foeman's land,
Lord Marmion's order speeds the band,
Some opener ground to gain ;
And scarce a furlong had they rode,

When thinner trees, receding, showed
A little woodland plain.
Just in that advantageous glade
The halting troop a line had made,
As forth from the opposing shade
Issued a gallant train.

VI.

First came the trumpets, at whose clang
So late the forest echoes rang ;
On prancing steeds they forward pressed,
With scarlet mantle, azure vest ;
Each at his trump a banner wore,
Which Scotland's royal scutcheon bore ;
Heralds and pursuivants, by name
Bute, Islay, Marchmont, Rothesay, came,
In painted tabards, proudly showing
Gules, Argent, Or, and Azure glowing,
Attendant on a King-at-arms,
Whose hand the armorial truncheon held,
That feudal strife had often quelled,
When wildest its alarms.

VII.

He was a man of middle age ;
In aspect manly, grave, and sage,
As on King's errand come ;
But in the glances of his eye,
A penetrating, keen, and sly
Expression found its home ;
The flash of that satiric rage,
Which, bursting on the early stage,
Branded the vices of the age,
And broke the keys of Rome.
On milk-white palfrey forth he paced ;
His cap of maintenance was graced
With the proud heron-plume.
From his steed's shoulder, loin, and breast,
Silk housings swept the ground,
With Scotland's arms, device, and crest,
Embroidered round and round.

The double tressure might you see,
First, by Achaius borne,
The thistle and the fleur-de-lis,
And gallant unicorn.
So bright the King's armorial coat,
That scarce the dazzled eye could note,
In living colours, blazoned brave,
The Lion, which his title gave.
A train, which well beseemed his state,
But all unarmed, around him wait.
Still is thy name in high account,
And still thy verse has charms,
Sir David Lindesay of the Mount,
Lord Lion King-at-arms!*

VIII.

Down from his horse did Marmion spring
Soon as he saw the Lion-King :
For well the stately Baron knew,
To him such courtesy was due,
Whom royal James himself had crowned,
And on his temples placed the round
Of Scotland's ancient diadem ;
And wet his brow with hallowed wine,
And on his finger given to shine
The emblematic gem.
Their mutual greetings duly made,
The Lion thus his message said :—
“ Though Scotland's King hath deeply swore
Ne'er to knit faith with Henry more,
And strictly hath forbid resort
From England to his royal court,
Yet—for he knows Lord Marmion's name,
And honours much his warlike fame—
My liege hath deemed it shame, and lack
Of courtesy, to turn him back ;
And, by his order, I, your guide,
Must lodging fit and fair provide,
Till finds King James meet time to see
The flower of English chivalry.”—

* See Note 47.

IX.

Though inly chafed at this delay,
 Lord Marmion bears it as he may.
 The Palmer, his mysterious guide,
 Beholding thus his place supplied,
 Sought to take leave, in vain :
 Strict was the Lion-King's command,
 That none who rode in Marmion's band
 Should sever from the train :
 " England has here enow of spies
 In Lady Heron's witching eyes ;"
 To Marchmount thus, apart, he said,
 But fair pretext to Marmion made.
 The right-hand path they now decline,
 And trace against the stream the Tyne.

X.

At length up that wild dale they wind,
 Where Crichtoun Castle* crowns the bank ;
 For there the Lion's care assigned
 A lodging meet for Marmion's rank.
 That Castle rises on the steep
 Of the green vale of Tyne ;
 And far beneath, where slow they creep
 From pool to eddy, dark and deep,
 Where alders moist, and willows weep,
 You hear her streams repine.
 The towers in different ages rose ;
 Their various architecture shows
 The builders' various hands ;
 A mighty mass, that could oppose,
 When deadliest hatred fired its foes,
 The vengeful Douglas bands.

XI.

Crichtoun ! though now thy miry court
 But pens the lazy steer and sheep,
 Thy turrets rude, and tottered Keep,
 Have been the minstrel's loved resort.

* See Note 48.

Oft have I traced, within thy fort,
Of mouldering shields the mystic sense,
Scutcheons of honour, or pretence,
Quartered in old armorial sort,
Remains of rude magnificence :
Nor wholly yet hath time defaced
Thy lordly gallery fair ;
Nor yet the stony cord unbraced,
Whose twisted knots, with roses laced,
Adorn thy ruined stair.
Still rises unimpaired, below,
The courtyard's graceful portico ;
Above its cornice, row and row
Of fair hewn facets richly show
Their pointed diamond form,
Though there but houseless cattle go,
To shield them from the storm.
And, shuddering, still may we explore,
Where oft whilom were captives pent,
The darkness of thy Massy-More ; *
Or, from thy grass-grown battlement,
May trace, in undulating line,
The sluggish mazes of the Tyne.

XII.

Another aspect Crichtoun showed,
As through its portal Marmion rode ;
But yet 'twas melancholy state
Received him at the outer gate ;
For none were in the Castle then
But women, boys, or aged men.
With eyes scarce dried, the sorrowing dame,
To welcome noble Marmion, came ;
Her son, a stripling twelve years old,
Proffered the Baron's rein to hold ;
For each man that could draw a sword
Had marched that morning with their lord,
Earl Adam Hepburn, †—he who died
On Flodden, by his sovereign's side.

* The pit, or prison-vault.

† See Note 49.

Long may his Lady look in vain !
She ne'er shall see his gallant train
Come sweeping back through Crichtoun Dean.
'Twas a brave race, before the name
Of hated Bothwell stained their fame.

XIII.

And here two days did Marmion rest,
With every rite that honour claims,
Attended as the King's own guest,—
Such the command of royal James,
Who marshalled then his land's array
Upon the Boroughmoor that lay.
Perchance he would not foeman's eye
Upon his gathering host should pry,
Till full prepared was every band
To march against the English land.
Here while they dwelt, did Lindesay's wit
Oft cheer the Baron's moodier fit ;
And, in his turn, he knëw to prize
Lord Marmion's powerful mind, and wise,—
Trained in the lore of Rome and Greece,
And policies of war and peace.

XIV.

It chanced, as fell the second night,
That on the battlements they walked,
And, by the slowly fading light,
Of varying topics talked ;
And, unaware, the Herald-bard
Said, Marmion might his toil have spared,
In travelling so far ;
For that a messenger from heaven
In vain to James had counsel given
Against the English war : *
And, closer questioned, thus he told
A tale, which chronicles of old
In Scottish story have enrolled :—

* See Note 50.

XV.

Sir David Lindesay's Tale.

"Of all the palaces so fair
 Built for the royal dwelling,
 In Scotland, far beyond compare
 Linlithgow is excelling;
 And in its park, in jovial June,
 How sweet the merry linnet's tune,
 How blithe the blackbird's lay!
 The wild buckbells * from ferny brake,
 The coot dives merry on the lake,
 The saddest heart might pleasure take
 To see all nature gay;
 But June is to our Sovereign dear
 The heaviest month in all the year:
 Too well his cause of grief you know,—
 June saw his father's overthrow.†
 Woe to the traitors, who could bring
 The princely boy against his King!
 Still in his conscience burns the sting.
 In offices as strict as Lent,
 King James's June is ever spent.

XVI.

"When last this ruthful month was come,
 And in Linlithgow's holy dome
 The King, as wont, was praying;
 While, for his royal father's soul,
 The chanter sung, the bells did toll,
 The Bishop mass was saying—
 For now the year brought round again
 The day the luckless king was slain—
 In Katharine's aisle the Monarch knelt,
 With sackcloth shirt and iron belt,
 And eyes with sorrow streaming;
 Around him, in their stalls of state,
 The Thistle's Knight-Companions sate,
 Their banners o'er them beaming.

* An ancient word for the cry of deer. See Note 51. † See Note 52.

I too was there, and, sooth to tell,
 Bedeafened with the jangling knell,
 Was watching where the sunbeams fell
 Through the stained casement gleaming;
 But while I marked what next befell,
 It seemed as I were dreaming.
 Stepped from the crowd a ghostly wight,
 In azure gown, with cincture white;
 His forehead bald, his head was bare,
 Down hung at length his yellow hair.—
 Now, mock me not, when, good my Lord,
 I pledge to you my knightly word,
 That, when I saw his placid grace,
 His simple majesty of face,
 His solemn bearing, and his pace
 So stately gliding on,—
 Seemed to me ne'er did limner paint
 So just an image of the Saint
 Who propped the Virgin in her faint—
 The loved Apostle John!

XVII.

“He stepped before the Monarch’s chair,
 And stood with rustic plainness there,
 And little reverence made;
 Nor head, nor body, bowed nor bent,
 But on the desk his arm he leant,
 And words like these he said,
 In a low voice, but never tone
 So thrilled through vein, and nerve, and bone:—
 ‘My Mother sent me from afar,
 Sir King, to warn thee not to war,—
 Woe waits on thine array;
 If war thou wilt, of woman fair,
 Her witching wiles and wanton snare,
 James Stuart, doubly warned, beware:
 God keep thee as He may!’—
 The wondering Monarch seemed to seek
 For answer, and found none;

And when he raised his head to speak,
The monitor was gone.
The Marshal and myself had cast
To stop him as he outward passed ;
But, lighter than the whirlwind's blast,
He vanished from our eyes,
Like sunbeam on the billow cast,
That glances but, and dies."—

XVIII.

While Lindesay told this marvel strange,
The twilight was so pale,
He marked not Marmion's colour change,
While listening to the tale :
But, after a suspended pause,
The Baron spoke :—"Of Nature's laws
So strong I held the force,
That never superhuman cause
Could e'er control their course ;
And, three days since, had judged your aim
Was but to make your guest your game.
But I have seen, since past the Tweed,
What much has changed my sceptic creed,
And made me credit aught."—He staid,
And seemed to wish his words unsaid :
But, by that strong emotion pressed,
Which prompts us to unload our breast,
Even when discovery's pain,
To Lindesay did at length unfold
The tale his village host had told,
At Gifford, to his train.
Nought of the Palmer says he there,
And nought of Constance, or of Clare :
The thoughts, which broke his sleep, he seems
To mention but as feverish dreams.

XIX.

"In vain," said he, "to rest I spread
My burning limbs, and couched my head :

Fantastic thoughts returned ;
 And, by their wild dominion led,
 My heart within me burned.
 So sore was the delirious goad,
 I took my steed, and forth I rode,
 And, as the moon shone bright and cold,
 Soon reached the camp upon the wold.
 The southern entrance I passed through,
 And halted, and my bugle blew.
 Methought an answer met my ear ;
 Yet was the blast so low and drear,
 So hollow, and so faintly blown,
 It might be echo of my own.

XX.

“ Thus judging, for a little space
 I listened, ere I left the place ;
 But scarce could trust my eyes,
 Nor yet can think they served me true,
 When sudden in the ring I view,
 In form distinct of shape and hue,
 A mounted champion rise.—
 I’ve fought, Lord-Lion, many a day,
 In single fight and mixed affray,
 And ever, I myself may say,
 Have borne me as a knight ;
 But when this unexpected foe
 Seemed starting from the gulf below—
 I care not though the truth I show—
 I trembled with affright ;
 And as I placed in rest my spear,
 My hand so shook for very fear,
 I scarce could couch it right.

XXI.

“ Why need my tongue the issue tell ?
 We ran our course,—my charger fell ;—
 What could he ’gainst the shock of hell ?—
 I rolled upon the plain.
 High o’er my head, with threatening hand,

The spectre shook his naked brand,—
 Yet did the worst remain;
 My dazzled eyes I upward cast,—
 Not opening hell itself could blast
 Their sight, like what I saw!
 Full on his face the moonbeam strook—
 A face could never be mistook!
 I knew the stern vindictive look,
 And held my breath for awe.
 I saw the face of one who, fled
 To foreign climes, has long been dead,—
 I well believe the last;
 For ne'er, from visor raised, did stare
 A human warrior with a glare
 So grimly and so ghast.
 Thrice o'er my head he shook the blade;
 But when to good Saint George I prayed,
 (The first time e'er I asked his aid,)
 He plunged it in the sheath;
 And, on his courser mounting light,
 He seemed to vanish from my sight:
 The moonbeam drooped, and deepest night
 Sunk down upon the heath.
 'Twere long to tell what cause I have
 To know his face, that met me there,
 Called by his hatred from the grave
 To cumber upper air;
 Dead or alive, good cause had he
 To be my mortal enemy."

XXXII.

marvelled Sir David of the Mount;
 Then, learned in story, 'gan recount
 Such chance had happed of old,
 When once, near Norham, there did fight
 A spectre fell of fiendish might,
 In likeness of a Scottish knight,
 With Brian Bulmer bold,*

* The northern champions of old were accustomed to search for and delight in encounters with such military spectres.

And trained him nigh to disallow
 The aid of his baptismal vow.
 "And such a phantom, too, 'tis said,
 With Highland broadsword, targe, and plaid,
 And fingers red with gore,
 Is seen in Rothiemurcus glade,
 Or where the sable pine-trees shade
 Dark Tomantoul, and Auchnaslaid,
 Dromouchty, or Glenmore.*
 And yet, whate'er such legends say,
 Of warlike demon, ghost, or fay,
 On mountain, moor, or plain,
 Spotless in faith, in bosom bold,
 True son of chivalry should hold
 These midnight terrors vain ;
 For seldom have such spirits power
 To harm, save in the evil hour,
 When guilt we meditate within,
 Or harbour unrepented sin."—
 Lord Marmion turned him half aside,
 And twice to clear his voice he tried,
 Then pressed Sir David's hand,—
 But nought, at length, in answer said ;
 And here their further converse staid,
 Each ordering that his band
 Should bowne them with the rising day,
 To Scotland's camp to take their way,—
 Such was the King's command.

XXIII.

Early they took Dun-Edin's road,
 And I could trace each step they trode ;
 Hill, brook, nor dell, nor rock, nor stone,
 Lies on the path to me unknown.
 Much might it boast of storied lore ;
 But, passing such digression o'er,
 Suffice it that the route was laid
 Across the furzy hills of Braid.

* See the traditions concerning Bulmer, and the spectre called Lham dearg, or Bloody-hand, in "Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border."

They passed the glen and scanty rill,
And climbed the opposing bank, until
They gained the top of Blackford Hill.

XXIV.

Blackford ! on whose uncultured breast,
Among the broom, and thorn, and whin,
A truant-boy, I sought the nest,
Or listed, as I lay at rest,
While rose, on breezes thin,
The murmur of the city crowd,
And, from his steeple jangling loud,
Saint Giles's mingling din.
Now from the summit to the plain,
Waves all the hill with yellow grain ;
And o'er the landscape as I look,
Nought do I see unchanged remain,
Save the rude cliffs and chiming brook.
To me they make a heavy moan
Of early friendships past and gone.

XXV.

But different far the change has been
Since Marmion, from the crown
Of Blackford, saw that martial scene
Upon the bent so brown :
Thousand pavilions, white as snow,
Spread all the Boroughmoor * below,
Upland, and dale, and down :
A thousand did I say ? I ween,
Thousands on thousands there were seen,
That chequered all the heath between
The streamlet and the town ;
In crossing ranks extending far,
Forming a camp irregular ;
Oft giving way, where still there stood
Some relics of the old oak wood,
That darkly huge did intervene,
And tamed the glaring white with green :

* See Note 53.

In these extended lines there lay
A martial kingdom's vast array.

XXVI.

For from Hebudes, dark with rain,
To eastern Lodon's fertile plain,
And from the southern Redswire edge,
To farthest Rosse's rocky ledge ;
From west to east, from south to north,
Scotland sent all her warriors forth.
Marmion might hear the mingled hum
Of myriads up the mountain come ;
The horses' tramp, and tinkling clank,
Where chiefs reviewed their vassal rank,
 And charger's shrilling neigh ;
And see the shifting lines advance,
While frequent flashed, from shield and lance,
 The sun's reflected ray.

XXVII.

Thin curling in the morning air,
The wreaths of failing smoke declare
To embers now the brands decayed,
Where the night-watch their fires had made.
They saw, slow rolling on the plain,
Full many a baggage-cart and wain,
And dire artillery's clumsy car,
By sluggish oxen tugged to war ;
And there were Borthwick's Sisters Seven,*
And culverins which France had given.
Ill-omened gift ! the guns remain
The conqueror's spoil on Flodden plain.

XXVIII.

Nor marked they less, where in the air
A thousand streamers flaunted fair ;
 Various in shape, device, and hue,
 Green, sanguine, purple, red, and blue,

* Seven culverins so called, cast by one Borthwick.

Broad, narrow, swallow-tailed, and square,
 Scroll, pennon, pensil, bandrol,* there
 O'er the pavilions flew:
 Highest, and midmost, was descried
 The royal banner floating wide;
 The staff, a pine-tree strong and straight,
 Pitched deeply in a massive stone,
 Which still in memory is shown,
 Yet bent beneath the standard's weight
 Whene'er the western wind unrolled,
 With toil, the huge and cumbrous fold,
 And gave to view the dazzling field,
 Where, in proud Scotland's royal shield,
 The ruddy Lion ramped in gold.†

XXIX.

Lord Marmion viewed the landscape bright—
 He viewed it with a chief's delight—
 Until within him burned his heart,
 And lightning from his eye did part,
 As on the battle-day,
 Such glance did falcon never dart,
 When stooping on his prey,
 "Oh, well, Lord-Lion, hast thou said,
 Thy King from warfare to dissuade
 Were but a vain essay;
 For, by Saint George, were that host mine,
 Not power infernal nor divine
 Should once to peace my soul incline,
 Till I had dimmed their armour's shine,
 In glorious battle fray!"—
 Answered the Bard, of milder mood:
 "Fair is the sight,—and yet 'twere good,
 That kings would think withal,
 When peace and wealth their land has blessed,
 'Tis better to sit still at rest,
 Than rise, perchance to fall."

* Each of these feudal ensigns intimated the different rank of those entitled to display them.

† See Note 54.

XXX.

Still on the spot Lord Marmion stayed,
For fairer scene he ne'er surveyed.
When sated with the martial show
That peopled all the plain below,
The wandering eye could o'er it go,
And mark the distant city glow
 With gloomy splendour red ;
For on the smoke-wreaths, huge and slow,
That round her sable turrets flow,
 The morning beams were shed,
And tinged them with a lustre proud,
Like that which streaks a thundercloud.
Such dusky grandeur clothed the height,
Where the huge Castle holds its state,
 And all the steep slope down,
Whose ridgy back heaves to the sky,
Piled deep and massy, close and high,
 Mine own romantic town !
But northward far, with purer blaze,
On Ochil mountains fell the rays,
And as each heathy top they kissed,
It gleamed a purple amethyst.
Yonder the shores of Fife you saw ;
Here Preston Bay, and Berwick Law ;
 And, broad between them rolled,
The gallant Firth the eye might note,
Whose islands on its bosom float,
 Like emeralds chased in gold.
Fitz-Eustace' heart felt closely pent :
As if to give his rapture vent,
The spur he to his charger lent,
 And raised his bridle hand,
And, making demi-volte in air,
Cried, "Where's the coward that would not dare
 To fight for such a land !"
The Lindesay smiled his joy to see ;
Nor Marmion's frown repressed his glee.

XXXI.

Thus while they looked, a flourish proud,
Where mingled trump, and clarion loud,
And fife, and kettle-drum,
And sackbut deep, and psaltery,
And war-pipe with discordant cry,
And cymbal clattering to the sky,
Making wild music bold and high,

Did up the mountain come ;
The whilst the bells, with distant chime,
Merrily tolled the hour of prime,

And thus the Lindesay spoke :—
“ Thus clamour still the war-notes when
The King to mass his way has ta'en,
Or to Saint Katharine's of Sienne,
Or Chapel of Saint Rocque.
To you they speak of martial fame ;
But me remind of peaceful game,
When blither was their cheer,
Thrilling in Falkland-woods the air,
In signal none his steed should spare,
But strive which foremost might repair
To the downfall of the deer.

XXXII.

“ Nor less,” he said, “ when looking forth,
I view yon Empress of the North
Sit on her hilly throne ;
Her palace's imperial bowers,
Her castle, proof to hostile powers,
Her stately halls and holy towers—
Nor less,” he said, “ I moan,
To think what woe mischance may bring,
And how these merry bells may ring
The death-dirge of our gallant King ;
Or with the larum call
The burghers forth to watch and ward,
'Gainst Southern sack and fires to guard
Dun-Edin's leaguered wall.—

But not for my presaging thought
 Dream conquest sure, or cheaply bought !
 Lord Marmion, I say nay :
 God is the guider of the field,
 He breaks the champion's spear and shield,—
 But thou thyself shalt say,
 When joins yon host in deadly stowre,
 That England's dames must weep in bower,
 Her monks the death-mass sing ;
 For never saw'st thou such a power
 Led on by such a King."
 And now, down winding to the plain,
 The barriers of the camp they gain,
 And there they made a stay.
 There stays the Minstrel, till he fling
 His hand o'er every Border string,
 And fit his harp the pomp to sing,
 Of Scotland's ancient Court and King,
 In the succeeding lay.

INTRODUCTION TO CANTO FIFTH.

TO GEORGE ELLIS, ESQ.*

Edinburgh.

WHEN dark December glooms the day,
 And takes our autumn joys away ;
 When short and scant the sunbeam throws,
 Upon the weary waste of snows,
 A cold and profitless regard,
 Like patron on a needy bard ;
 When silvan occupation's done,
 And o'er the chimney rests the gun,
 And hang, in idle trophy, near,
 The game-pouch, fishing-rod, and spear ;
 When wiry terrier, rough and grim,
 And greyhound, with his length of limb,
 And pointer, now employed no more,
 Cumber our parlour's narrow floor ;

* Editor of "Specimens of Ancient English Romances," etc.

When in his stall the impatient steed
Is long condemned to rest and feed ;
When from our snow-encircled home
Scarce cares the hardest step to roam,
Since path is none, save that to bring
The needful water from the spring ;
When wrinkled news-page, thrice conned o'er,
Beguiles the dreary hour no more,
And darkling politician, crossed,
Inveighs against the lingering post,
And answering housewife sore complains
Of carriers' snow-impeded wains ;—
When such the country cheer, I come,
Well pleased, to seek our city home ;
For converse, and for books, to change
The Forest's melancholy range,
And welcome, with renewed delight,
The busy day and social night.

Not here need my desponding rhyme
Lament the ravages of time,
As erst by Newark's riven towers,
And Ettrick stripped of forest bowers.*
True—Caledonia's Queen is changed,†
Since on her dusky summit ranged,
Within its steepy limits pent,
By bulwark, line, and battlement,
And flanking towers, and laky flood,
Guarded and garrisoned she stood,
Denying entrance or resort,
Save at each tall embattled port ;
Above whose arch, suspended, hung
Portcullis spiked with iron prong.
That long is gone—but not so long,
Since, early closed, and opening late,
Jealous revolved the studded gate,
Whose task from eve to morning tide
A wicket churlishly supplied.

* See Introduction to canto ii.

† See Note 55.

Stern then and steel-girt was thy brow,
 Dun-Edin ! O, how altered now !
 When safe amid thy mountain court
 Thou sitt'st like Empress at her sport,
 And liberal, unconfined, and free,
 Flinging thy white arms to the sea,
 For thy dark cloud, with umbered lower,
 That hung o'er cliff, and lake, and tower,
 Thou gleam'st against the western ray
 Ten thousand lines of brighter day !

Not she, the Championess of old,
 In Spenser's magic tale enrolled,—
 She for the charmed spear renowned,
 Which forced each knight to kiss the ground,—
 Not she more changed, when, placed at rest,
 What time she was Malbecco's guest,*
 She gave to flow her maiden vest ;
 When from the corselet's grasp relieved,
 Free to the sight her bosom heaved ;
 Sweet was her blue eye's modest smile,
 Erst hidden by the aventayle ;
 And down her shoulders graceful rolled
 Her locks profuse, of paly gold.
 They who whilom, in midnight fight,
 Had marvelled at her matchless might,
 No less her maiden charms approved,
 But looking liked, and liking loved.†
 The sight could jealous pangs beguile,
 And charm Malbecco's cares awhile ;
 And he, the wandering Squire of Dames,
 Forgot his Columbella's claims,
 And passion, erst unknown, could gain
 The breast of blunt Sir Satyrane ;
 Nor durst light Paridel advance,
 Bold as he was, a looser glance.

* See "The Fairy Queen," book iii. canto ix.

† "For every one her liked, and every one her loved."

SPENSER, as above.

She charmed at once, and tamed the heart,
Incomparable Britomarte !

So thou, fair City ! disarrayed
Of battled wall and rampart's aid,
As stately seem'st, but lovelier far
Than in that panoply of war.
Nor deem that from thy fenceless throne
Strength and security are flown ;
Still, as of yore, Queen of the North !
Still canst thou send thy children forth.
Ne'er readier at alarm-bell's call
Thy burghers rose to man thy wall,
Than now, in danger, shall be thine,
Thy dauntless voluntary line ;
For fosse and turret proud to stand,
Their breasts the bulwarks of the land.
Thy thousands, trained to martial toil,
Full red would stain their native soil,
Ere from thy mural crown there fell
The slightest knosp or pinnacle.
And if it come—as come it may,
Dun-Edin ! that eventful day—
Renowned for hospitable deed,
That virtue much with Heaven may plead,
In patriarchal times, whose care
Descending angels deigned to share ;
That claim may wrestle blessings down
On those who fight for the Good Town,
Destined in every age to be
Refuge of injured royalty,
Since first, when conquering York arose,
To Henry meek she gave repose,*
Till late, with wonder, grief, and awe,
Great Bourbon's relics, sad she saw.

Truce to these thoughts !—for, as they rise,
How gladly I avert mine eyes,
Bodings, or true or false, to change,
For Fiction's fair romantic range,

* See Note 56.

Or for Tradition's dubious light,
 That hovers 'twixt the day and night :
 Dazzling alternately and dim,
 Her wavering lamp I'd rather trim,
 Knights, squires, and lovely dames to see,
 Creation of my fantasy,
 Than gaze abroad on reeky fen,
 And make of mists invading men.—
 Who loves not more the night of June
 Than dull December's gloomy noon?
 The moonlight than the fog of frost?
 And can we say, which cheats the most?

But who shall teach my harp to gain
 A sound of the romantic strain,
 Whose Anglo-Norman tones whilere
 Could win the royal Henry's ear,
 Famed Beauclerc called, for that he loved
 The minstrel, and his lay approved?
 Who shall these lingering notes redeem,
 Decaying on Oblivion's stream ;
 Such notes as from the Breton tongue
 Marie * translated, Blondel sung?—
 O ! born Time's ravage to repair,
 And make the dying Muse thy care ;
 Who, when his scythe her hoary foe
 Was poisoning for the final blow,
 The weapon from his hand could wring,
 And break his glass, and shear his wing,
 And bid, reviving in his strain,
 The gentle poet live again ;
 Thou, who canst give to lightest lay
 An unpedantic moral gay,
 Nor less the dullest theme bid flit
 On wings of unexpected wit ;
 In letters as in life approved,
 Example honoured, and beloved,—
 Dear ELLIS ! to the Bard impart

* Marie of France, who resided at the court of Henry III. of England.
 to whom she dedicated her work on the "Lais" of Brittany.

A lesson of thy magic art,
To win at once the head and heart,—
At once to charm, instruct, and mend,
My guide, my pattern, and my friend !

Such minstrel lesson to bestow
Be long thy pleasing task ; but, O !
No more by thy example teach—
What few can practise, all can preach—
With even patience to endure
Lingering disease, and painful cure,
And boast affliction's pangs subdued
By mild and manly fortitude.
Enough, the lesson has been given :
Forbid the repetition, Heaven !

Come listen, then ! for thou hast known,
And loved, the Minstrel's varying tone ;
Who, like his Border sires of old,
Waked a wild measure rude and bold,
Till Windsor's oaks, and Ascot plain,
With wonder heard the northern strain.
Come, listen !—Bold in thy applause,
The Bard shall scorn pedantic laws ;
And, as the ancient art could stain
Achievements on the storied pane,
Irregularly traced and planned,
But yet so glowing and so grand—
So shall he strive, in changeful hue,
Field, feast, and combat to renew,
And loves, and arms, and harpers' glee,
And all the pomp of chivalry.

CANTO FIFTH.

THE COURT.

I.

THE train has left the hills of Braid ;
The barrier guard have open made
(So Lindesay bade) the palisade,

That closed the tented ground ;
 Their men the warders backward drew,
 And carried pikes as they rode through
 Into its ample bound.

Fast ran the Scottish warriors there,
 Upon the Southern band to stare ;
 And envy with their wonder rose,
 To see such well-appointed foes—
 Such length of shafts, such mighty bows,
 So huge, that many simply thought
 But for a vaunt such weapons wrought,
 And little deemed their force to feel,
 Through links of mail and plates of steel,
 When, rattling upon Flodden vale,
 The clothyard arrows flew like hail.*

II.

Nor less did Marmion's skilful view
 Glance every line and squadron through ;
 And much he marvelled one small land
 Could marshal forth such various band :

For men-at-arms were here,
 Heavily sheathed in mail and plate,
 Like iron towers for strength and weight,
 On Flemish steeds of bone and height,
 With battle-axe and spear.

Young knights and squires, a lighter train,
 Practised their chargers on the plain,
 By aid of leg, of hand, and rein,

Each warlike feat to show ;
 To pass, to wheel, the croupe to gain,
 And high curvett, that not in vain
 The sword-sway might descend amain

On foeman's casque below.
 He saw the hardy burghers there
 March armed, on foot, with faces bare,†

For visor they wore none,
 Nor waving plume, nor crest of knight ;
 But burnished were their corselets bright,

* See Note 57.

† See Note 58.

Their brigantines and gorgets light
 Like very silver shone;
 Long pikes they had for standing fight,
 Two-handed swords they wore;
 And many wielded mace of weight,
 And bucklers bright they bore.

THEY FIGHTED IN III.

On foot the yeoman too, but dressed
 In his steel jack, a swarthy vest,
 With iron quilted well;
 Each at his back (a slender store)
 His forty days' provision bore,
 As feudal statutes tell.
 His arms were halbert, axe, or spear,*
 A crossbow there, a hagbut here,
 A dagger-knife, and brand.
 Sober he seemed, and sad of cheer,
 As loath to leave his cottage dear,
 And march to foreign strand;
 Or musing, who would guide his steer,
 To till the fallow lands again.
 Yet deem not in his thoughtful eye
 Did aught of dastard terror lie;
 More dreadful far his ire
 Than theirs who, scorning danger's name,
 In eager mood to battle came,
 Their valour like light straw on flame,
 A fierce but fading fire.

IV.

Not so the Borderer;—bred to war,
 He knew the battle's din afar,
 And joyed to hear it swell;
 His peaceful day was slothful ease;
 Nor harp, nor pipe, his ear could please,
 Like the loud slogan yell.
 On active steed, with lance and blade,
 The light-armed pricker plied his trade,—

* See Note 59.

Let nobles fight for fame ;
Let vassals follow where they lead,
Burghers to guard their townships bleed,
But war's the Borderer's game.
Their gain, their glory, their delight,
To sleep the day, maraud the night,
O'er mountain, moss, and moor ;
Joyful to fight they took their way,
Scarce caring who might win the day,
Their booty was secure.
These, as Lord Marmion's train passed by,
Looked on at first with careless eye,
Nor marvelled aught, well taught to know
The form and force of English bow ;
But when they saw the Lord arrayed
In splendid arms and rich brocade,
Each Borderer to his kinsman said,
" Hist, Ringan ! seest thou there !
Canst guess which road they'll homeward ride ?
O ! could we but on Border side,
By Eusedale glen, or Liddell's tide,
Beset a prize so fair !
That fangless Lion, too, their guide,
Might chance to lose his glistening hide ;
Brown Maudlin, of that doublet pied,
Could make a kirtle rare."

v.

Next, Marmion marked the Celtic race,
Of different language, form, and face,
A various race of man ;
Just then the chiefs their tribes arrayed,
And wild and garish semblance made,
The chequered trews, and belted plaid,
And varying notes the war-pipes brayed
To every varying clan ;
Wild through their red or sable hair
Looked out their eyes, with savage stare,
On Marmion as he passed ;

Their legs above the knee were bare ;
Their frame was sinewy, short, and spare,
And hardened to the blast ;
Of taller race, the chiefs they own
Were by the eagle's plumage known.
The hunted red-deer's undressed hide
Their hairy buskins well supplied ;
The graceful bonnet decked their head ;
Back from their shoulders hung the plaid ;
A broadsword of unwieldy length,
A dagger proved for edge and strength,
A studded targe they wore,
And quivers, bows, and shafts—but, O !
Short was the shaft and weak the bow
To that which England bore.
The Islesmen carried at their backs
The ancient Danish battle-axe.
They raised a wild and wondering cry,
As with his guide rode Marmion by :
Loud were their clamouring tongues, as when
The clanging sea-fowl leave the fen ;
And, with their cries discordant mixed,
Grumbled and yelled the pipes betwixt.

VI.

Thus through the Scottish camp they passed,
And reached the City gate at last,
Where all around, a wakeful guard,
Armed burghers kept their watch and ward :
Well had they cause of jealous fear,
When lay encamped, in field so near,
The Borderer and the Mountaineer.
As through the bustling streets they go,
All was alive with martial show ;
At every turn, with dinning clang,
The armourer's anvil clashed and rang ;
Or toiled the swarthy smith, to wheel
The bar that arms the charger's heel ;
Or axe, or falchion, to the side
Of jarring grindstone was applied.

Page, groom, and squire, with hurrying pace,
 Through street, and lane, and market-place,
 Bore lance, or casque, or sword ;
 While burghers, with important face,
 Described each new-come lord,
 Discussed his lineage, told his name,
 His following,* and his warlike fame.—
 The Lion led to lodging meet,
 Which high o'erlooked the crowded street ;

 There must the Baron rest,
 Till past the hour of vesper tide,
 And then to Holy-Rood must ride,—
 Such was the King's behest.
 Meanwhile the Lion's care assigns
 A banquet rich, and costly wines,
 To Marmion and his train ;†
 And when the appointed hour succeeds,
 The Baron dons his peaceful weeds,
 And following Lindesay as he leads,
 The palace halls they gain.

.VII.

Old Holy-Rood rung merrily,
 That night, with wassell, mirth, and glee :
 King James within her princely bower
 Feasted the chiefs of Scotland's power,
 Summoned to spend the parting hour ;
 For he had charged, that his array
 Should southward march by break of day.
 Well loved that splendid Monarch aye
 The banquet and the song,
 By day the tourney, and by night
 The merry dance, traced fast and light,
 The maskers quaint, the pageant bright,
 The revel loud and long.
 This feast outshone his banquets past ;
 It was his blithest—and his last.
 The dazzling lamps, from gallery gay,
 Cast on the Court a dancing ray ;

* Following, feudal retainers.

† See Note 60.

Here to the harp did minstrels sing ;
There ladies touched a softer string ;
With long-eared cap and motley vest,
The licensed fool retailed his jest ;
His magic tricks the juggler plied ;
At dice and draughts the gallants vied ;
While some, in close recess apart,
Courtèd the ladies of their heart,
Nor courtèd them in vain :
For often, in the parting hour,
Victorious Love asserts his power
O'er coldness and disdain ;
And flinty is her heart, can view
To battle march a lover true—
Can hear, perchance, his last adieu,
Nor own her share of pain.

VIII.

Through this mixed crowd of glee and game,
The King to greet Lord Marmion came,
While, reverent, all made room.
An easy task it was, I trow,
King James's manly form to know,
Although, his courtesy to show,
He doffed to Marmion, bending low,
His broidered cap and plume.
For royal were his garb and mien,
His cloak, of crimson velvet piled,
Trimmed with the fur of marten wild ;
His vest, of changeful satin sheen,
The dazzled eye beguiled ;
His gorgeous collar hung adown,
Wrought with the badge of Scotland's crown,
The thistle brave, of old renown ;
His trusty blade, Toledo right,
Descended from a baldric bright ;
White were his buskins, on the heel
His spurs inlaid of gold and steel ;
His bonnet, all of crimson fair,
Was buttoned with a ruby rare :

And Marmion deemed he ne'er had seen
A prince of such a noble mien.

IX.

The Monarch's form was middle size ;
For feat of strength, or exercise,
Shaped in proportion fair ;
And hazel was his eagle eye,
And auburn of the darkest dye
His short curled beard and hair.
Light was his footstep in the dance,
And firm his stirrup in the lists ;
And, oh ! he had that merry glance,
That seldom lady's heart resists.
Lightly from fair to fair he flew,
And loved to plead, lament, and sue ;—
Suit lightly won, and short-lived pain !
For monarchs seldom sigh in vain.

I said he joyed in banquet-bower ;
But, 'mid his mirth, 'twas often strange,
How suddenly his cheer would change,
His look o'ercast and lower,
If, in a sudden turn, he felt
The pressure of his iron belt,
That bound his breast in penance-pain,
In memory of his father slain.*
Even so 'twas strange how, evermore,
Soon as the passing pang was o'er,
Forward he rushed, with double glee,
Into the stream of revelry :
Thus, dim-seen object of affright
Startles the courser in his flight,
And half he halts, half springs aside ;
But feels the quickening spur applied,
And, straining on the tightened rein,
Scours doubly swift o'er hill and plain.

X. THE HERON'S WIFE.

O'er James's heart, the courtiers say,
Sir Hugh the Heron's wife † held sway :

* See Note 61. † See Note 62.

To Scotland's Court she came,
To be a hostage for her lord,
Who Cessford's gallant heart had gored,
And with the King to make accord,
Had sent his lovely dame.
Nor to that lady free alone
Did the gay King allegiance own ;
For the fair Queen of France
Sent him a turquois ring, and glove,
And charged him, as her knight and love,
For her to break a lance,*
And strike three strokes with Scottish brand,
And march three miles on Southron land,
And bid the banners of his band
In English breezes dance.
And thus, for France's Queen, he drest
His manly limbs in mailèd vest ;
And thus admitted English fair
His inmost counsels still to share ;
And thus, for both, he madly planned
The ruin of himself and land !
And yet, the sooth to tell,
Nor England's fair, nor France's Queen,
Were worth one pearl-drop, bright and sheen,
From Margaret's eyes that fell,—
His own Queen Margaret, who, in Lithgow's bower,
All lonely sat, and wept the weary hour.

XI.

The Queen sits lone in Lithgow pile,
And weeps the weary day,
The war against her native soil,
Her Monarch's risk in battle broil :—
And in gay Holy-Rood, the while,
Dame Heron rises with a smile,
Upon the harp to play.
Fair was her rounded arm, as o'er
The strings her fingers flew ;
And as she touched and tuned them all,

* See Note 63.

Even her bosom's rise and fall
 Was plainer given to view ;
 For, all for heat, was laid aside
 Her wimple, and her hood untied.
 And first she pitched her voice to sing,
 Then glanced her dark eye on the King,
 And then around the silent ring ;
 And laughed, and blushed, and oft did say
 Her pretty oath, by Yea, and Nay,
 She could not, would not, durst not play !
 At length, upon the harp, with glee,
 Mingled with arch simplicity,
 A soft yet lively air she rung,
 While thus the wily lady sung :—

XII.

LOCHINVAR.

Lady Heron's Song.

O, young Lochinvar is come out of the west,
 Through all the wide Border his steed was the best ;
 And save his good broadsword he weapon had none,
 He rode all unarmed, and he rode all alone.
 So faithful in love, and so dauntless in war,
 There never was knight like the young Lochinvar.

He stayed not for brake, and he stopped not for stone,
 He swam the Eske river where ford there was none ;
 But, ere he alighted at Netherby gate,
 The bride had consented, the gallant came late :
 For a laggard in love, and a dastard in war,
 Was to wed the fair Ellen of brave Lochinvar.

So boldly he entered the Netherby Hall,
 Among bride's-men, and kinsmen, and brothers, and all.
 Then spoke the bride's father, his hand on his sword,
 (For the poor craven bridegroom said never a word,)
 " O come ye in peace here, or come ye in war,
 Or to dance at our bridal, young Lord Lochinvar ?"—

"I long wooed your daughter, my suit you denied ;—
Love swells like the Solway, but ebbs like its tide—
And now am I come, with this lost love of mine,
To lead but one measure, drink one cup of wine.
There are maidens in Scotland more lovely by far
That would gladly be bride to the young Lochinvar."

The bride kissed the goblet ; the knight took it up,
He quaffed off the wine, and he threw down the cup.
She looked down to blush, and she looked up to sigh,
With a smile on her lips and a tear in her eye.
He took her soft hand, ere her mother could bar,—
"Now tread we a measure !" said young Lochinvar.

So stately his form, and so lovely her face,
That never a hall such a galliard did grace ;
While her mother did fret and her father did fume,
And the bridegroom stood dangling his bonnet and plume ;
And the bride-maidens whispered, "'Twere better by far
To have matched our fair cousin with young Lochinvar."

One touch to her hand, and one word in her ear,
When they reached the hall-door, and the charger stood near ;
So light to the croupe the fair lady he swung,
So light to the saddle before her he sprung !
"She is won ! we are gone, over bank, bush, and scaur ;
They'll have fleet steeds that follow," quoth young Lochinvar.

There was mounting 'mong Græmes of the Netherby clan ;
Forsters, Fenwicks, and Musgraves, they rode and they ran :
There was racing, and chasing, on Cannobie Lee,
But the lost bride of Netherby ne'er did they see.
So daring in love, and so dauntless in war,
Have ye e'er heard of gallant like young Lochinvar ?

XIII.

The Monarch o'er the siren hung,
And beat the measure as she sung ;
And, pressing closer, and more near,
He whispered praises in her ear.

In loud applause the courtiers vied ;
 And ladies winked, and spoke aside.
 The witching dame to Marmion threw

A glance, where seemed to reign
 The pride that claims applauses due,
 And of her royal conquest too,

A real or feigned disdain :
 Familiar was the look, and told,
 Marmion and she were friends of old.
 The King observed their meeting eyes
 With something like displeased surprise ;
 For monarchs ill can rivals brook,
 Even in a word, or smile, or look.
 Straight took he forth the parchment broad
 Which Marmion's high commission showed :

" Our Borders sacked by many a raid,
 Our peaceful liege-men robbed," he said ;

" On day of truce our Warden slain,
 Stout Barton killed, his vessels ta'en :
 Unworthy were we here to reign,
 Should these for vengeance cry in vain ;
 Our full defiance, hate, and scorn,
 Our herald has to Henry borne."—

XIV.

He paused, and led where Douglas stood,
 And with stern eye the pageant viewed.
 I mean that Douglas, sixth of yore,
 Who coronet of Angus bore,
 And, when his blood and heart were high,
 Did the third James in camp defy,
 And all his minions led to die

On Lauder's dreary flat :
 Princes and favourites long grew tame
 And trembled at the homely name
 Of Archibald Bell-the-Cat.*

The same who left the dusky vale
 Of Hermitage in Liddesdale,
 Its dungeons and its towers,

* See Note 64.

Where Bothwell's turrets brave the air,
And Bothwell bank is blooming fair,
 To fix his princely bowers.
Though now, in age, he had laid down
His armour for the peaceful gown,
 And for a staff his brand,
Yet often would flash forth the fire,
That could, in youth, a monarch's ire
 And minion's pride withstand ;
And even that day, at council board,
 Unapt to soothe his sovereign's mood,
Against the war had Angus stood,
And chafed his royal lord.*

xv.

His giant form like ruined tower,
Though fallen its muscles' brawny vaunt,
Huge-boned and tall, and grim and gaunt,
 Seemed o'er the gaudy scene to lower :
His locks and beard in silver grew ;
His eyebrows kept their sable hue.
Near Douglas when the Monarch stood,
His bitter speech he thus pursued :—
“ Lord Marmion, since these letters say
That in the North you needs must stay,
 While slightest hopes of peace remain,
Uncourteous speech it were, and stern,
To say—Return to Lindisfarne,
 Until my herald come again.—
Then rest you in Tantallon Hold,†
Your host shall be the Douglas bold,—
A chief unlike his sires of old.
He wears their motto on his blade,‡
Their blazon o'er his towers displayed ;
Yet loves his sovereign to oppose,
More than to face his country's foes.
And, I bethink me, by Saint Stephen,
 But e'en this morn to me was given
A prize, the first-fruits of the war,

Ta'en by a galley from Dunbar,
 A bevy of the maids of Heaven.
 Under your guard, these holy maids
 Shall safe return to cloister shades,
 And, while they at Tantallon stay,
 Requiem for Cochran's soul may say."—
 And, with the slaughtered favourite's name,
 Across the Monarch's brow there came
 A cloud of ire, remorse, and shame.

XVI.

In answer nought could Angus speak;
 His proud heart swelled well-nigh to break:
 He turned aside, and down his cheek

A burning tear there stole.
 His hand the Monarch sudden took,
 That sight his kind heart could not brook:

"Now, by the Bruce's soul,
 Angus, my hasty speech forgive!
 For sure as doth his spirit live,
 As he said of the Douglas old,

I well may say of you—
 That never king did subject hold,
 In speech more free, in war more bold,

More tender, and more true!* !!!
 Forgive me, Douglas, once again."—
 And, while the King his hand did strain,
 The old man's tears fell down like rain.

To seize the moment Marmion tried,
 And whispered to the King aside:—

"Oh! let such tears unwonted plead
 For respite short from dubious deed!
 A child will weep a bramble's smart,
 A maid to see her sparrow part,
 A stripling for a woman's heart:
 But woe awaits a country when
 She sees the tears of bearded men.

* O Douglas! Douglas!
 Tendir and trow.

The Houlate.

Then, oh ! what omen, dark and high,
When Douglas wets his manly eye !”—

XVII.

Displeased was James, that stranger viewed
And tampered with his changing mood.
“ Laugh those that can, weep those that may,”
Thus did the fiery Monarch say,
“ Southward I march by break of day ;
And if within Tantallon strong
The good Lord Marmion tarries long,
Perchance our meeting next may fall
At Tamworth, in his castle-hall.”—
The haughty Marmion felt the taunt,
And answered, grave, the royal vaunt :
“ Much honoured were my humble home,
If in its halls King James should come.
But Nottingham has archers good,
And Yorkshire men are stern of mood ;
Northumbrian prickers wild and rude.
On Derby Hills the paths are steep ;
In Ouse and Tyne the fords are deep ;
And many a banner will be torn,
And many a knight to earth be borne,
And many a sheaf of arrows spent,
Ere Scotland’s King shall cross the Trent :
Yet pause, brave Prince, while yet you may.”—
The Monarch lightly turned away,
And to his nobles loud did call,—
“ Lords, to the dance,—a hall ! a hall ! ” *
Himself his cloak and sword flung by,
And led Dame Heron gallantly ;
And minstrels, at the royal order,
Rung out—“ Blue Bonnets o’er the Border.”

XVIII. To the

Leave we these revels now, to tell
What to Saint Hilda’s maids befell,
Whose galley, as they sailed again
To Whitby, by a Scot was ta’en.

* The ancient cry to make room for a dance, or pageant.

Now at Dun-Edin did they bide,
Till James should of their fate decide ;
And soon, by his command,
Were gently summoned to prepare
To journey under Marmion's care,
As escort honoured, safe, and fair,
Again to English land.
The Abbess told her chaplet o'er,
Nor knew which saint she should implore ;
For, when she thought of Constance, sore
She feared Lord Marmion's mood.
And judge what Clara must have felt !
The sword that hung in Marmion's belt,
Had drunk De Wilton's blood.
Unwittingly, King James had given,
As guard to Whitby's shades,
The man most dreaded under heaven
By these defenceless maids ;
Yet what petition could avail,
Or who would listen to the tale
Of woman, prisoner and nun,
Mid bustle of a war begun ?
They deemed it hopeless to avoid
The convoy of their dangerous guide.

XIX.

Their lodging, so the King assigned,
To Marmion's, as their guardian, joined ;
And thus it fell that, passing nigh,
The Palmer caught the Abbess' eye,
Who warned him by a scroll,
She had a secret to reveal,
That much concerned the Church's weal,
And health of sinner's soul ;
And, with deep charge of secrecy,
She named a place to meet,
Within an open balcony,
That hung from dizzy pitch, and high,
Above the stately street ;

To which, as common to each home,
At night they might in secret come.

XX.

At night, in secret, there they came,
The Palmer and the holy Dame.
The moon among the clouds rose high,
And all the city hum was by.
Upon the street, where late before
Did din of war and warriors roar,
 You might have heard a pebble fall,
A beetle hum, a cricket sing,
An owlet flap his boding wing
 On Giles's steeple tall.
The antique buildings, climbing high,
Whose Gothic frontlets sought the sky,
 Were here wrapt deep in shade ;
There on their brows the moonbeam broke,
Through the faint wreaths of silvery smoke,
 And on the casements played.
And other light was none to see,
 Save torches gliding far,
Before some chieftain of degree,
Who left the royal revelry
 To bowne him for the war.—
A solemn scene the Abbess chose ;
A solemn hour, her secret to disclose.

XXI.

“O holy Palmer!” she began—
“For sure he must be sainted man,
Whose blessed feet have trod the ground
Where the Redeemer's tomb is found—
For His dear Church's sake, my tale
Attend, nor deem of light avail,
Though I must speak of worldly love—
How vain to those who wed above!—
De Wilton and Lord Marmion wooed
Clara de Clare, of Gloster's blood ;

(Idle it were of Whitby's dame,
 To say of that same blood I came ;))
 And once, when jealous rage was high,
 Lord Marmion said despiteously
 Wilton was traitor in his heart,
 And had made league with Martin Swart,*
 When he came here on Simnel's part ;
 And only cowardice did restrain
 His rebel aid on Stokefield's plain,—
 And down he threw his glove. The thing
 Was tried, as wont, before the King ;
 Where frankly did De Wilton own
 That Swart in Guelders he had known,
 And that between them then there went
 Some scroll of courteous compliment.
 For this he to his castle sent ;
 But when his messenger returned,
 Judge how De Wilton's fury burned !
 For in his packet there were laid
 Letters that claimed disloyal aid,
 And proved King Henry's cause betrayed.
 His fame, thus blighted, in the field
 He strove to clear, by spear and shield :—
 To clear his fame in vain he strove,
 For wondrous are His ways above !
 Perchance some form was unobserved ; †
 Perchance in prayer, or faith, he swerved ;
 Else how could guiltless champion quail,
 Or how the blessed ordeal fail ?

XXII.

“ His squire, who now De Wilton saw
 As recreant doomed to suffer law,
 Repentant, owned in vain that
 That, while he had the scrolls in care,
 A stranger maiden, passing fair,

* A German general, who commanded the auxiliaries sent by the Duchess of Burgundy with Lambert Simnel. He was defeated and killed at Stokefield, 1487. The field of battle preserves his name—Swart-moor.

† See Note 68.

Had drenched him with a beverage rare ;
His words no faith could gain.
With Clare alone he credence won,
Who, rather than wed Marmion,
Did to Saint Hilda's shrine repair,
To give our house her livings fair,
And die a vestal vot'ress there :
The impulse from the earth was given,
But bent her to the paths of heaven.
A purer heart, a lovelier maid,
Ne'er sheltered her in Whitby's shade,
No, not since Saxon Edelfled ;
Only one trace of earthly stain,
That for her lover's loss
She cherishes a sorrow vain,
And murmurs at the cross.—
And then her heritage—it goes
Along the banks of Tame ;
Deep fields of grain the reaper mows,
In meadows rich the heifer lows,
The falconer, and huntsman, knows
Its woodlands for the game.
Shame were it to Saint Hilda dear,
And I, her humble vot'ress here,
Should do a deadly sin,
Her temple spoiled before mine eyes,
If this false Marmion such a prize
By my consent should win ;
Yet hath our boisterous Monarch sworn
That Clare shall from our house be torn ;
And grievous cause have I to fear
Such mandate doth Lord Marmion bear.

XXIII.

“ Now, prisoner, helpless, and betrayed
To evil power, I claim thine aid,
By every step that thou hast trod
To holy shrine and grotto dim,
By every martyr's tortured limb,

By angel, saint, and seraphim,
 And by the Church of God !
 For mark :—When Wilton was betrayed,
 And with his squire forged letters laid,
 She was, alas ! that sinful maid
 By whom the deed was done ;—
 O ! shame and horror to be said !
 She was a perjured nun !
 No clerk in all the land, like her,
 Traced quaint and varying character.
 Perchance you may a marvel deem,
 That Marmion's paramour
 (For such vile thing she was) should scheme
 Her lover's nuptial hour ;
 But o'er him thus she hoped to gain,
 As privy to his honour's stain,
 Illimitable power :
 For this she secretly retained
 Each proof that might the plot reveal,
 Instructions with his hand and seal ;
 And thus Saint Hilda deigned,
 Through sinner's perfidy impure,
 Her house's glory to secure,
 And Clare's immortal weal.

XXIV.

" 'Twere long, and needless, here to tell,
 How to my hand these papers fell ;
 With me they must not stay.
 Saint Hilda keep her Abbess true !
 Who knows what outrage he might do,
 While journeying by the way ?—
 O blessed Saint, if e'er again
 I venturous leave thy calm domain,
 To travel or by land or main,
 Deep penance may I pay !
 Now, saintly Palmer, mark my prayer :
 I give this packet to thy care,
 For thee to stop they will not dare ;
 And O ! with cautious speed,

To Wolsey's hand the papers bring,
That he may show them to the King.

And, for thy well-earned meed,
Thou holy man, at Whitby's shrine
A weekly mass shall still be thine

While priests can sing and read.—
What ail'st thou?—Speak!—For as he took
The charge, a strong emotion shook

His frame; and, ere reply,
They heard a faint yet shrilly tone,
Like distant clarion feebly blown,

That on the breeze did die;
And loud the Abbess shrieked in fear,
“Saint Withold, save us!—What is here?

Look at yon City Cross!
See on its battled tower appear
Phantoms, that scutcheons seem to rear,
And blazoned banners toss!

XXV.

Dun-Edin's Cross,* a pillared stone,
Rose on a turret octagon;
(But now is razed that monument,
Whence royal edict rang,
And voice of Scotland's law was sent
In glorious trumpet clang.

O! be his tomb as lead to lead
Upon its dull destroyer's head!—
A minstrel's malison † is said.)—
Then on its battlements they saw
A vision passing Nature's law,
Strange, wild, and dimly seen;
Figures that seemed to rise and die,
Gibber and sign, advance and fly,
While nought confirmed could ear or eye
Discern of sound or mien.

Yet darkly did it seem, as there
Heralds and Pursuivants prepare,

* See Note 69. † Curse.

With trumpet sound and blazon fair,
 A summons to proclaim ;
 But indistinct the pageant proud,
 As fancy forms of midnight cloud,
 When flings the moon upon her shroud
 A wavering tinge of flame ;
 It flits, expands, and shifts, till loud,
 From midmost of the spectre crowd,
 This awful summons came :—*

XXVI.

“ Prince, prelate, potentate, and peer,
 Whose names I now shall call,
 Scottish or foreigner, give ear !
 Subjects of him who sent me here,
 At his tribunal to appear,
 I summon one and all :
 I cite you by each deadly sin,
 That e’er hath soiled your hearts within ;
 I cite you by each brutal lust,
 That e’er defiled your earthly dust,—
 By wrath, by pride, by fear,
 By each o’ermastering passion’s tone,
 By the dark grave, and dying groan !
 When forty days are passed and gone,
 I cite you, at your Monarch’s throne,
 To answer and appear.”
 Then thundered forth a roll of names :—
 The first was thine, unhappy James !
 Then all thy nobles came—
 Crawford, Glencairn, Montrose, Argyle,
 Ross, Bothwell, Forbes, Lennox, Lyle,—
 Why should I tell their separate style ?
 Each chief of birth and fame,
 Of Lowland, Highland, Border, Isle,
 Foredoomed to Flodden’s carnage pile,
 Was cited there by name ;
 And Marmion, Lord of Fontenaye,
 Of Lutterward, and Scrivelbay,

* See Note 70.

De Wilton, erst of Aberley,
The self-same thundering voice did say.—
But then another spoke :
“Thy fatal summons I deny,
And thine infernal Lord defy,
Appealing me to Him on High
Who burst the sinner’s yoke.”
At that dread accent, with a scream,
Parted the pageant like a dream,
The summoner was gone.
Prone on her face the Abbess fell,
And fast, and fast, her beads did tell ;
Her nuns came, startled by the yell,
And found her there alone.
She marked not, at the scene aghast,
What time, or how, the Palmer passed.

XXVII.

Shift we the scene.—The camp doth move ;
Dun-Edin’s streets are empty now,
Save when, for weal of those they love,
To pray the prayer, and vow the vow,
The tottering child, the anxious fair,
The grey-haired sire, with pious care,
To chapels and to shrines repair.—
Where is the Palmer now? and where
The Abbess, Marmion, and Clare?—
Bold Douglas ! to Tantallon fair
They journey in thy charge :
Lord Marmion rode on his right hand,
The Palmer still was with the band ;
Angus, like Lindesay, did command,
That none should roam at large.
But in that Palmer’s altered mien
A wondrous change might now be seen :
Freely he spoke of war,
Of marvels wrought by single hand,
When lifted for a native land ;
And still looked high, as if he planned
Some desperate deed afar.

His courser would he feed and stroke,
 And, tucking up his sable frock,
 Would first his mettle bold provoke,
 Then soothe or quell his pride.
 Old Hubert said, that never one
 He saw, except Lord Marmion,
 A steed so fairly ride.

XXVIII.

Some half-hour's march behind, there came,
 By Eustace governed fair,
 A troop escorting Hilda's Dame,
 With all her nuns, and Clare.
 No audience had Lord Marmion sought ;
 Ever he feared to aggravate
 Clara de Clare's suspicious hate ;
 And safer 'twas, he thought,
 To wait till, from the nuns removed,
 The influence of kinsmen loved,
 And suit by Henry's self approved,
 Her slow consent had wrought.
 His was no flickering flame, that dies
 Unless when fanned by looks and sighs,
 And lighted oft at lady's eyes ;
 He longed to stretch his wide command
 O'er luckless Clara's ample land :
 Besides, when Wilton with him vied,
 Although the pang of humbled pride
 The place of jealousy supplied,
 Yet conquest, by that meanness won,
 He almost loathed to think upon,
 Led him, at times, to hate the cause
 Which made him burst through honour's laws.
 If e'er he loved, 'twas her alone,
 Who died within that vault of stone.

XXIX.

And now, when close at hand they saw
 North Berwick's town and lofty Law,
 Fitz-Eustace bade them pause awhile,

Before a venerable pile,*
 Whose turrets viewed, afar,
 The lofty Bass, the Lambie Isle,
 The ocean's peace or war.
 At tolling of a bell, forth came
 The convent's venerable Dame,
 And prayed Saint Hilda's Abbess rest
 With her, a loved and honoured guest,
 Till Douglas should a bark prepare
 To waft her back to Whitby fair.
 Glad was the Abbess, you may guess,
 And thanked the Scottish Prioress;
 And tedious were to tell, I ween,
 The courteous speech that passed between.
 O'erjoyed the nuns their palfreys leave;
 But when fair Clara did intend,
 Like them, from horseback to descend,
 Fitz-Eustace said, "I grieve,
 Fair lady, grieve e'en from my heart,
 Such gentle company to part:—
 Think not discourtesy,
 But lords' commands must be obeyed;
 And Marmion and the Douglas said,
 That you must wend with me.
 Lord Marmion hath a letter broad,
 Which to the Scottish Earl he showed,
 Commanding that, beneath his care,
 Without delay, you shall repair,
 To your good kinsman, Lord Fitz-Claire."—

XXX.

The startled Abbess loud exclaimed;
 But she, at whom the blow was aimed,
 Grew pale as death, and cold as lead,—
 She deemed she heard her death-doom read.
 "Cheer thee, my child!" the Abbess said,
 "They dare not tear thee from my hand,
 To ride alone with armed band."—
 "Nay, holy mother, nay,"

* See Note 71.

Fitz-Eustace said, "the lovely Clare
Will be in Lady Angus' care,
In Scotland while we stay ;
And, when we move, an easy ride
Will bring us to the English side,
Female attendance to provide
Befitting Gloster's heir.
Nor thinks, nor dreams, my noble Lord,
By slightest look, or act, or word,
To harass Lady Clare.
Her faithful guardian he will be,
Nor sue for slightest courtesy,
That e'en to stranger falls,
Till he shall place her, safe and free,
Within her kinsman's halls."—
He spoke, and blushed with earnest grace ;
His faith was painted on his face,
And Clare's worst fear relieved.
The Lady Abbess loud exclaimed
On Henry, and the Douglas blamed,
Entreated, threatened, grieved ;
To martyr, saint, and prophet prayed,
Against Lord Marmion inveighed,
And called the Prioress to aid,
To curse with candle, bell, and book.—
Her head the grave Cistercian shook ;
"The Douglas, and the King," she said,
"In their commands will be obeyed ;
Grieve not, nor dream that harm can fall
The maiden in Tantallon hall."—

XXXI.

The Abbess, seeing strife was vain,
Assumed her wonted state again—
For much of state she had—
Composed her veil, and raised her head,
And—"Bid," in solemn voice she said,
"Thy master, bold and bad,
The records of his house turn o'er,
And, when he shall there written see,

That one of his own ancestry⁴⁶
Drove the Monks forth of Coventry,*
Bid him his fate explore!
Prancing in pride of earthly trust,
His charger hurled him to the dust,
And, by a base plebeian thrust,
He died his band before.

God judge 'twixt Marmion and me:
He is a chief of high degree,
And I a poor recluse;
Yet oft, in holy writ, we see
Even such weak minister as me
May the oppressor bruise.

For thus, inspired, did Judith slay
The mighty in his sin,
And Jael thus, and Deborah,"—
Here hasty Blount broke in:
"Fitz-Eustace, we must march our band;
St. Anton' fire thee! wilt thou stand
All day, with bonnet in thy hand,
To hear the lady preach?
By this good light! if thus we stay,
Lord Marmion, for our fond delay,
Will sharper sermon teach.
Come, don thy cap, and mount thy horse;
The Dame must patience take perforce."—

XXXII.

"Submit we then to force," said Clare.
"But let this barbarous lord despair
His purposed aim to win;
Let him take living, land, and life,
But to be Marmion's wedded wife
In me were deadly sin.
And if it be the King's decree,
That I must find no sanctuary,
In that inviolable dome,
Where even a homicide might come,
And safely rest his head,
Though at its open portals stood,

* See Note 72.

Thirsting to pour forth blood for blood,
 The kinsmen of the dead ;
 Yet one asylum is my own,
 Against the dreaded hour ;
 A low, a silent, and a lone,
 Where kings have little power.
 One victim is before me there ;—
 Mother, your blessing, and in prayer
 Remember your unhappy Clare ! ”—
 Loud weeps the Abbess, and bestows
 Kind blessings many a one ;
 Weeping and wailing loud arose,
 Round patient Clare, the clamorous woes
 Of every simple nun.
 His eyes the gentle Eustace dried,
 And scarce rude Blount the sight could bide.
 Then took the squire her rein,
 And gently led away her steed,
 And, by each courteous word and deed,
 To cheer her strove in vain.

XXXIII.

But scant three miles the band had rode,
 When o'er a height they passed,
 And sudden, close before them showed,
 His towers, Tantallon vast ;
 Broad, massive, high, and stretching far,
 And held impregnable in war.
 On a projecting rock they rose,
 And round three sides the ocean flows ;
 The fourth did battled walls enclose
 And double mound and fosse.
 By narrow drawbridge, outworks strong,
 Through studded gates, an entrance long,
 To the main court they cross.
 It was a wide and stately square :
 Around were lodgings, fit and fair,
 And towers of various form,
 Which on the court projected far,
 And broke its lines quadrangular.

Here was square keep, there turret high
Or pinnacle that sought the sky,
Whence oft the warder could descry
The gathering ocean storm.

XXXIV.

Here did they rest.—The princely care
Of Douglas, why should I declare,
Or say they met reception fair?
Or why the tidings say,
Which, varying, to Tantallon came,
By hurrying posts, or fleeter fame,
With every varying day?
And, first, they heard King James had won
Etall, and Wark, and Ford; and then,
That Norham Castle strong was ta'en.
At that sore marvelled Marmion;
And Douglas hoped his Monarch's hand
Would soon subdue Northumberland.

But whispered news there came,
That, while his host inactive lay,
And melted by degrees away,
King James was dallying off the day
With Heron's wily dame.

Such acts to chronicles I yield;
Go seek them there, and see:
Mine is a tale of Flodden Field,
And not a history.

At length they heard the Scottish host
On that high ridge had made their post
Which frowns o'er Millfield Plain;
And that brave Surrey many a band
Had gathered in the Southern land,
And marched into Northumberland,
And camp at Wooler ta'en.

Marmion, like charger in the stall,
That hears, without, the trumpet-call,
Began to chafe, and swear:—

“A sorry thing to hide my head

In castle, like a fearful maid,
When such a field is near !
Needs must I see this battle-day :
Death to my fame, if such a fray
Were fought, and Marmion away !
The Douglas, too, I wot not why,
Hath 'bated of his courtesy :
No longer in his halls I'll stay."—
Then bade his band they should array
For march against the dawning day.

INTRODUCTION TO CANTO SIXTH.

TO RICHARD HEBER, ESQ.

Mertoun House, Christmas.

HEAP on more wood !—the wind is chill ;
But let it whistle as it will,
We'll keep our Christmas merry still.
Each age has deemed the new-born year
The fittest time for festal cheer.
Even, heathen yet, the savage Dane
At Iol more deep the mead did drain ; *
High on the beach his galleys drew,
And feasted all his pirate crew ;
Then in his low and pine-built hall,
Where shields and axes decked the wall,
They gorged upon the half-dressed steer,
Caroused in seas of sable beer,
While round, in brutal jest, were thrown
The half-gnawed rib and marrow-bone ;
Or listened all, in grim delight,
While Scalds yelled out the joys of fight.
Then forth, in frenzy, would they hie,
While wildly-loose their red locks fly,
And dancing round the blazing pile,
They make such barbarous mirth the while,
As best might to the mind recall
The boisterous joys of Odin's hall.

* See Note 73.

And well our Christian sires of old
Loved when the year its course had rolled,
And brought blithe Christmas back again,
With all his hospitable train.
Domestic and religious rite
Gave honour to the holy night :
On Christmas eve the bells were rung ;
On Christmas eve the mass was sung—
That only night, in all the year,
Saw the stoled priest the chalice rear.
The damsel donned her kirtle sheen ;
The hall was dressed with holly green ;
Forth to the wood did merry-men go
To gather in the mistletoe.
Then opened wide the baron's hall
To vassal, tenant, serf, and all ;
Power laid his rod of rule aside,
And Ceremony doffed his pride.
The heir, with roses in his shoes,
That night might village partner choose ;
The lord, underogating, share
The vulgar game of "post and pair." *
All hailed, with uncontrolled delight,
And general voice, the happy night,
That to the cottage, as the crown,
Brought tidings of salvation down.

The fire, with well-dried logs supplied,
Went roaring up the chimney wide ;
The huge hall-table's oaken face,
Scrubbed till it shone, the day to grace,
Bore then upon its massive board
No mark to part the squire and lord.
Then was brought in the lusty brawn
By old blue-coated serving-man ;
Then the grim boar's-head frowned on high,
Crested with bays and rosemary.
Well can the green-garbed ranger tell,
How, when, and where, the monster fell ;

* Post and pair, an old game at cards.

What dogs before his death he tore,
And all the baiting of the boar.
The wassel round, in good brown bowls,
Garnished with ribbons, blithely trowls.
There the huge sirloin reeked ; hard by
Plum-porridge stood, and Christmas pie ;
Nor failed old Scotland to produce,
At such high tide, her savoury goose.
Then came the merry maskers in,
And carols roared with blithesome din ;
If unmelodious was the song,
It was a hearty note, and strong.
Who lists may in their mumming see
Traces of ancient mystery ;*
White shirts supplied the masquerade,
And smutted cheeks the visors made ;
But, O ! what maskers, richly dight,
Can boast of bosoms half so light !
England was merry England, when
Old Christmas brought his sports again.
'Twas Christmas broached the mightiest ale ;
'Twas Christmas told the merriest tale ;
A Christmas gambol oft could cheer
The poor man's heart through half the year.

Still linger, in our northern clime,
Some remnants of the good old time ;
And still, within our valleys here,
We hold the kindred title dear,
Even when, perchance, its far-fetched claim
To Southron ear sounds empty name ;
For course of blood, our proverbs deem,
Is warmer than the mountain-stream.
And thus my Christmas still I hold
Where my great-grandsire came of old,
With amber beard and flaxen hair,
And reverend apostolic air,
The feast and holy-tide to share,

* See Note 74.

And mix sobriety with wine,
And honest mirth with thoughts divine :
Small thought was his, in after time
E'er to be hitched into a rhyme.
The simple sire could only boast,
That he was loyal to his cost ;
The banished race of kings revered,
And lost his land—but kept his beard.

In these dear halls, where welcome kind
Is with fair liberty combined ;
Where cordial friendship gives the hand,
And flies constraint the magic wand
Of the fair dame that rules the land,
Little we heed the tempest drear,
While music, mirth, and social cheer,
Speed on their wings the passing year,
And Mertoun's halls are fair e'en now
When not a leaf is on the bough.
Tweed loves them well, and turns again,
As loath to leave the sweet domain ;
And holds his mirror to her face,
And clips her with a close embrace :—
Gladly as he, we seek the dome,
And as reluctant turn us home.

How just, that, at this time of glee,
My thoughts should, Heber, turn to thee !
For many a merry hour we've known,
And heard the chimes of midnight's tone.
Cease, then, my friend ! a moment cease,
And leave these classic tomes in peace !
Of Roman and of Grecian lore,
Sure mortal brain can hold no more.
These ancients, as Noll Bluff might say,
"Were pretty fellows in their day ;"
But time and tide o'er all prevail—
On Christmas eve a Christmas tale—
Of wonder and of war—"Profane !
What ! leave the lofty Latian strain,

Her stately prose, her verse's charms,
 To hear the clash of rusty arms ;
 In Fairy Land or Limbo-lost,
 To jostle conjurer and ghost,
 Goblin and witch !"—Nay, Heber dear,
 Before you touch my charter, hear ;
 Though Leyden aids, alas ! no more,
 My cause with many-languaged lore,
 This may I say :—in realms of death
 Ulysses meets Alcides' wraith ;
 Æneas, upon Thracia's shore,
 The ghost of murdered Polydore ;
 For omens, we in Livy cross,
 At every turn, locutus Bos.
 As grave and duly speaks that ox
 As if he told the price of stocks,
 Or held, in Rome republican,
 The place of common councilman.

All nations have their omens drear,
 Their legends wild of woe and fear.
 To Cambria look—the peasant see,
 Bethink him of Glendowerdy,
 And shun "the spirit's Blasted Tree."*
 The Highlander, whose red claymore
 The battle turned on Maida's shore,
 Will, on a Friday morn, look pale,
 If asked to tell a fairy tale : †
 He fears the vengeful Elfin King,
 Who leaves that day his grassy ring ;
 Invisible to human ken,
 He walks among the sons of men.

Didst e'er, dear Heber, pass along
 Beneath the towers of Franchémont,
 Which, like an eagle's nest in air,
 Hang o'er the stream and hamlet fair ?

* According to Welsh tradition, Owen Glendower, having slain his rival Howel Sele in single combat, concealed the body in a hollow oak, where it remained for ten years before it was brought to the light of day.

† See Note 75.

Deep in their vaults, the peasants say,
A mighty treasure buried lay,
Amassed through rapine and through wrong
By the last Lord of Franchémont.*
The iron chest is bolted hard ;
A huntsman sits, its constant guard.
Around his neck his horn is hung,
His hanger in his belt is slung ;
Before his feet his bloodhounds lie :
An 'twere not for his gloomy eye,
Whose withering glance no heart can brook,
As true a huntsman doth he look
As bugle e'er in brake did sound,
Or ever hollooeo to a hound.
To chase the fiend, and win the prize,
In that same dungeon ever tries
An aged necromantic priest ;
It is an hundred years at least
Since 'twixt them first the strife begun,
And neither yet has lost or won.
And oft the Conjuror's words will make
• The stubborn Demon groan and quake ;
And oft the bands of iron break,
Or burst one lock, that still amain,
Fast as 'tis opened, shuts again.
That magic strife within the tomb
May last until the day of doom,
Unless the adept shall learn to tell
The very word that clenched the spell,
When Franch'mont locked the treasure cell.
An hundred years are passed and gone,
And scarce three letters has he won.

Such general superstition may
Excuse for old Pitscottie say ;
Whose gossip history has given
My song the messenger from Heaven,
That warned, in Lithgow, Scotland's King,
Nor less the infernal summoning ;

* See Note 76.

May pass the Monk of Durham's tale,
 Whose Demon fought in Gothic mail;
 May pardon plead for Fordun grave,
 Who told of Gifford's Goblin-Cave.
 But why such instances to you,
 Who, in an instant, can review
 Your treasured hoards of various lore,
 And furnish twenty thousand more?
 Hoards, not like theirs whose volumes rest,
 Like treasures in the Franch'mont chest,
 While gripple owners still refuse
 To others what they cannot use;
 Give them the priest's whole century,
 They shall not spell you letters three;
 Their pleasure in the books the same
 The magpie takes in pilfered gem.
 Thy volumes, open as thy heart,
 Delight, amusement, science, art,
 To every ear and eye impart;
 Yet who, of all who thus employ them,
 Can, like the owner's self, enjoy them?—
 But, hark! I hear the distant drum:
 The day of Flodden Field is come.—
 Adieu, dear Heber! life and health,
 And store of literary wealth.

CANTO SIXTH.

THE BATTLE.

WHILE great events were on the gale,
 And each hour brought a varying tale,
 And the demeanour, changed and cold,
 Of Douglas fretted Marmion bold,
 And, like the impatient steed of war,
 He snuffed the battle from afar;
 And hopes were none, that back again
 Herald should come from Terouenne,

*"Tantallon's dizzy sleep
Hung o'er the margin of the deep."*

Where England's King in leaguer lay,
Before decisive battle-day ;—
Whilst these things were, the mournful Clare
Did in the Dame's devotions share :
For the good Countess ceaseless prayed,
To Heaven and Saints her sons to aid ;
And, with short interval, did pass
From prayer to book, from book to mass ;
And all in high baronial pride,—
A life both dull and dignified.
Yet as Lord Marmion nothing pressed
Upon her intervals of rest,
Dejected Clara well could bear
The formal state, the lengthened prayer ;
Though dearest to her wounded heart
The hours that she might spend apart.

II.

I said, Tantallon's dizzy steep
Hung o'er the margin of the deep.
Many a rude tower and rampart there
Repelled the insult of the air,
Which, when the tempest vexed the sky,
Half breeze, half spray, came whistling by.
Above the rest, a turret square
Did o'er its Gothic entrance bear,
Of sculpture rude, a stony shield :
The Bloody Heart was in the Field,
And in the chief three mullets stood,
The cognizance of Douglas blood.
The turret held a narrow stair,
Which, mounted, gave you access where
A parapet's embattled row
Did seaward round the castle go ;
Sometimes in dizzy steps descending,
Sometimes in narrow circuit bending,
Sometimes in platform broad extending.
Its varying circle did combine
Bulwark, and bartizan, and line,
And bastion, tower, and vantage-coign ;

Above the booming ocean leant
 The far-projecting battlement ;
 The billows burst, in ceaseless flow,
 Upon the precipice below.
 Where'er Tantallon faced the land,
 Gate-works, and walls, were strongly manned :
 No need upon the sea-girt side—
 The steepy rock, and frantic tide,
 Approach of human step denied ;
 And thus these lines, and ramparts rude,
 Were left in deepest solitude.

III.

And, for they were so lonely, Clare
 Would to these battlements repair,
 And muse upon her sorrows there,
 And list the sea-bird's cry ;
 Or slow, like noontide ghost, would glide
 Along the dark-grey bulwarks' side,
 And ever on the heaving tide
 Look down with weary eye.
 Oft did the cliff, and swelling main,
 Recall the thoughts of Whitby's fane—
 A home she ne'er might see again ;
 For she had laid adown,
 So Douglas bade, the hood and veil,
 And frontlet of the cloister pale,
 And Benedictine gown :
 It were unseemly sight, he said,
 A novice out of convent shade.—
 Now her bright locks, with sunny glow,
 Again adorned her brow of snow ;
 Her mantle rich, whose borders, round,
 A deep and fretted broidery bound,
 In golden foldings sought the ground ;
 Of holy ornament, alone
 Remained a cross with ruby stone ;
 And often did she look
 On that which in her hand she bore,

With velvet bound, and broidered o'er,
Her breviary book;
In such a place, so lone, so grim,
At dawning pale, or twilight dim,
It fearful would have been
To meet a form so richly dressed,
With book in hand and cross on breast,
And such a woeful mien.
Fitz-Eustace, loitering with his bow,
To practise on the gull and crow,
Saw her, at distance, gliding slow,
And did by Mary swear,
Some love-lorn Fay she might have been,
Or, in romance, some spell-bound Queen;
For ne'er, in work-day world, was seen
A form so witching fair.

IV.

Once walking thus, at evening tide,
It chanced a gliding sail she spied,
And, sighing, thought—"The Abbess there,
Perchance, does to her home repair;
Her peaceful rule, where Duty, free,
Walks hand in hand with Charity;
Where oft Devotion's tranced glow
Can such a glimpse of heaven bestow,
That the enraptured sisters see
High vision and deep mystery;
The very form of Hilda fair,*
Hovering upon the sunny air,
And smiling on her votaries' prayer.
O! wherefore, to my duller eye,
Did still the Saint her form deny!
Was it that, seared by sinful scorn,
My heart could neither melt nor burn?
Or lie my warm affections low,
With him that taught them first to glow?
Yet, gentle Abbess, well I knew,
To pay thy kindness grateful due,

* See Note 77.

And well could brook the mild command
 That ruled thy simple maiden band.—
 How different now! condemned to bide
 My doom from this dark tyrant's pride.—
 But Marmion has to learn, ere long,
 That constant mind, and hate of wrong,
 Descended to a feeble girl,
 From Red De Clare, stout Gloster's Earl:
 Of such a stem, a sapling weak,
 He ne'er shall bend, although he break.

V.

"But see!—what makes this armour here?"

For in her path there lay
 Targe, corselet, helm;—she viewed them near.—
 "The breastplate pierced!—Ay, much I fear,
 Weak fence wert thou 'gainst foeman's spear,
 That hath made fatal entrance here,
 As these dark blood-gouts say.—
 Thus Wilton!—Oh! not corselet's ward,
 Not truth as diamond pure and hard,
 Could be thy manly bosom's guard,
 On yon disastrous day!"

She raised her eyes in mournful mood,—
 WILTON himself before her stood!
 It might have seemed his passing ghost,
 For every youthful grace was lost;
 And joy unwonted, and surprise,
 Gave their strange wildness to his eyes.—
 Expect not, noble dames and lords,
 That I can tell such scene in words:
 What skilful limner e'er would choose
 To paint the rainbow's varying hues,
 Unless to mortal it were given
 To dip his brush in dyes of heaven?
 Far less can my weak line declare

Each changing passion's shade;
 Brightening to rapture from despair,
 Sorrow, surprise, and pity there,
 And joy, with her angelic air,

And hope, that paints the future fair,
Their varying hues displayed :
Each o'er its rival's ground extending,
Alternate conquering, shifting, blending,
Till all, fatigued, the conflict yield,
And mighty Love retains the field.
Shortly I tell what then he said,
By many a tender word delayed,
And modest blush, and bursting sigh,
And question kind, and fond reply.

VI.

De Winton's History.

" Forget we that disastrous day
When senseless in the lists I lay.
Thence dragged,—but how I cannot know,
For sense and recollection fled,—
I found me on a pallet low,
Within my ancient beadsman's shed:
Austin,—remember'st thou, my Clare,
How thou didst blush when the old man,
When first our infant love began,
Said we would make a matchless pair?—
Menials, and friends, and kinsmen fled
From the degraded traitor's bed,—
He only held my burning head,
And tended me for many a day,
While wounds and fever held their sway,
But far more needful was his care,
When sense returned to wake despair ;
For I did tear the closing wound,
And dash me frantic on the ground,
If e'er I heard the name of Clare.
At length to calmer reason brought,
Much by his kind attendance wrought,
With him I left my native strand,
And, in a palmer's weeds arrayed,
My hated name and form to shade,
I journeyed many a land ;

No more a lord of rank and birth,
But mingled with the dregs of earth.

Oft Austin for my reason feared,
When I would sit, and deeply brood
On dark revenge, and deeds of blood,
Or wild mad schemes upreared.

My friend at length fell sick, and said,

God would remove him soon ;

And while upon his dying bed,

He begged of me a boon—

If e'er my deadliest enemy

Beneath my brand should conquered lie,

Even then my mercy should awake,

And spare his life for Austin's sake.

VII.

“ Still restless as a second Cain,

To Scotland next my route was ta'en—

Full well the paths I knew.

Fame of my fate made various sound,

That death in pilgrimage I found,

That I had perished of my wound,—

None cared which tale was true.

And living eye could never guess

De Wilton in his palmer's dress ;

For now that sable slough is shed,

And trimmed my shaggy beard and head,

I scarcely know me in the glass.

A chance most wond'rous did provide,

That I should be that Baron's guide—

I will not name his name !—

Vengeance to God alone belongs ;

But, when I think on all my wrongs,

My blood is liquid flame !

And ne'er the time shall I forget,

When, in a Scottish hostel set,

Dark looks we did exchange :

What were his thoughts I cannot tell ;

But in my bosom mustered Hell

Its plans of dark revenge.

VIII.

“ A word of vulgar augury,
That broke from me, I scarce knew why,
Brought on a village tale;
Which wrought upon his moody sprite,
And sent him armed forth by night.
I borrowed steed and mail,
And weapons, from his sleeping band;
And, passing from a postern door,
We met, and ’countered hand to hand,—
He fell on Gifford-moor.
For the death-stroke my brand I drew
(O then my helmèd head he knew,
The palmer’s cowl was gone),
Then had three inches of my blade
The heavy debt of vengeance paid,—
My hand the thought of Austin staid;
I left him there alone.—
O good old man! even from the grave
Thy spirit could thy master save:
If I had slain my foeman, ne’er
Had Whitby’s Abbess, in her fear,
Given to my hand this packet dear,
Of power to clear my injured fame,
And vindicate De Wilton’s name.—
Perchance you heard the Abbess tell
Of the strange pageantry of Hell,
That broke our secret speech—
It rose from the infernal shade,
Or featly was some juggle played,
A tale of peace to teach,
Appeal to Heaven I judged was best,
When my name came among the rest.

IX.

“ Now here, within Tantallon Hold,
To Douglas late my tale I told,
To whom my house was known of old.
Won by my proofs, his falchion bright
This eve anew shall dub me knight.

These were the arms that once did turn
 The tide of fight on Otterburne,
 And Harry Hotspur forced to yield,
 When the Dead Douglas won the field.*
 These Angus gave—his armourer's care,
 Ere morn, shall every breach repair;
 For nought, he said, was in his halls,
 But ancient armour on the walls,
 And aged chargers in the stalls,
 And women, priests, and grey-haired men;
 The rest were all in Twisel-glen.†
 And now I watch my armour here,
 By law of arms, till midnight's near;
 Then, once again a belted knight,
 Seek Surrey's camp with dawn of light.

X.

"There soon again we meet, my Clare!
 This Baron means to guide thee there:
 Douglas reveres his King's command,
 Else would he take thee from his band.
 And there thy kinsman, Surrey, too,
 Will give De Wilton justice due.
 Now meeter far for martial broil,
 Firmer my limbs, and strung by toil,
 Once more"—"O Wilton! must we then
 Risk new-found happiness again,
 Trust fate of arms once more?
 And is there not a humble glen,
 Where we, content and poor,
 Might build a cottage in the shade,
 A shepherd thou, and I to aid
 Thy task on dale and moor?
 That reddening brow!—too well I know,
 Not even thy Clare can peace bestow
 While falsehood stains thy name:

* See the ballad of Otterbourne in the "Border Minstrelsy," vol. I.
 P. 345.

† Where James encamped before taking post on Flodden.

Go then to fight! Clare bids thee go!
Clare can a warrior's feelings know,
And weep a warrior's shame;
Can Red Earl Gilbert's spirit feel,
Buckle the spurs upon thy heel,
And belt thee with thy brand of steel,
And send thee forth to fame!"—

XI.

That night, upon the rocks and bay,
The midnight moonbeam slumbering lay,
And poured its silver light, and pure,
Through loophole and through embrasure,
Upon Tantallon tower and hall;
But chief where archèd windows wide
Illuminate the chapel's pride,
The sober glances fall.
Much was there need; though, seamed with scars,
Two veterans of the Douglas' wars,
Though two grey priests were there,
And each a blazing torch held high,
You could not by their blaze descry
The chapel's carving fair.
Amid that dim and smoky light,
Chequering the silvery moonshine bright,
A bishop by the altar stood,*
A noble lord of Douglas blood,
With mitre sheen and rocquet white.
Yet showed his meek and thoughtful eye
But little pride of prelacy;
More pleased that, in a barbarous age,
He gave rude Scotland Virgil's page,
Than that beneath his rule he held
The bishopric of fair Dunkeld.
Beside him ancient Angus stood,
Doffed his fur gown and sable hood:
O'er his huge form, and visage pale,
He wore a cap and shirt of mail;

* See Note 78.

And leaned his large and wrinkled hand
 Upon the huge and sweeping brand
 Which wont, of yore, in battle fray,
 His foeman's limbs to shred away,
 As wood-knife lops the sapling spray.*
 He seemed as, from the tombs around
 Rising at judgment-day,
 Some giant Douglas may be found
 In all his old array ;
 So pale his face, so huge his limb,
 So old his arms, his looks so grim.

XII.

Then at the altar Wilton kneels,
 And Clare the spurs bound on his heels ;
 And think what next he must have felt
 At buckling of the falchion belt !
 And judge how Clara changed her hue,
 While fastening on her lover's side
 A friend, which, though in danger tried,
 He once had found untrue !
 Then Douglas struck him with his blade :
 " Saint Michael and Saint Andrew aid,—
 I dub thee knight.
 Arise, Sir Ralph, De Wilton's heir !
 For King, for Church, for Lady fair,
 See that thou fight."†
 And Bishop Gawain, as he rose,
 Said, " Wilton ! grieve not for thy woes,
 Disgrace, and trouble ;
 For He, who honour best bestows,
 May give thee double."‡ De Wilton sobbed, for sob he must—
 " Where'er I meet a Douglas, trust
 That Douglas is my brother !"—
 " Nay, nay," old Angus said, " not so ;
 To Surrey's camp thou now must go,
 Thy wrongs no longer smother.

* See Note 79.

I have two sons in yonder field ;
And, if thou meet'st them under shield,
Upon them bravely—do thy worst ;
And foul fall him that blenches first !”

XIII.

Not far advanced was morning day,
When Marmion did his troop array
To Surrey's camp to ride ;
He had safe conduct for his band,
Beneath the royal seal and hand,
And Douglas gave a guide.
The ancient Earl, with stately grace,
Would Clara on her palfrey place,
And whispered, in an undertone,
“ Let the hawk stoop, his prey is flown.”—
The train from out the castle drew ;
But Marmion stopped to bid adieu :—
“ Though something I might plain,” he said,
“ Of cold respect to stranger guest,
Sent hither by your King's behest,
While in Tantallon's towers I staid ;
Part we in friendship from your land,
And, noble Earl, receive my hand.”—
But Douglas round him drew his cloak,
Folded his arms, and thus he spoke :—
“ My manors, halls, and bowers shall still
Be open at my sovereign's will,
To each one whom he lists, howe'er
Unmeet to be the owner's peer.
My castles are my King's alone,
From turret to foundation-stone :
The hand of Douglas is his own ;
And never shall in friendly grasp
The hand of such as Marmion clasp.”—

XIV.

Burned Marmion's swarthy cheek like fire,
And shook his very frame for ire,
And—“ This to me !” he said,—

"An 'twere not for thy hoary beard,
 Such hand as Marmion's had not spared
 To cleave the Douglas' head!
 And first, I tell thee, haughty Peer,
 He who does England's message here,
 Although the meanest in her state,
 May well, proud Angus, be thy mate:
 And, Douglas, more I tell thee here,
 Even in thy pitch of pride,
 Here in thy hold, thy vassals near (Nay, never look upon your lord,
 And lay your hands upon your sword),
 I tell thee, thou'rt defied!
 And if thou saidst I am not peer
 To any lord in Scotland here,
 Lowland or Highland, far or near,
 Lord Angus, thou hast lied!"

On the Earl's cheek the flush of rage
 O'ercame the ashen hue of age:
 Fierce he broke forth,—“And dar'st thou then
 To beard the lion in his den,
 The Douglas in his hall?
 And hop'st thou hence unscathed to go?—
 No, by Saint Bride of Bothwell, no!—
 Up drawbridge, grooms—what, Warder, ho!
 Let the portcullis fall!”*—

Lord Marmion turned—well was his need—
 And dashed the rowels in his steed,
 Like arrow through the archway sprung;
 The ponderous grate behind him rung:
 To pass there was such scanty room,
 The bars, descending, razed his plume.

—XXV. cu. Hoda revo

The steed along the drawbridge flies,
 Just as it trembled on the rise—
 Not lighter does the swallow skim
 Along the smooth lake's level brim—

And when Lord Marmion reached his band,
He halts, and turns with clenched hand,
And shout of loud defiance pours,
And shook his gauntlet at the towers.
“Horse! horse!” the Douglas cried, “and chase!”
But soon he reined his fury’s pace:
“A royal messenger he came,
Though most unworthy of the name.—
A letter forged! Saint Jude to speed!
Did ever knight so foul a deed! *
At first in heart it liked me ill
When the King praised his clerkly skill,
Thanks to Saint Bothan, son of mine,
Save Gawain, ne’er could pen a line:
So swore I, and I swear it still,
Let my boy-bishop fret his fill.—
Saint Mary mend my fiery mood!
Old age ne’er cools the Douglas blood,
I thought to slay him where he stood.
’Tis pity of him too,” he cried;
“Bold can he speak, and fairly ride:
I warrant him a warrior tried.”—
With this his mandate he recalls,
And slowly seeks his castle halls.

XVI.

The day in Marmion’s journey wore;
Yet, ere his passion’s gust was o’er,
They crossed the heights of Stanrig-moor
His troop more closely there he scanned,
And missed the Palmer from the band.—
“Palmer or not,” young Blount did say,
“He parted at the peep of day;
Good sooth, it was in strange array.”—
“In what array?” said Marmion, quick.
“My lord, I ill can spell the trick,
But all night long, with clink and bang,
Close to my couch did hammers clang;
At dawn the falling drawbridge rang;

* See Note 81.

And from a loophole while I peep
Old Bell-the-Cat came from the Keep,
Wrapped in a gown of sables fair,
As fearful of the morning air ;
Beneath, when that was blown aside,
A rusty shirt of mail I spied,
By Archibald won in bloody work
Against the Saracen and Turk :
Last night it hung not in the hall ;
I thought some marvel would befall.
And next I saw them saddled lead
Old Cheviot forth, the Earl's best steed—
A matchless horse, though something old,
Prompt in his paces, cool and bold.
I heard the Sheriff Sholto say,
The Earl did much the Master * pray
To use him on the battle-day ;
But he preferred"—"Nay, Henry, cease !
Thou sworn horse-courser, hold thy peace.—
Eustace, thou bear'st a brain—I pray,
What did Blount see at break of day?"—

XVII.

"In brief, my lord, we both descried
(For then I stood by Henry's side)
The Palmer mount, and outwards ride,
Upon the Earl's own favourite steed ;
All sheathed he was in armour bright,
And much resembled that same knight
Subdued by you in Cotswold fight :
Lord Angus wished him speed."—
The instant that Fitz-Eustace spoke,
A sudden light on Marmion broke ;—
"Ah ! dastard fool, to reason lost !"
He muttered, "'Twas nor fay nor ghost,
I met upon the moonlight wold,
But living man of earthly mould.—
O dotage blind and gross !

* His eldest son, the Master of Angus.

Had I but fought as wont, one thrust
Had laid De Wilton in the dust,
My path no more to cross.—
How stand we now?—he told his tale
To Douglas, and with some avail ;
'Twas therefore gloomed his rugged brow.—
Will Surrey dare to entertain,
'Gainst Marmion, charge disproved and vain ?
Small risk of that, I trow.
Yet Clare's sharp questions must I shun ;
Must separate Constance from the Nun—
Oh what a tangled web we weave,
When first we practise to deceive !—
A Palmer too !—no wonder why
I felt rebuked beneath his eye ;
I might have known there was but one
Whose look could quell Lord Marmion."

XVIII.

Stung with these thoughts, he urged to speed
His troop, and reached at eve the Tweed,
Where Lennel's convent closed their march.*
(There now is left but one frail arch.
Yet mourn thou not its cells ;
Our time a fair exchange has made :
Hard by, in hospitable shade,
A reverend pilgrim dwells,
Well worth the whole Bernardine brood
That e'er wore sandal, frock, or hood.)
Yet did Saint Bernard's Abbot there
Give Marmion entertainment fair,
And lodging for his train and Clare.
Next morn the Baron climbed the tower,
To view afar the Scottish power
Encamped on Flodden edge :
The white pavilions made a show,
Like remnants of the winter snow,
Along the dusky ridge.

* See Note 82.

Long Marmion looked. At length his eye
Unusual movement might descry
Amid the shifting lines:
The Scottish host drawn out appears,
For, flashing on the hedge of spears,
The eastern sunbeam shines.
Their front now deepening, now extending ;
Their flank inclining, wheeling, bending,
Now drawing back, and now descending,
The skilful Marmion well could know
They watched the motions of some foe
Who traversed on the plain below.

XIX.

Even so it was. From Flodden ridge
The Scots beheld the English host
Leave Barmore-wood, their evening post,
And heedful watched them as they crossed
The Till by Twisel Bridge.*
High sight it is, and haughty, while
They dive into the deep defile ;
Beneath the caverned cliff they fall,
Beneath the castle's airy wall.
By rock, by oak, by hawthorn tree,
Troop after troop are disappearing ;
Troop after troop their banners rearing,
Upon the eastern bank you see.
Still pouring down the rocky den
Where flows the sullen Till,
And rising from the dim-wood glen,
Standards on standards, men on men,
In slow succession still,
And sweeping o'er the Gothic arch,
And pressing on, in ceaseless march,
To gain the opposing hill.
That morn, to many a trumpet-clang,
Twisel ! thy rock's deep echo rang ;
And many a chief of birth and rank,
Saint Helen ! at thy fountain drank.

* See Note 83.

Thy hawthorn glade, which now we see
In spring-tide bloom so lavishly,
Had then from many an axe its doom,
To give the marching columns room.

12 2 XX.

And why stands Scotland idly now,
Dark Flodden ! on thy airy brow,
Since England gains the pass the while,
And struggles through the deep defile ?
What checks the fiery soul of James ?
Why sits that champion of the dames
Inactive on his steed,
And sees, between him and his land,
Between him and Tweed's southern strand,
His host Lord Surrey lead ?
What 'vails the vain knight-errant's brand :—
O Douglas, for thy leading wand !
Fierce Randolph, for thy speed !
Oh for one hour of Wallace wight,
Or well-skilled Bruce, to rule the fight,
And cry, " Saint Andrew and our right ! "
Another sight had seen that morn,
From Fate's dark book a leaf been torn,
And Flodden had been Bannockbourne !—
The precious hour has passed in vain,
And England's host has gained the plain ;
Wheeling their march, and circling still,
Around the base of Flodden-hill.

XXI. 5. hominum :

Ere yet the bands met Marmion's eye,
Fitz-Eustace shouted loud and high,
"Hark ! hark ! my lord, an English drum !
And see ascending squadrons come
Between Tweed's river and the hill,
Foot, horse, and cannon :—hap what hap,
My basnet to a prentice cap,
Lord Surrey's o'er the Till !—
Yet more ! yet more !—how far arrayed
They file from out the hawthorn shade,

And sweep so gallant by !
With all their banners bravely spread,
And all their armour flashing high,
Saint George might waken from the dead,
To see fair England's standards fly."—
"Stint in thy prate," quoth Blount ; "thou'dst best,
And listen to our lord's behest."—
With kindling brow Lord Marmion said,
"This instant be our band arrayed ;
The river must be quickly crossed,
That we may join Lord Surrey's host.
If fight King James—as well I trust
That fight he will, and fight he must—
The Lady Clare behind our lines
Shall tarry, while the battle joins."

XXII.

Himself he swift on horseback threw,
Scarce to the Abbot bade adieu ;
Far less would listen to his prayer
To leave behind the helpless Clare.
Down to the Tweed his band he drew,
And muttered as the flood they view,
"The pheasant in the falcon's claw,
He scarce will yield to please a daw :
Lord Angus may the Abbot awe,
So Clare shall bide with me."
Then on that dangerous ford, and deep,
Where to the Tweed Leat's eddies creep,
He ventured desperately :
And not a moment will he bide,
Till squire, or groom, before him ride ;
Headmost of all he stems the tide,
And stems it gallantly.
Eustace held Clare upon her horse,
Old Hubert led her rein,
Stoutly they braved the current's course,
And, though far downward driven perforce,
The southern bank they gain ;
Behind them, straggling, came to shore,

As best they might, the train.
Each o'er his head his yew-bow bore,
A caution not in vain :
Deep need that day that every string,
By wet unharmed, should sharply ring.
A moment then Lord Marmion stayed,
And breathed his steed, his men arrayed,
Then forward moved his band,
Until, Lord Surrey's rearguard won,
He halted by a cross of stone,
That, on a hillock standing lone,
Did all the field command.

XXIII.

Hence might they see the full array
Of either host, for deadly fray ;*
Their marshalled lines stretched east and west,
And fronted north and south,
And distant salutation passed
From the loud cannon mouth ;
Not in the close successive rattle
That breathes the voice of modern battle,
But slow and far between.—
The hillock gained, Lord Marmion staid :
“ Here, by this cross,” he gently said,
“ You well may view the scene ;
Here shalt thou tarry, lovely Clare :
O think of Marmion in thy prayer !—
Thou wilt not ?—well—no less my care
Shall, watchful, for thy weal prepare.—
You, Blount and Eustace, are her guard,
With ten picked archers of my train ;
With England if the day go hard,
To Berwick speed amain.—
But if we conquer, cruel maid !
My spoils shall at your feet be laid,
When here we meet again.”
He waited not for answer there,
And would not mark the maid's despair,

* See Note 84.

Nor heed the discontented look
 From either squire ; but spurred amain,
 And, dashing through the battle-plain,
 His way to Surrey took.

XXIV.

“—The good Lord Marmion, by my life !
 Welcome to danger’s hour !—
 Short greeting serves in time of strife !
 Thus have I ranged my power :—
 Myself will rule this central host ;
 Stout Stanley fronts their right ;
 My sons command the vaward post,
 With Brian Tunstall, stainless knight ;*
 Lord Dacre, with his horsemen light,
 Shall be in rearward of the fight,
 And succour those that need it most.
 Now gallant Marmion, well I know,
 Would gladly to the vanguard go ;
 Edmund, the Admiral, Tunstall there,
 With thee their charge will blithely share :
 There fight thine own retainers too,
 Beneath De Burg, thy steward true.”—
 “Thanks, noble Surrey !” Marmion said ;
 Nor further greeting there he paid,
 But, parting like a thunderbolt,
 First in the vanguard made a halt,
 Where such a shout there rose
 Of “Marmion ! Marmion !” that the cry,
 Up Flodden mountain shrilling high,
 Startled the Scottish foes.

XXV.

Blount and Fitz-Eustace rested still
 With Lady Clare upon the hill ;
 On which (for far the day was spent)
 The western sunbeams now were bent.
 The cry they heard, its meaning knew,
 Could plain their distant comrades view :

* See Note 85.

Sadly to Blount did Eustace say,
"Unworthy office here to stay!
No hope of gilded spurs to-day.—
But, see! look up! on Flodden bent
The Scottish foe has fired his tent."
And sudden, as he spöke,
From the sharp ridges of the hill,
All downward to the banks of Till,
Was wreathed in sable smoke;
Volumed and vast, and rolling far,
The cloud enveloped Scotland's war
As down the hill they broke;
Nor martial shout, nor minstrel tone,
Announced their march; their tread alone
At times one warning trumpet blown,
At times a stifled hum,
Told England, from his mountain-throne
King James did rushing come.—
Scarce could they hear or see their foes,
Until at weapon-point they close.—
They close, in clouds of smoke and dust,
With sword-sway and with lance's thrust;
And such a yell was there,
Of sudden and portentous birth,
As if men fought upon the earth
And fiends in upper air;
O life and death were in the shout,
Recoil and rally, charge and rout,
And triumph and despair.—
Long looked the anxious squires; their eye
Could in the darkness nought descry.

XXVI.

At length the freshening western blast
Aside the shroud of battle cast;
And, first, the ridge of mingled spears
Above the brightening cloud appears;
And in the smoke the pennons flew,
As in the storm the white sea-mew.

Then marked they, dashing broad and far,
The broken billows of the war,
And plumèd crests of chieftains brave,
Floating like foam upon the wave ;

But nought distinct they see :
Wide raged the battle on the plain ;
Spears shook, and falchions flashed amain ;
Fell England's arrow-flight like rain ;
Crests rose, and stooped, and rose again,
Wild and disorderly.

Amid the scene of tumult, high
They saw Lord Marmion's falcon fly ;
And stainless Tunstall's banner white,
And Edmund Howard's lion bright,
Still bear them bravely in the fight,

Although against them come,
Of gallant Gordons many a one,
And many a stubborn Highlandman,
And many a rugged Border clan,
With Huntly, and with Home.

XXVII.

Far on the left, unseen the while,
Stanley broke Lennox and Argyle ;
Though there the western mountaineer
Rushed with bare bosom on the spear,
And flung the feeble targe aside,
And with both hands the broadsword plied :
'Twas vain. But Fortune, on the right,
With fickle smile, cheered Scotland's fight.
Then fell that spotless banner white,

The Howard's lion fell ;
Yet still Lord Marmion's falcon flew
With wavering flight, while fiercer grew
Around the battle-yell.

The Border slogan rent the sky ;
A Home ! a Gordon ! was the cry ;
Loud were the clanging blows :
Advanced—forced back—now low, now high,
The pennon sunk and rose ;

As bends the bark's mast in the gale,
When rent are rigging, shrouds, and sail,
It wavered 'mid the foes.
No longer Blount the view could bear :—
"By heaven, and all its saints ! I swear
I will not see it lost !
Fitz-Eustace, you with Lady Clare
May bid your beads, and patter prayer, —
I gallop to the host."
And to the fray he rode amain,
Followed by all the archer train.
The fiery youth, with desperate charge,
Made, for a space, an opening large—
The rescued banner rose ;
But darkly closed the war around,
Like pine-tree, rooted from the ground,
It sunk among the foes.
Then Eustace mounted too ;—yet staid,
As loath to leave the helpless maid,
When, fast as shaft can fly,
Bloodshot his eyes, his nostrils spread,
The loose rein dangling from his head,
Housing and saddle bloody red,
Lord Marmion's steed rushed by ;
And Eustace, maddening at the sight,
A look and sign to Clara cast,
To mark he would return in haste,
Then plunged into the fight.

XXVIII.

Ask me not what the maiden feels,
Left in that dreadful hour alone :
Perchance her reason stoops, or reels ;
Perchance a courage, not her own,
Braces her mind to desperate tone.—
The scattered van of England wheels ;—
She only said, as loud in air
The tumult roared, "Is Wilton there?"—
They fly, or, maddened by despair,
Fight but to die,— "Is Wilton there?"—

With that, straight up the hill there rode
 Two horsemen drenched with gore,
 And in their arms a helpless load,
 A wounded knight, they bore.
 His hand still strained the broken brand ;
 His arms were smeared with blood and sand :
 Dragged from among the horses' feet,
 With dinted shield and helmet beat,
 The falcon-crest and plumage gone,
 Can that be haughty Marmion !.....
 Young Blount his armour did unlace,
 And, gazing on his ghastly face,
 Said—"By Saint George, he's gone !
 That spear-wound has our master sped,
 And see the deep cut on his head !

Good-night to Marmion."——

'Unnurtured Blount ! thy brawling cease :
 He opes his eyes," said Eustace ; "peace !"——

XXIX.

When, doffed his casque, he felt free air,
 Around 'gan Marmion wildly stare :—
 "Where's Harry Blount ? Fitz-Eustace where ?
 Linger ye here, ye hearts of hare !
 Redeem my pennon—charge again !
 Cry, 'Marmion to the rescue !'—Vain !
 Last of my race, on battle-plain
 That shout shall ne'er be heard again !—
 Yet my last thought is England's—fly,
 To Dacre bear my signet-ring ;
 Tell him his squadrons up to bring.—
 Fitz-Eustace, to Lord Surrey hie :
 'Tunstall lies dead upon the field,
 His life-blood stains the spotless shield ;
 Edmund is down ; my life is reft ;
 The Admiral alone is left :—
 Let Stanley charge with spur of fire,—
 With Chester charge, and Lancashire,
 Full upon Scotland's central host,
 Or victory and England's lost.—

Must I bid twice?—hence; varlets! fly!
 Leave Marmion here alone—to die.”
 They parted, and alone he lay;
 Clare drew her from the sight away,
 Till pain wrung forth a lowly moan,
 And half he murmured, “Is there none,
 Of all my halls have nursed,
 Page, squire, or groom, one cup to bring
 Of blessed water, from the spring,
 To slake my dying thirst!”—

XXX.

O Woman! in our hours of ease,
 Uncertain, coy, and hard to please,
 And variable as the shade
 By the light quivering aspen made;
 When pain and anguish wring the brow,
 A ministering angel thou!—
 Scarce were the piteous accents said,
 When, with the Baron's casque, the maid
 To the nigh streamlet ran:
 Forgot were hatred, wrongs, and fears;
 The plaintive voice alone she hears,
 Sees but the dying man;
 She stooped her by the runnel's side—
 But in abhorrence backward drew;
 For, oozing from the mountain's side,
 Where raged the war, a dark-red tide
 Was curdling in the streamlet blue.
 Where shall she turn!—behold her mark
 A little fountain cell;
 Where water, clear as diamond-spark,
 In a stone basin fell.
 Above, some half-worn letters say,
 Drink, weary pilgrim, drink, and pray,
 For the kind soul of Sybil Grey,
 Who built this cross and well.
 She filled the helm, and back she hied,
 And with surprise and joy espied
 A monk supporting Marmion's head;

A pious man, whom duty brought,
To dubious verge of battle fought,
To shrieve the dying, bless the dead.

XXXI.

Deep drank Lord Marmion of the wave,
And as she stooped his brow to lave—
“Is it the hand of Clare,” he said,
“Or injured Constance, bathes my head?”
Then, as remembrance rose,—
“Speak not to me of shrift or prayer,
I must redress her woes!
Short space, few words, are mine to spare;
Forgive and listen, gentle Clare!”
“Alas!” she said, “the while,
O think of your immortal weal!
In vain for Constance is your zeal;
She——died at Holy Isle.”—
Lord Marmion started from the ground,
As light as if he felt no wound;
Though in the action burst the tide
In torrents from his wounded side.
“Then it was truth!”—he said—“I knew
That the dark presage must be true.—
I would the Fiend, to whom belongs
The vengeance due to all her wrongs,
Would spare me but a day!
For wasting fire, and dying groan,
And priests slain on the altar-stone,
Might bribe him for delay.
It may not be!—this dizzy trance—
Curse on yon base marauder’s lance,
And doubly cursed my failing brand!
A sinful heart makes feeble hand.”—
Then, fainting, down on earth he sunk,
Supported by the trembling Monk.

XXXII.

With fruitless labour Clara bound,
And strove to stanch, the gushing wound;

The Monk, with unavailing cares,
Exhausted all the Church's prayers.
Ever he said that, close and near,
A lady's voice was in his ear,
And that the priest he could not hear,
For that she ever sung,
"In the lost battle, borne down by the flying,
Where mingles war's rattle with groans of the dying!"

So the notes rung;—
"Avoid thee, Fiend!—with cruel hand,
Shake not the dying sinner's sand!—
O look, my son, upon yon sign
Of the Redeemer's grace divine;
O think on faith and bliss!—
By many a deathbed I have been,
And many a sinner's parting seen,
But never aught like this."—
The war, that for a space did fail,
Now trebly thundering swelled the gale,
And—STANLEY! was the cry.
A light on Marmion's visage spread,
And fired his glazing eye;
With dying hand above his head
He shook the fragment of his blade,
And shouted, "Victory!—
Charge, Chester, charge! On, Stanley, on!"
Were the last words of Marmion.

XXXIII.

By this, though deep the evening fell,
Still rose the battle's deadly swell,
For still the Scots, around their King,
Unbroken, fought in desperate ring.
Where's now their victor vaward wing,
Where Huntly, and where Home?—
O for a blast of that dread horn,
On Fontarabian echoes borne,
That to King Charles did come,
When Rowland brave, and Olivier,

And every paladin and peer,
 On Roncesvalles died !—
 Such blast might warn them, not in vain,
 To quit the plunder of the slain,
 And turn the doubtful day again,
 While yet on Flodden-side,
 Afar, the Royal Standard flies,
 And round it toils, and bleeds, and dies,
 Our Caledonian pride !
 In vain the wish—for far away,
 While spoil and havoc mark their way,
 Near Sybil's Cross the plunderers stray.—
 “O Lady,” cried the Monk, “away !”—
 And placed her on her steed ;
 And led her to the chapel fair
 Of Tillmouth upon Tweed.
 There all the night they spent in prayer,
 And, at the dawn of morning, there
 She met her kinsman, Lord Fitz-Clare.

XXXIV.

But as they left the dark'ning heath,
 More desperate grew the strife of death.
 The English shafts in volleys hailed,
 In headlong charge their horse assailed ;
 Front, flank, and rear, the squadrons sweep,
 To break the Scottish circle deep
 That fought around their King.
 But yet, though thick the shafts as snow,
 Though charging knights like whirlwinds go,
 Though billmen ply the ghastly blow,
 Unbroken was the ring ;
 The stubborn spearmen still made good
 Their dark impenetrable wood,
 Each stepping where his comrade stood
 The instant that he fell.
 No thought was there of dastard flight ;—
 Linked in the serried phalanx tight,
 Groom fought like noble, squire like knight,
 As fearlessly and well ;

Till utter darkness closed her wing
O'er their thin host and wounded King.
Then skilful Surrey's sage commands
Led back from strife his shattered bands ;
 And from the charge they drew,
As mountain-waves, from wasted lands,
 Sweep back to ocean blue.
Then did their loss his foemen know ;
Their King, their Lords, their mightiest, low,
They melted from the field as snow,
When streams are swoln and south winds blow,
 Dissolves in silent dew.
Tweed's echoes heard the ceaseless plash,
 While many a broken band,
Disordered, through her currents dash,
 To gain the Scottish land ;
To town and tower, to down and dale,
To tell red Flodden's dismal tale,
And raise the universal wail.
Tradition, legend, tune, and song,
Shall many an age that wail prolong :
Still from the sire the son shall hear
Of the stern strife, and carnage drear,
 Of Flodden's fatal field,
Where shivered was fair Scotland's spear,
 And broken was her shield !

XXXV.

Day dawns upon the mountain's side :—
There, Scotland ! lay thy bravest pride,
Chiefs, knights, and nobles, many a one ;
The sad survivors all are gone.—
View not that corpse mistrustfully,
Defaced and mangled though it be ;
Nor to yon Border castle high
Look northward with upbraiding eye ;
 Nor cherish hope in vain,
That, journeying far on foreign strand,
The Royal Pilgrim to his land
 May yet return again.

He saw the wreck his rashness wrought ;
 Reckless of life, he desperate fought,
 And fell on Flodden plain ;
 And well in death his trusty brand,
 Firm clenched within his manly hand,
 Beseemed the monarch slain.*
 But, O ! how changed since yon blithe night !—
 Gladly I turn me from the sight,
 Unto my tale again.

XXXVI.

Short is my tale :—Fitz-Eustace' care
 A pierced and mangled body bare
 To moated Lichfield's lofty pile ;
 And there, beneath the southern aisle,
 A tomb, with Gothic sculpture fair,
 Did long Lord Marmion's image bear.
 (Now vainly for its site you look ;
 'Twas levelled when fanatic Brook
 The fair cathedral stormed and took ; †
 But, thanks to Heaven and good Saint Chad,
 A guerdon meet the spoiler had !)
 There erst was martial Marmion found,
 His feet upon a couchant hound,
 His hands to heaven upraised ;
 And all around, on scutcheon rich,
 And tablet carved, and fretted niche,
 His arms and feats were blazed.
 And yet, though all was carved so fair,
 And priest for Marmion breathed the prayer,
 The last Lord Marmion lay not there.
 From Ettrick woods, a peasant swain
 Followed his lord to Flodden plain,—
 One of those flowers, whom plaintive lay
 In Scotland mourns as "wede away :"
 Sore wounded, Sybil's Cross he spied,
 And dragged him to its foot, and died,
 Close by the noble Marmion's side.

* See Note 86. † See Note 87.

*"The Scottish circle deep
That fought around their King."*

Page 264.

The spoilers stripped and gashed the slain,
And thus their corpses were mista'en;
And thus, in the proud Baron's tomb,
The lowly woodsman took the room.

XXXVII.

Less easy task it were to show
Lord Marmion's nameless grave, and low.
They dug his grave e'en where he lay,
But every mark is gone;
Time's wasting hand has done away
The simple Cross of Sybil Grey,
And broke her font of stone:
But yet from out the little hill
Oozes the slender springlet still.
Oft halts the stranger there,
For thence may best his curious eye
The memorable field descry;
And shepherd boys repair
To seek the water-flag and rush,
And rest them by the hazel bush,
And plait their garlands fair,
Nor dream they sit upon the grave
That holds the bones of Marmion brave.—
When thou shalt find the little hill,
With thy heart commune, and be still.
If ever, in temptation strong,
Thou left'st the right path for the wrong;
If every devious step, thus trod,
Still led thee farther from the road;
Dread thou to speak presumptuous doom
On noble Marmion's lowly tomb;
But say, "He died a gallant knight,
With sword in hand, for England's right."

XXXVIII.

I do not rhyme to that dull elf
Who cannot image to himself,
That all through Flodden's dismal night
Wilton was foremost in the fight;

That when brave Surrey's steed was slain,
 'Twas Wilton mounted him again ;
 'Twas Wilton's brand that deepest hewed
 Amid the spearmen's stubborn wood—
 Unnamed by Holinshed or Hall,
 He was the living soul of all ;
 That, after fight, his faith made plain,
 He won his rank and lands again,
 And charged his old paternal shield
 With bearings won on Flodden Field.
 Nor sing I to that simple maid,
 To whom it must in terms be said
 That King and kinsmen did agree
 To bless fair Clara's constancy ;
 Who cannot, unless I relate,
 Paint to her mind the bridal's state ;
 That Wolsey's voice the blessing spoke,
 More, Sands, and Denny passed the joke ;
 That bluff King Hal the curtain drew,
 And Catherine's hand the stocking threw ;
 And afterwards, for many a day,
 That it was held enough to say,
 In blessing to a wedded pair,
 " Love they like Wilton and like Clare ! "

TO THE READER.

WHY then a final note prolong,
 Or lengthen out a closing song,
 Unless to bid the gentles speed,
 Who long have listed to my rede ? *—
 To Statesmen grave, if such may deign
 To read the Minstrel's idle strain,
 Sound head, clean hand, and piercing wit,
 And patriotic heart—as PRIT !

A garland for the hero's crest,
And twined by her he loves the best ;
To every lovely lady bright,
What can I wish but faithful knight ?
To every faithful lover too,
What can I wish but lady true ?
And knowledge to the studious sage ;
And pillow soft to head of age.
To thee, dear school-boy, whom my lay
Has cheated of thy hour of play,
Light task, and merry holiday !
To all, to each, a fair good-night,
And pleasing dreams, and slumbers light !

THE LADY OF THE LAKE.

A POEM

IN SIX CANTOS.

TO
THE MOST NOBLE
JOHN JAMES, MARQUIS OF ABERCORN,
ETC., ETC., ETC.,

THIS POEM IS INSCRIBED BY THE AUTHOR.

ARGUMENT.

THE Scene of the following Poem is laid chiefly in the vicinity of Loch Katrine, in the Western Highlands of Perthshire. The time of action includes Six Days, and the transactions of each Day occupy a Canto.

THE LADY OF THE LAKE.

CANTO FIRST.

THE CHASE.

HARP of the North ! that mouldering long hast hung
On the witch-elm that shades Saint Fillan's spring,
And down the fitful breeze thy numbers flung,
Till envious ivy did around thee cling,
Muffling with verdant ringlet every string,—
O minstrel Harp, still must thine accents sleep ?
'Mid rustling leaves and fountains murmuring,
Still must thy sweeter sounds their silence keep,
Nor bid a warrior smile, nor teach a maid to weep ?

Not thus, in ancient days of Caledon,
Was thy voice mute amid the festal crowd,
When lay of hopeless love, or glory won,
Aroused the fearful or subdued the proud.
At each according pause was heard aloud
Thine ardent symphony sublime and high !
Fair dames and crested chiefs attention bowed ;
For still the burden of thy minstrelsy
Was Knighthood's dauntless deed, and Beauty's matchless eye.

O wake once more ! how rude soe'er the hand
That ventures o'er thy magic maze to stray ;
O wake once more ! though scarce my skill command
Some feeble echoing of thine earlier lay :

Though harsh and faint, and soon to die away,
 And all unworthy of thy nobler strain,
 Yet if one heart throb higher at its sway,
 The wizard note has not been touched in vain.
 Then silent be no more ! Enchantress, wake again !

I.

THE stag at eve had drunk his fill,
 Where danced the moon on Monan's rill,
 And deep his midnight lair had made
 In lone Glenartney's hazel shade ;
 But, when the sun his beacon red
 Had kindled on Benvoirlich's head,*
 The deep-mouthed bloodhound's heavy bay
 Resounded up the rocky way,
 And faint, from further distance borne,
 Were heard the clanging hoof and horn.

II.

As Chief, who hears his warder call,
 "To arms ! the foemen storm the wall,"
 The antlered monarch of the waste
 Sprung from his heathery couch in haste.
 But, ere his fleet career he took,
 The dewdrops from his flanks he shook ;
 Like crested leader proud and high,
 Tossed his beamed frontlet to the sky ;
 A moment gazed adown the dale,
 A moment snuffed the tainted gale,
 A moment listened to the cry
 That thickened as the chase drew nigh ;
 Then, as the headmost foes appeared,
 With one brave bound the copse he cleared,
 And, stretching forward free and far,
 Sought the wild heaths of Uam-Var.

III.

Yelled on the view the opening pack ;
 Rock, glen, and cavern paid them back ;

* One of the Grampian Mountains, 6½ m. north of Callander.

To many a mingled sound at once
The awakened mountain gave response.
A hundred dogs bayed deep and strong,
Clattered a hundred steeds along,
Their peal the merry horns rung out,
A hundred voices joined the shout ;
With hark and whoop and wild halloo,
No rest Benvoirlich's echoes knew.
Far from the tumult fled the roe,
Close in her covert cowered the doe ;
The falcon, from her cairn on high,
Cast on the rout a wondering eye,
Till far beyond her piercing ken
The hurricane had swept the glen.
Faint, and more faint, its failing din
Returned from cavern, cliff, and lin,
And silence settled, wide and still,
On the lone wood and mighty hill.

IV.

Less loud the sounds of silvan war
Disturbed the heights of Uam-Var,
And roused the cavern where, 'tis told,
A giant made his den of old : *
For ere that steep ascent was won
High in his pathway hung the sun,
And many a gallant, stayed perforce,
Was fain to breathe his faltering horse ;
And of the trackers of the deer
Scarce half the lessening pack was near,
So shrewdly on the mountain side
Had the bold burst their mettle tried.

V.

The noble stag was pausing now
Upon the mountain's southern brow,
Where broad extended, far beneath,
The varied realms of fair Menteith.
With anxious eye he wandered o'er
Mountain and meadow, moss and moor,

* See Note I.

And pondered refuge from his toil
By far Lochard or Aberfoyle.
But nearer was the copsewood grey
That waved and wept on Loch Achray,
And mingled with the pine-trees blue
On the bold cliffs of Benvenue.
Fresh vigour with the hope returned,
With flying foot the heath he spurned,
Held westward with unwearied race,
And left behind the panting chase.

VI.

'Twere long to tell what steeds gave o'er
As swept the hunt through Cambus-more ;
What reins were tightened in despair
When rose Benledi's ridge in air ;
Who flagged upon Bochastle's heath,
Who shunned to stem the flooded Teith,—
For twice, that day, from shore to shore,
The gallant stag swam stoutly o'er.
Few were the stragglers, following far,
That reached the lake of Vennachar ;
And when the Brigg * of Turk was won,
The headmost horseman rode alone.

VII.

Alone, but with unbated zeal,
That horseman plied the scourge and steel ;
For, jaded now, and spent with toil,
Embossed with foam, and dark with soil,
While every gasp with sobs he drew,
The labouring stag strained full in view.
Two dogs of black Saint Hubert's breed,
Unmatched for courage, breath, and speed,†
Fast on his flying traces came,
And all but won that desperate game :
For, scarce a spear's length from his haunch,
Vindictive toiled the bloodhounds staunch ;
Nor nearer might the dogs attain,

* Brigg or brig, a bridge.

† See Note 2.

Nor further might the quarry strain.
Thus up the margin of the lake,
Between the precipice and brake,
O'er stock and rock, their race they take.

VIII.

The hunter marked that mountain high,
The lone lake's western boundary,
And deemed the stag must turn to bay
Where that huge rampart barred the way ;
Already glorying in the prize,
Measured his antlers with his eyes ;
For the death-wound, and death-halloo,
Mustered his breath, his whinyard drew.*
But thundering as he came prepared,
With ready arm and weapon bared,
The wily quarry shunned the shock,
And turned him from the opposing rock ;
Then, dashing down a darksome glen,
Soon lost to hound and hunter's ken,
In the deep Trosachs' wildest nook
His solitary refuge took.
There, while close couched the thicket shed
Cold dews and wild flowers on his head,
He heard the baffled dogs in vain
Rave through the hollow pass amain,
Chiding the rocks, that yelled again.

IX.

Close on the hounds the hunter came,
To cheer them on the vanished game ;
But, stumbling in the rugged dell,
The gallant horse exhausted fell.
The impatient rider strove in vain
To rouse him with the spur and rein ;
For the good steed, his labours o'er,
Stretched his stiff limbs, to rise no more.
Then, touched with pity and remorse,
He sorrowed o'er the expiring horse :

* See Note 3.

“ I little thought, when first thy rein
 I slacked upon the banks of Seine,
 That Highland eagle e’er should feed
 On thy fleet limbs, my matchless steed !
 Woe worth the chase, woe worth the day,
 That costs thy life, my gallant grey ! ”

XIII. The hunters return.

Then through the dell his horn resounds,
 From vain pursuit to call the hounds.
 Back limped, with slow and crippled pace,
 The sulky leaders of the chase ;
 Close to their master’s side they pressed,
 With drooping tail and humbled crest ;
 But still the dingle’s hollow throat
 Prolonged the swelling bugle-note.
 The owlets started from their dream,
 The eagles answered with their scream ;
 Round and around the sounds were cast,
 Till echo seemed an answering blast ;
 And on the hunter hied his way,
 To join some comrades of the day ;
 Yet often paused, so strange the road,
 So wondrous were the scenes it showed.

XIV. The western waves.

The western waves of ebbing day
 Rolled o’er the glen their level way ;
 Each purple peak, each flinty spire,
 Was bathed in floods of living fire.
 But not a setting beam could glow
 Within the dark ravines below,
 Where twined the path, in shadow hid,
 Round many a rocky pyramid,
 Shooting abruptly from the dell
 Its thunder-splintered pinnacle ;
 Round many an insulated mass,
 The native bulwarks of the pass,
 Huge as the tower which builders vain
 Presumptuous piled on Shinar’s plain.

The rocky summits, split and rent,
Formed turret, dome, or battlement ;
Or seemed fantastically set
With cupola or minaret,
Wild crests as pagod ever decked,
Or mosque of Eastern architect.
Nor were these earth-born castles bare,
Nor lacked they many a banner fair ;
For, from their shivered brows displayed,
Far o'er the unfathomable glade,
All twinkling with the dewdrops sheen,
The brier-rose fell in streamers green,
And creeping shrubs, of thousand dyes,
Waved in the west wind's summer sighs.

XII.

Boon Nature scattered, free and wild,
Each plant or flower, the mountain's child.
Here eglantine embalmed the air,
Hawthorn and hazel mingled there ;
The primrose pale, and violet flower,
Found in each cliff a narrow bower ;
Foxglove and nightshade, side by side,
Emblems of punishment and pride,
Grouped their dark hues with every stain
The weather-beaten crags retain.
With boughs that quaked at every breath,
Grey birch and aspen wept beneath ;
Aloft, the ash and warrior oak
Cast anchor in the rifted rock ;
And, higher yet, the pine-tree hung
His shattered trunk, and frequent flung,
Where seemed the cliffs to meet on high,
His boughs athwart the narrowed sky.
Highest of all, where white peaks glanced,
Where glistening streamers waved and danced,
The wanderer's eye could barely view
The summer heaven's delicious blue.
So wondrous wild, the whole might seem
The scenery of a fairy dream.

XIII.

Onward, amid the copse 'gan peep
A narrow inlet still and deep,
Affording scarce such breadth of brim
As served the wild-duck's brood to swim ;
Lost for a space, through thickets veering,
But broader when again appearing,
Tall rocks and tufted knolls their face
Could on the dark-blue mirror trace ;
And farther as the hunter strayed,
Still broader sweep its channels made,
The shaggy mounds no longer stood
Emerging from entangled wood,
But, wave-encircled, seemed to float,
Like castle girdled with its moat ;
Yet broader floods extending still
Divide them from their parent hill,
Till each, retiring, claims to be
An islet in an inland sea.

XIV.

And now, to issue from the glen,
No pathway meets the wanderer's ken,
Unless he climb, with footing nice,
A far projecting precipice.*
The broom's tough roots his ladder made,
The hazel saplings lent their aid ;
And thus an airy point he won,
Where, gleaming with the setting sun,
One burnished sheet of living gold,
Loch Katrine lay beneath him rolled ;—
In all her length far winding lay,
With promontory, creek, and bay ;
And islands that, empurpled bright,
Floated amid the livelier light ;
And mountains that like giants stand,
To sentinel enchanted land.
High on the south, huge Benvenue
Down on the lake in masses threw

* See Note 4.

Crags, knolls, and mounds, confusedly hurled,
The fragments of an earlier world ;
A wildering forest feathered o'er
His ruined sides and summit hoar ;
While on the north, through middle air,
Ben-an heaved high his forehead bare.

XV.

From the steep promontory gazed
The stranger, raptured and amazed.
And, "What a scene were here," he cried,
"For princely pomp or churchman's pride !
On this bold brow, a lordly tower ;
In that soft vale, a lady's bower ;
On yonder meadow, far away,
The turrets of a cloister grey !
How blithely might the bugle-horn
Chide, on the lake, the lingering morn !
How sweet, at eve, the lover's lute
Chime, when the groves were still and mute !
And, when the midnight moon should lave
Her forehead in the silver wave,
How solemn on the ear would come
The holy matins' distant hum,
While the deep peal's commanding tone
Should wake, in yonder islet lone,
A sainted hermit from his cell,
To drop a bead with every knell—
And bugle, lute, and bell, and all,
Should each bewildered stranger call
To friendly feast and lighted hall.

XVI.

"Blithe were it then to wander here !
But now—beshrew yon nimble deer—
Like that same hermit's, thin and spare,
The copse must give my evening fare ;
Some mossy bank my couch must be,
Some rustling oak my canopy.

Yet pass we that—the war and chase
Give little choice of resting-place—
A summer night, in greenwood spent,
Were but to-morrow's merriment.
But hosts may in these wilds abound,
Such as are better missed than found ;
To meet with Highland plunderers here
Were worse than loss of steed or deer.*—
I am alone ;—my bugle strain
May call some straggler of the train ;
Or, fall the worst that may betide,
Ere now this falchion has been tried."

XVII.

But scarce again his horn he wound,
When lo ! forth starting at the sound,
From underneath an aged oak
That slanted from the islet rock,
A damsel guider of its way,
A little skiff shot to the bay,
That round the promontory steep
Led its deep line in graceful sweep,
Eddying, in almost viewless wave,
The weeping willow twig to lave,
And kiss, with whispering sound and slow,
The beach of pebbles bright as snow.
The boat had touched this silver strand,
Just as the hunter left his stand,
And stood concealed amid the brake
To view this Lady of the Lake.
The maiden paused, as if again
She thought to catch the distant strain ;
With head upraised, and look intent,
And eye and ear attentive bent,
And locks flung back, and lips apart,
Like monument of Grecian art,
In listening mood, she seemed to stand
The guardian Naiad of the strand.

* See Note 5.

XVIII.

And ne'er did Grecian chisel trace
A Nymph, a Naiad, or a Grace,
Of finer form or lovelier face !
What though the sun, with ardent frown,
Had slightly tinged her cheek with brown,—
The sportive toil which, short and light,
Had dyed her glowing hue so bright,
Served too in hastier swell to show
Short glimpses of a breast of snow :
What though no rule of courtly grace
To measured mood had trained her pace,—
A foot more light, a step more true,
Ne'er from the heath-flower dashed the dew ;
E'en the slight harebell raised its head
Elastic from her airy tread :
What though upon her speech there hung
The accents of the mountain tongue,—
Those silver sounds, so soft, so dear,
The listener held his breath to hear.

XIX.

A chieftain's daughter seemed the maid ;
Her satin snood,* her silken plaid,
Her golden brooch, such birth betrayed,
And seldom was a snood amid
Such wild luxuriant ringlets hid,
Whose glossy black to shame might bring
The plumage of the raven's wing ;
And seldom o'er a breast so fair
Mantled a plaid with modest care ;
And never brooch the folds combined
Above a heart more good and kind.
Her kindness and her worth to spy,
You need but gaze on Ellen's eye :
Not Katrine, in her mirror blue,
Gives back the shaggy banks more true,
Than every freeborn glance confessed
The guileless movements of her breast ;

* See Note on Canto III., stanza 5.

Whether joy danced in her dark eye,
Or woe or pity claimed a sigh,
Or filial love was glowing there,
Or meek devotion poured a prayer,
Or tale of injury called forth
The indignant spirit of the North.
One only passion, unrevealed,
With maiden pride the maid concealed,
Yet not less purely felt the flame ;—
O ! need I tell that passion's name ?

XX.

Impatient of the silent horn,
Now on the gale her voice was borne :
“ Father ! ” she cried ; the rocks around
Loved to prolong the gentle sound.
Awhile she paused, no answer came :
“ Malcolm, was thine the blast ? ” the name
Less resolutely uttered fell,
The echoes could not catch the swell.
“ A stranger I,” the Huntsman said,
Advancing from the hazel shade.
The maid alarmed, with hasty oar
Pushed her light shallop from the shore ;
And when a space was gained between,
Closer she drew her bosom's screen
(So forth the startled swan would swing,
So turn to prune his ruffled wing) ;
Then safe, though fluttered and amazed,
She paused, and on the stranger gazed.
Not his the form, nor his the eye,
That youthful maidens wont to fly.

XXI.

On his bold visage middle age
Had slightly pressed its signet sage,
Yet had not quenched the open truth
And fiery vehemence of youth ;
Forward and frolic glee was there,
The will to do, the soul to dare,

The sparkling glance, soon blown to fire,
Of hasty love or headlong ire.
His limbs were cast in manly mould,
For hardy sports or contest bold ;
And though in peaceful garb arrayed,
And weaponless, except his blade,
His stately mien as well implied
A high-born heart, a martial pride,
As if a baron's crest he wore,
And sheathed in armour trod the shore.
Slighting the petty need he showed,
He told of his benighted road.
His ready speech flowed fair and free,
In praise of gentlest courtesy ;
Yet seemed that tone, and gesture bland
Less used to sue than to command.

XXII.

Awhile the maid the Stranger eyed,
And, reassured, at last replied,
That Highland halls were open still
To wildered wanderers of the hill.
" Nor think you unexpected come
To yon lone isle, our desert home :
Before the heath had lost the dew,
This morn, a couch was pulled for you ;
On yonder mountain's purple head
Have ptarmigan and heathcock bled,
And our broad nets have swept the mere,
To furnish forth your evening cheer."—
" Now, by the rood, my lovely maid,
Your courtesy has erred," he said ;
" No right have I to claim, misplaced,
The welcome of expected guest.
A wanderer here, by fortune tost,
My way, my friends, my courser lost,
I ne'er before, believe me, fair,
Have ever drawn your mountain air,
Till on this lake's romantic strand,
I found a fay in fairy land !"—

XXIII.

"I well believe," the maid replied,
As her light skiff approached the side,—
"I well believe, that ne'er before
Your foot has trod Loch Katrine's shore ;
But yet, as far as yesternight,
Old Allan-bane foretold your plight,—
A grey-haired sire, whose eye intent
Was on the visioned future bent.*
He saw your steed, a dappled grey,
Lie dead beneath the birchen way ;
Painted exact your form and mien,
Your hunting suit of Lincoln green,
That tasselled horn so gaily gilt,
That falchion's crookèd blade and hilt,
That cap with heron plumage trim,
And yon two hounds so dark and grim.
He bade that all should ready be
To grace a guest of fair degree ;
But light I held his prophecy,
And deemed it was my father's horn
Whose echoes o'er the lake were borne."

XXIV.

The Stranger smiled :—"Since to your home,
A destined errant knight I come,
Announced by prophet sooth and old,
Doomed, doubtless, for achievement bold,
I'll lightly front each high emprise,
For one kind glance of those bright eyes.
Permit me, first, the task to guide
Your fairy frigate o'er the tide."—
The maid, with smile suppressed and sly,
The toil unwonted saw him try ;
For seldom, sure, if e'er before,
His noble hand had grasped an oar.
Yet with main strength his strokes he drew,
And o'er the lake the shallop flew ;

* See Note 6.

With heads erect, and whimpering cry,
The hounds behind their passage ply.
Nor frequent does the bright oar break
The darkening mirror of the lake,
Until the rocky isle they reach,
And moor their shallop on the beach.

XXV.

The Stranger viewed the shore around ;
'Twas all so close with copsewood bound,
Nor track nor pathway might declare
That human foot frequented there,
Until the mountain-maiden showed
A clambering unsuspected road,
That winded through the tangled screen,
And opened on a narrow green,
Where weeping birch and willow round
With their long fibres swept the ground.
Here, for retreat in dangerous hour,
Some chief had framed a rustic bower.*

XXVI.

It was a lodge of ample size,
But strange of structure and device ;
Of such materials, as around
The workman's hand had readiest found.
Lopped off their boughs, their hoar trunks
bared,
And by the hatchet rudely squared,
To give the walls their destined height,
The sturdy oak and ash unite ;
While moss and clay and leaves combined
To fence each crevice from the wind.
The lighter pine-trees, overhead,
Their slender length for rafters spread ;
And withered heath and rushes dry
Supplied a russet canopy.
Due westward, fronting to the green,
A rural portico was seen,

* See Note 7.

Aloft on native pillars borne
 Of mountain fir, with bark unshorn,
 Where Ellen's hand had taught to twine
 The ivy and Idæan vine,
 The clematis, the favoured flower,
 Which boasts the name of virgin-bower,
 And every hardy plant could bear
 Loch Katrine's keen and searching air.
 An instant in this porch she staid,
 And gaily to the Stranger said,
 "On heaven and on thy lady call,
 And enter the enchanted hall!"—

XXVII.

"My hope, my heaven, my trust must be,
 My gentle guide, in following thee."—
 He crossed the threshold, and a clang
 Of angry steel that instant rang.
 To his bold brow his spirit rushed,
 But soon for vain alarm he blushed,
 When on the floor he saw displayed,
 Cause of the din, a naked blade
 Dropped from the sheath, that careless flung
 Upon a stag's huge antlers swung;
 For all around, the walls to grace,
 Hung trophies of the fight or chase—
 A target there, a bugle here,
 A battle-axe, a hunting-spear,
 And broadswords, bows, and arrows store,
 With the tusked trophies of the boar.
 Here grins the wolf as when he died,
 And there the wild-cat's brindled hide
 The frontlet of the elk adorns,
 Or mantles o'er the bison's horns;
 Pennons and flags defaced and stained,
 That blackening streaks of blood retained,
 And deer-skins, dappled, dun, and white,
 With otter's fur and seal's unite,
 In rude and uncouth tapestry all,
 To garnish forth the silvan hall.

XXVIII.

The wondering Stranger round him gazed,
And next the fallen weapon raised—
Few were the arms whose sinewy strength
Sufficed to stretch it forth at length—
And as the brand he poised and swayed,
“I never knew but one,” he said,
“Whose stalwart arm might brook to wield
A blade like this in battlefield.”—
She sighed, then smiled and took the word:
“You see the guardian champion’s sword;
As light it trembles in his hand,
As in my grasp a hazel wand.
My sire’s tall form might grace the part
Of Ferragus or Ascabart;*
But in the absent giant’s hold
Are women now and menials old.”—

XXIX.

The mistress of the mansion came,
Mature of age, a graceful dame;
Whose easy step and stately port
Had well become a princely court,
To whom, though more than kindred knew,
Young Ellen gave a mother’s due.
Meet welcome to her guest she made,
And every courteous rite was paid
That hospitality could claim,
Though all unasked his birth and name.†
Such then the reverence to a guest,
That fellest foe might join the feast,
And from his deadliest foeman’s door
Unquestioned turn, the banquet o’er.
At length his rank the Stranger names,
“The Knight of Snowdown, James Fitz-James;
Lord of a barren heritage,
Which his brave sires, from age to age,
By their good swords had held with toil;
His sire had fallen in such turmoil,

* See Note 8.

† See Note 9.

And he, God wot, was forced to stand
 Oft for his right with blade in hand.
 This morning, with Lord Moray's train,
 He chased a stalwart stag in vain,
 Outstripped his comrades, missed the deer,
 Lost his good steed, and wandered here."—

XXX.

Fain would the Knight in turn require
 The name and state of Ellen's sire.
 Well showed the elder lady's mien
 That courts and cities she had seen ;
 Ellen, though more her looks displayed
 The simple grace of silvan maid,
 In speech and gesture, form and face,
 Showed she was come of gentle race :
 'Twere strange in ruder rank to find
 Such looks, such manners, and such mind.
 Each hint the Knight of Snowdoun gave,
 Dame Margaret heard with silence grave ;
 Or Ellen, innocently gay,
 Turned all inquiry light away :—
 "Weird women we ! by dale and down
 We dwell, afar from tower and town.
 We stem the flood, we ride the blast,
 On wandering knights our spells we cast ;
 While viewless minstrels touch the string,
 'Tis thus our charmèd rhymes we sing."—
 She sung, and still a harp unseen
 Filled up the symphony between.

XXXI.

Song.

"Soldier, rest ! thy warfare o'er,
 Sleep the sleep that knows not breaking ;
 Dream of battled fields no more,
 Days of danger, nights of waking.
 In our isle's enchanted hall,
 Hands unseen thy couch are strewing,

Fairy strains of music fall,
Every sense in slumber dewing.
Soldier, rest ! thy warfare o'er,
Dream of fighting fields no more ;
Sleep the sleep that knows not breaking,
Morn of toil, nor night of waking.

“ No rude sound shall reach thine ear,
Armour's clang or war-steed champing,
Trump nor pibroch summon here
Mustering clan, or squadron tramping.
Yet the lark's shrill fife may come
At the daybreak from the fallow,
And the bittern sound his drum,
Booming from the sedgy shallow.
Ruder sounds shall none be near,
Guards nor warders challenge here ;
Here's no war-steed's neigh and champing,
Shouting clans, or squadrons stamping.”—

XXXII.

She paused—then, blushing, led the lay
To grace the stranger of the day ;
Her mellow notes awhile prolong
The cadence of the flowing song,
Till to her lips in measured frame
The minstrel verse spontaneous came.

Song continued.

“ Huntsman, rest ! thy chase is done,
While our slumbrous spells assail ye,
Dream not, with the rising sun,
Bugles here shall sound reveillé.
Sleep ! the deer is in his den ;
Sleep ! thy hounds are by thee lying ;
Sleep ! nor dream in yonder glen,
How thy gallant steed lay dying.
Huntsman, rest ! thy chase is done,
Think not of the rising sun,

For at dawning to assail ye,
Here no bugles sound reveillé."—

XXXIII.

The hall was cleared—the Stranger's bed
Was there of mountain heather spread,
Where oft a hundred guests had lain,
And dreamed their forest sports again.
But vainly did the heath-flower shed
Its moorland fragrance round his head ;
Not Ellen's spell had lulled to rest
The fever of his troubled breast.
In broken dreams the image rose
Of varied perils, pains, and woes :
His steed now flounders in the brake ;
Now sinks his barge upon the lake ;
Now leader of a broken host,
His standard falls, his honour's lost.
Then—from my couch may heavenly might
Chase that worst phantom of the night !—
Again returned the scenes of youth,
Of confident undoubting truth ;
Again his soul he interchanged
With friends whose hearts were long estranged.
They come, in dim procession led,
The cold, the faithless, and the dead ;
As warm each hand, each brow as gay,
As if they parted yesterday.
And doubt distracts him at the view,
O were his senses false or true !
Dreamed he of death, or broken vow,
Or is it all a vision now?

XXXIV.

At length, with Ellen in a grove
He seemed to walk, and speak of love ;
She listened with a blush and sigh,
His suit was warm, his hopes were high.
He sought her yielded hand to clasp—
And a cold gauntlet met his grasp ;

The phantom's sex was changed and gone,
Upon its head a helmet shone ;
Slowly enlarged to giant size,
With darkened cheek and threatening eyes,
The grisly visage, stern and hoar,
To Ellen still a likeness bore:—
He woke, and, panting with affright,
Recalled the vision of the night.
The hearth's decaying brands were red,
And deep and dusky lustre shed,
Half showing, half concealing all
The uncouth trophies of the hall.
'Mid those the Stranger fixed his eye
Where that huge falchion hung on high,
And thoughts on thoughts, a countless throng,
Rushed, chasing countless thoughts along,
Until, the giddy whirl to cure,
He rose, and sought the moonshine pure.

XXXV.

The wild-rose, eglantine, and broom,
Wasted around their rich perfume ;
The birch-trees wept in fragrant balm,
The aspens slept beneath the calm ;
The silver light, with quivering glance,
Played on the water's still expanse,—
Wild were the heart whose passions' sway
Could rage beneath the sober ray !
He felt its calm, that warrior guest,
While thus he communed with his breast :—
" Why is it at each turn I trace
Some memory of that exiled race ?
Can I not mountain-maiden spy,
But she must bear the Douglas eye ?
Can I not view a Highland brand,
But it must match the Douglas hand ?
Can I not frame a fevered dream,
But still the Douglas is the theme ?—
I'll dream no more ; by manly mind
Not even in sleep is will resigned.

My midnight orisons said o'er,
 I'll turn to rest, and dream no more."—
 His midnight orisons he told,
 A prayer with every bead of gold,
 Consigned to Heaven his cares and woes,
 And sunk in undisturbed repose ;
 Until the heathcock shrilly crew,
 And morning dawned on Benvenue.

CANTO SECOND.

THE ISLAND.

I.

AT morn the blackcock trims his jetty wing,
 'Tis morning prompts the linnet's blithest lay,
 All Nature's children feel the matin spring
 Of life reviving, with reviving day ;
 And while yon little bark glides down the bay,
 Wafting the stranger on his way again,
 Morn's genial influence roused a minstrel grey,*
 And sweetly o'er the lake was heard thy strain,
 Mix'd with the sounding harp, O white-haired Allan-
 bane !

II.

Song.

"Not faster yonder rowers' might
 Flings from their oars the spray,
 Not faster yonder rippling bright,
 That tracks the shallop's course in light,
 Melts in the lake away,
 Than men from memory erase
 The benefits of former days ;
 Then, Stranger, go ! good speed the while,
 Nor think again of the lonely isle.

* The Highland chieftains, to a late period, retained in their service the bard, as a family officer.

“ High place to thee in royal court,
High place in battled line,
Good hawk and hound for silvan sport,
Where beauty sees the brave resort,
The honoured meed be thine !
True be thy sword, thy friend sincere,
Thy lady constant, kind, and dear,
And lost in love and friendship’s smile,
Be memory of the lonely isle.

III.

Song continued.

“ But if beneath yon southern sky
A plaided stranger roam,
Whose drooping crest and stifled sigh,
And sunken cheek and heavy eye,
Pine for his Highland home,
Then, warrior, then be thine to show
The care that soothes a wanderer’s woe ;
Remember then thy hap erewhile,
A stranger in the lonely isle.

“ Or if on life’s uncertain main
Mishap shall mar thy sail—
If faithful, wise, and brave in vain,
Woe, want, and exile thou sustain
Beneath the fickle gale,
Waste not a sigh on fortune changed,
On thankless courts, or friends estranged,
But come where kindred worth shall smile,
To greet thee in the lonely isle.”—

IV.

As died the sounds upon the tide,
The shallop reached the mainland side,
And ere his onward way he took,
The Stranger cast a lingering look,

Where easily his eye might reach
 The Harper on the islet beach,
 Reclined against a blighted tree
 As wasted, grey, and worn as he.
 To minstrel meditation given,
 His reverend brow was raised to heaven,
 As from the rising sun to claim
 A sparkle of inspiring flame.
 His hand, reclined upon the wire,
 Seemed watching the awakening fire ;
 So still he sate, as those who wait
 Till judgment speak the doom of fate ;
 So still, as if no breeze might dare
 To lift one lock of hoary hair ;
 So still, as life itself were fled,
 In the last sound his harp had sped.

V.

Upon a rock with lichens wild,
 Beside him, Ellen sate and smiled.—
 Smiled she to see the stately drake
 Lead forth his fleet upon the lake,
 While her vexed spaniel, from the beach,
 Bayed at the prize beyond his reach ?
 Yet tell me then, the maid who knows,
 Why deepened on her cheek the rose ?—
 Forgive, forgive, Fidelity !
 Perchance the maiden smiled to see
 Yon parting lingerer wave adieu,
 And stop and turn to wave anew ;
 And, lovely ladies, ere your ire
 Condemn the heroine of my lyre,
 Show me the fair would scorn to spy,
 And prize such conquest of her eye !

VI.

While yet he loitered on the spot,
 It seemed as Ellen marked him not ;
 But when he turned him to the glade,
 One courteous parting sign she made :

And after, oft the knight would say,
That not when prize of festal day
Was dealt him by the brightest fair
Who e'er wore jewel in her hair,
So highly did his bosom swell,
As at that simple mute farewell.
Now with a trusty mountain-guide,
And his dark staghounds by his side,
He parts—the maid, unconscious still,
Watched him wind slowly round the hill ;
But when his stately form was hid,
The guardian in her bosom chid—
“Thy Malcolm ! vain and selfish maid !”
’Twas thus upbraiding conscience said,—
“Not so had Malcolm idly hung
On the smooth phrase of southern tongue ;
Not so had Malcolm strained his eye
Another step than thine to spy.—
Wake, Allan-bane,” aloud she cried,
To the old Minstrel by her side,—
“Arouse thee from thy moody dream !
I’ll give thy harp heroic theme,
And warm thee with a noble name :
Pour forth the glory of the Græme !” *—
Scarce from her lip the word had rushed,
When deep the conscious maiden blushed ;
For of his clan, in hall and bower,
Young Malcolm Græme was held the flower.

VII.

The Minstrel waked his harp—three times
Arose the well-known martial chimes,
And thrice their high heroic pride
In melancholy murmurs died.
“Vainly thou bidd’st, O noble maid,”
Clasping his withered hands, he said,
“Vainly thou bidd’st me wake the strain,
Though all unwont to bid in vain.

* See Note 10.

Alas ! than mine a mightier hand
 Has tuned my harp, my strings has spanned !
 I touch the chords of joy, but low
 And mournful answer notes of woe ;
 And the proud march, which victors tread,
 Sinks in the wailing for the dead.
 O well for me, if mine alone
 That dirge's deep prophetic tone !
 If, as my tuneful fathers said,
 This harp, which erst Saint Modan swayed,*
 Can thus its master's fate foretell,
 Then welcome be the minstrel's knell !

VIII.

“ But ah ! dear lady, thus it sighed
 The eve thy sainted mother died ;
 And such the sounds which, while I strove
 To wake a lay of war or love,[†]
 Came marring all the festal mirth,
 Appalling me who gave them birth,
 And, disobedient to my call,
 Wailed loud through Bothwell's bannered hall,
 Ere Douglasses, to ruin driven,
 Were exiled from their native heaven.†—
 Oh ! if yet worse mishap and woe
 My master's house must undergo,
 Or aught but weal to Ellen fair
 Brood in these accents of despair,
 No future bard, sad Harp ! shall fling
 Triumph or rapture from thy string ;
 One short, one final strain shall flow,
 Fraught with unutterable woe,
 Then shivered shall thy fragments lie,
 Thy master cast him down and die ! ”

IX.

Soothing she answered him, “ Assuage,
 Mine honoured friend, the fears of age ;

* See Note 11. † See Note 12.

All melodies to thee are known
That harp has rung, or pipe has blown,
In Lowland vale or Highland glen,
From Tweed to Spey—what marvel, then,
At times, unbidden notes should rise,
Confusedly bound in memory's ties,
Entangling, as they rush along,
The war-march with the funeral song?—
Small ground is now for boding fear;
Obscure, but safe, we rest us here.
My sire, in native virtue great,
Resigning lordship, lands, and state,
Not then to fortune more resigned,
Than yonder oak might give the wind;
The graceful foliage storms may reave,
The noble stem they cannot grieve.
For me,"—she stooped, and, looking round,
Plucked a blue harebell from the ground,—
"For me, whose memory scarce conveys
An image of more splendid days,
This little flower, that loves the lea,
May well my simple emblem be:
It drinks heaven's dew as blithe as rose
That in the King's own garden grows;
And when I place it in my hair,
Allan, a bard is bound to swear
He ne'er saw coronet so fair."
Then playfully the chaplet wild
She wreathed in her dark locks, and smiled.

x.

Her smile, her speech, with winning sway,
Wiled the old harper's mood away.
With such a look as hermits throw
When angels stoop to soothe their woe,
He gazed, till fond regret and pride
Thrilled to a tear, then thus replied:
"Loveliest and best! thou little know'st
The rank, the honours thou hast lost!

O might I live to see thee grace,
 In Scotland's court, thy birthright place,
 To see my favourite's step advance
 The lightest in the courtly dance,
 The cause of every gallant's sigh,
 And leading star of every eye,
 And theme of every minstrel's art,
 The Lady of the Bleeding Heart ! " *—

XI.

" Fair dreams are these," the maiden cried
 (Light was her accent, yet she sighed).
 " Yet is this mossy rock to me
 Worth splendid chair and canopy ;
 Nor would my footsteps spring more gay
 In courtly dance than blithe strathspey ;
 Nor half so pleased mine ear incline
 To royal minstrel's lay as thine.
 And then for suitors proud and high,
 To bend before my conquering eye,
 Thou, flattering bard ! thyself wilt say,
 That grim Sir Roderick owns its sway.
 The Saxon scourge, Clan-Alpine's pride,
 The terror of Loch Lomond's side,
 Would, at my suit, thou know'st, delay
 A Lennox foray—for a day." †

XII.

The ancient bard his glee repressed :
 " Ill hast thou chosen theme for jest !
 For who, through all this western wild,
 Named Black Sir Roderick e'er, and smiled !
 In Holy-Rood a knight he slew ; †
 I saw, when back the dirk he drew,
 Courtiers give place before the stride
 Of the undaunted homicide ;
 And since, though outlawed, hath his hand
 Full sternly kept his mountain land.

* The well-known cognizance of the Douglas family.

† See Note 13.

Who else dared give—ah ! woe the day,
That I such hated truth should say—
The Douglas, like a stricken deer,
Disowned by every noble peer,*
Even the rude refuge we have here ?
Alas, this wild marauding Chief
Alone might hazard our relief ;
And now thy maiden charms expand,
Looks for his guerdon in thy hand.
Full soon may dispensation sought,
To back his suit, from Rome be brought.
Then, though an exile on the hill,
Thy father, as the Douglas, still
Be held in reverence and fear ;
And though to Roderick thou'rt so dear,
That thou mightst guide with silken thread,
Slave of thy will, this chieftain dread ;
Yet, O loved maid, thy mirth refrain !
Thy hand is on a lion's mane.”—

XIII.

“ Minstrel,” the maid replied, and high
Her father's soul glanced from her eye,
“ My debts to Roderick's house I know :
All that a mother could bestow,
To Lady Margaret's care I owe,
Since first an orphan in the wild
She sorrowed o'er her sister's child ;
To her brave chieftain son, from ire
Of Scotland's King who shrouds my sire,
A deeper, holier debt is owed ;
And, could I pay it with my blood,
Allan ! Sir Roderick should command
My blood, my life,—but not my hand.
Rather will Ellen Douglas dwell
A votaress in Maronnan's cell ; †
Rather through realms beyond the sea,
Seeking the world's cold charity,

* See Note 14. † See Note 15.

Where ne'er was spoke a Scottish word,
 And ne'er the name of Douglas heard,
 An outcast pilgrim will she rove,
 Than wed the man she cannot love.

[C] OR XIV.

“Thou shak'st, good friend, thy tresses grey—
 That pleading look, what can it say
 But what I own?—I grant him brave,
 But wild as Bracklinn's thundering wave ; *
 And generous—save vindictive mood,
 Or jealous transport, chafe his blood :
 I grant him true to friendly band,
 As his claymore is to his hand ;
 But O ! that very blade of steel
 More mercy for a foe would feel :
 I grant him liberal, to fling
 Among his clan the wealth they bring,
 When back by lake and glen they wind,
 And in the Lowland leave behind,
 Where once some pleasant hamlet stood,
 A mass of ashes slaked with blood.
 The hand that for my father fought,
 I honour, as his daughter ought ;
 But can I clasp it reeking red
 From peasants slaughtered in their shed ?
 No ! wildly while his virtues gleam,
 They make his passions darker seem,
 And flash along his spirit high,
 Like lightning o'er the midnight sky.
 While yet a child,—and children know,
 Instinctive taught, the friend and foe,—
 I shuddered at his brow of gloom,
 His shadowy plaid, and sable plume ;
 A maiden gown, I ill could bear
 His haughty mien and lordly air :
 But if thou join'st a suitor's claim,
 In serious mood, to Roderick's name,

* See Note 16.

I thrill with anguish here, if e'er
 A Douglas knew the word, with fear.
 To change such odious theme were best,—
 What think'st thou of our stranger guest?"—

XV.

"What think I of him?—woe the while
 That brought such wanderer to our isle!
 Thy father's battle-brand—of yore
 For Tine-man forged by fairy lore,*
 What time he leagued, no longer foes,
 His Border spears with Hotspur's bows—
 Did, self-unsabarded, foreshow
 The footstep of a secret foe.†
 If courtly spy hath harboured here,
 What may we for the Douglas fear?
 What for this island, deemed of old
 Clan-Alpine's last and surest hold?
 If neither spy nor foe, I pray
 What yet may jealous Roderick say?—
 Nay, wave not thy disdainful head!
 Bethink thee of the discord dread
 That kindled when at Beltane game
 Thou ledd'st the dance with Malcolm Græme;
 Still, though thy sire the peace renewed,
 Smoulders in Roderick's breast the feud;
 Beware!—But hark, what sounds are these?
 My dull ears catch no faltering breeze,
 No weeping birch nor aspens wake,
 Nor breath is dimpling in the lake,
 Still is the canna's ‡ hoary beard,
 Yet, by my minstrel faith, I heard—
 And hark again! some pipe of war
 Sends the bold pibroch from afar."

XVI.

Far up the lengthened lake were spied
 Four darkening specks upon the tide,

* See Note 17.

† See Note 18.

‡ Cotton-grass.

That, slow enlarging on the view,
Four manned and masted barges grew,
And, bearing downwards from Glengyle,
Steered full upon the lonely isle ;
The point of Brianchoil they passed,
And, to the windward as they cast,
Against the sun they gave to shine
The bold Sir Roderick's bannered Pine.
Nearer and nearer as they bear,
Spears, pikes, and axes flash in air.
Now might you see the tartans brave,
And plaids and plumage dance and wave ;
Now see the bonnets sink and rise,
As his tough oar the rower plies ;
See, flashing at each sturdy stroke,
The wave ascending into smoke ;
See the proud pipers on the bow,
And mark the gaudy streamers flow
From their loud chanter's * down, and sweep
The furrowed bosom of the deep,
As, rushing through the lake amain,
They plied the ancient Highland strain.

XVII.

Ever, as on they bore, more loud
And louder rung the pibroch proud.
At first the sound, by distance tame,
Mellowed along the waters came,
And, lingering long by cape and bay,
Wailed every harsher note away ;
Then bursting bolder on the ear,
The clan's shrill Gathering they could hear—
Those thrilling sounds that call the might
Of old Clan-Alpine to the fight.†
Thick beat the rapid notes, as when
The mustering hundreds shake the glen,
And, hurrying at the signal dread,
The battered earth returns their tread.

* The drone of the bagpipe.

† See Note 19.

Then prelude light, of livelier tone,
Expressed their merry marching on,
Ere peal of closing battle rose,
With mingled outcry, shrieks, and blows ;
And mimic din of stroke and ward,
As broadsword upon target jarred ;
And groaning pause, ere yet again,
Condensed, the battle yelled amain ;
The rapid charge, the rallying shout,
Retreat borne headlong into rout,
And bursts of triumph, to declare
Clan-Alpine's conquest—all were there.
Nor ended thus the strain ; but slow,
Sunk in a moan prolonged and low,
And changed the conquering clarion swell
For wild lament o'er those that fell.

XVIII.

The war-pipes ceased, but lake and hill
Were busy with their echoes still ;
And, when they slept, a vocal strain
Bade their hoarse chorus wake again,
While loud a hundred clansmen raise
Their voices in their Chieftain's praise.
Each boatman, bending to his oar,
With measured sweep the burden bore,
In such wild cadence, as the breeze
Makes through December's leafless trees.
The chorus first could Allan know,
" Roderick Vich-Alpine, ho ! iro ! "
And near, and nearer as they rowed,
Distinct the martial ditty flowed.

XIX.

Coat Song.

Hail to the Chief who in triumph advances !
Honoured and bless'd be the evergreen Pine !
Long may the Tree, in his banner that glances,
Flourish, the shelter and grace of our line !

Heaven send it happy dew,
 Earth lend it sap anew,
 Gaily to bourgeon, and broadly to grow,
 While every Highland glen
 Sends our shout back agen,
 "Roderigh Vich-Alpine dhu, ho ! ieroe ! " *

Ours is no sapling, chance-sown by the fountain,
 Blooming at Beltane, in winter to fade ;
 When the whirlwind has stripped every leaf on the mountain,

The more shall Clan-Alpine exult in her shade.
 Moored in the rifted rock,
 Proof to the tempest's shock,
 Firmer he roots him the ruder it blow ;
 Menteith and Breadalbane, then,
 Echo his praise agen,
 "Roderigh Vich-Alpine dhu, ho ! ieroe ! "

XX.

Proudly our pibroch has thrilled in Glen Fruin,
 And Bannochar's groans to our slogan replied ;
 Glen Luss and Ross-dhu they are smoking in ruin,
 And the best of Loch Lomond lie dead on her side.
 Widow and Saxon maid
 Long shall lament our raid,
 Think of Clan-Alpine with fear and with woe ;
 Lennox and Leven-glen
 Shake when they hear agen,
 "Roderigh Vich-Alpine dhu, ho ! ieroe ! "

Row, vassals, row, for the pride of the Highlands !
 Stretch to your oars, for the evergreen Pine !
 O that the rosebud that graces yon islands
 Were wreathed in a garland around him to twine !
 O that some seedling gem,
 Worthy such noble stem,
 Honoured and bless'd in their shadow might grow !

* See Note 20.

Loud should Clan-Alpine then
Ring from the deepmost glen,
“Roderigh Vich-Alpine dhu, ho ! ieroe !”

XXI.

With all her joyful female band
Had Lady Margaret sought the strand.
Loose on the breeze their tresses flew,
And high their snowy arms they threw,
As echoing back with shrill acclaim,
And chorus wild, the Chieftain's name ;
While, prompt to please, with mother's art,
The darling passion of his heart,
The Dame called Ellen to the strand
To greet her kinsman ere he land :
“Come, loiterer, come ! a Douglas thou,
And shun to wreathe a victor's brow ?”—
Reluctantly and slow, the maid
The unwelcome summoning obeyed ;
And when a distant bugle rung,
In the mid-path aside she sprung :—
“List, Allan-bane ! From mainland cast
I hear my father's signal blast.
Be ours,” she cried, “the skiff to guide,
And waft him from the mountain side.”—
Then, like a sunbeam, swift and bright,
She darted to her shallop light,
And, eagerly while Roderick scanned,
For her dear form, his mother's band,
The islet far behind her lay,
And she had landed in the bay.

XXII.

Some feelings are to mortals given
With less of earth in them than heaven ;
And if there be a human tear
From passion's dross refined and clear,
A tear so limpid and so meek
It would not stain an angel's cheek,

'Tis that which pious fathers shed
 Upon a duteous daughter's head !
 And as the Douglas to his breast
 His darling Ellen closely pressed,
 Such holy drops her tresses steeped,
 Though 'twas a hero's eye that weeped.
 Nor while on Ellen's faltering tongue
 Her filial welcomes crowded hung,
 Marked she, that fear (affection's proof)
 Still held a graceful youth aloof ;
 No ! not till Douglas named his name,
 Although the youth was Malcolm Græme.

XXIII.

Allan, with wistful look the while,
 Marked Roderick landing on the isle ;
 His master piteously he eyed,
 Then gazed upon the Chieftain's pride,
 Then dashed, with hasty hand, away
 From his dimmed eye the gathering spray ;
 And Douglas, as his hand he laid
 On Malcolm's shoulder, kindly said,
 " Canst thou, young friend, no meaning spy
 In my poor follower's glistening eye ?
 I'll tell thee :—he recalls the day
 When in my praise he led the lay
 O'er the arched gate of Bothwell proud,
 While many a minstrel answered loud,
 When Percy's Norman pennon, won
 In bloody field, before me shone,
 And twice ten knights, the least a name
 As mighty as yon Chief may claim,
 Gracing my pomp, behind me came.
 Yet trust me, Malcolm, not so proud
 Was I of all that marshalled crowd,
 Though the waned crescent owned my might,
 And in my train trooped lord and knight,
 Though Blantyre hymned her holiest lays,
 And Bothwell's bards flung back my praise,

As when this old man's silent tear,
And this poor maid's affection dear,
A welcome give more kind and true
Than aught my better fortunes knew.
Forgive, my friend, a father's boast ;
O ! it out-beggars all I lost !"—

XXIV.

Delightful praise !—Like summer rose,
That brighter in the dewdrop glows,
The bashful maiden's cheek appeared,
For Douglas spoke, and Malcolm heard.
The flush of shamefaced joy to hide,
The hounds, the hawk, her cares divide :
The loved caresses of the maid
The dogs with crouch and whimper paid ;
And, at her whistle, on her hand
The falcon took his favourite stand,
Closed his dark wing, relaxed his eye,
Nor, though unhooded, sought to fly.
And, trust, while in such guise she stood,
Like fabled Goddess of the wood,
That if a father's partial thought
O'erweighed her worth and beauty aught,
Well might the lover's judgment fail
To balance with a juster scale ;
For with each secret glance he stole,
The fond enthusiast sent his soul.

XXV.

Of stature tall, and slender frame,
But firmly knit, was Malcolm Græme.
The belted plaid and tartan hose
Did ne'er more graceful limbs disclose ;
His flaxen hair, of sunny hue,
Curled closely round his bonnet blue.
Trained to the chase, his eagle eye
The ptarmigan in snow could spy ;
Each pass, by mountain, lake, and heath,
He knew, through Lennox and Menteith ;

Vain was the bound of dark-brown doe,
When Malcolm bent his sounding bow ;
And scarce that doe, though winged with fear,
Outstripped in speed the mountaineer ;
Right up Ben Lomond could he press,
And not a sob his toil confess.
His form accorded with a mind
Lively and ardent, frank and kind ;
A blither heart, till Ellen came,
Did never love nor sorrow tame—
It danced as lightsome in his breast,
As played the feather on his crest.
Yet friends, who nearest knew the youth,
His scorn of wrong, his zeal for truth,
And bards, who saw his features bold,
When kindled by the tales of old,
Said, were that youth to manhood grown,
Not long should Roderick Dhu's renown
Be foremost voiced by mountain fame,
But quail to that of Malcolm Græme.

XXVI.

Now back they wend their watery way,
And, "O my sire!" did Ellen say,
"Why urge thy chase so far astray?
And why so late returned? And why—"
The rest was in her speaking eye.
"My child, the chase I follow far,
'Tis mimicry of noble war ;
And with that gallant pastime reft
Were all of Douglas I have left.
I met young Malcolm as I strayed
Far eastward, in Glenfinlas' shade ;
Nor strayed I safe, for all around
Hunters and horsemen scoured the ground.
This youth, though still a royal ward,
Risked life and land to be my guard,
And through the passes of the wood
Guided my steps, not unpursued ;

And Roderick shall his welcome make,
Despite old spleen, for Douglas' sake.
Then must he seek Strath-Endrick glen,
Nor peril aught for me agen."

XXVII.

Sir Roderick, who to meet them came,
Reddened at sight of Malcolm Græme,
Yet not in action, word, or eye,
Failed aught in hospitality.
In talk and sport they whiled away
The morning of that summer day ;
But at high noon a courier light
Held secret parley with the knight,
Whose moody aspect soon declared
That evil were the news he heard.
Deep thought seemed toiling in his head ;
Yet was the evening banquet made,
Ere he assembled round the flame,
His mother, Douglas, and the Græme,
And Ellen, too ; then cast around
His eyes, then fixed them on the ground,
As studying phrase that might avail
Best to convey unpleasant tale.
Long with his dagger's hilt he played,
Then raised his haughty brow, and said :—

XXVIII.

"Short be my speech ; nor time affords,
Nor my plain temper, glozing words.
Kinsman and father—if such name
Douglas vouchsafe to Roderick's claim ;
Mine honoured mother ; Ellen—why,
My cousin, turn away thine eye?—
And Græme, in whom I hope to know
Full soon a noble friend or foe,
When age shall give thee thy command
And leading in thy native land,—
List all !—The King's vindictive pride
Boasts to have tamed the Border-side,

Where chiefs, with hound and hawk who came
 To share their monarch's silvan game,
 Themselves in bloody toils were snared ;
 And when the banquet they prepared,
 And wide their loyal portals flung,
 O'er their own gateway struggling hung.
 Loud cries their blood from Meggat's mead,
 From Yarrow braes and banks of Tweed,
 Where the lone streams of Ettrick glide,
 And from the silver Teviot's side ;
 The dales, where martial clans did ride,
 Are now one sheep-walk, waste and wide.
 This tyrant of the Scottish throne,
 So faithless and so ruthless known,
 Now hither comes ; his end the same,
 The same pretext of silvan game.
 What grace for Highland chiefs, judge ye
 By fate of Border chivalry.
 Yet more : amid Glenfinlas green,
 Douglas, thy stately form was seen.
 This by espial sure I know ;
 Your counsel in the streight I show."

XXIX.

Ellen and Margaret fearfully
 Sought comfort in each other's eye,
 Then turned their ghastly look, each one,
 This to her sire, that to her son.
 The hasty colour went and came
 In the bold cheek of Malcolm Græme ;
 But from his glance it well appeared,
 'Twas but for Ellen that he feared ;
 While, sorrowful, but undismayed,
 The Douglas thus his counsel said :—
 " Brave Roderick, though the tempest roar,
 It may but thunder and pass o'er ;
 Nor will I here remain an hour,
 To draw the lightning on thy bower,
 For well thou know'st at this grey head
 The royal bolt were fiercest sped.

For thee, who, at thy King's command,
Canst aid him with a gallant band,
Submission, homage, humbled pride,
Shall turn the Monarch's wrath aside.
Poor remnants of the Bleeding Heart,
Ellen and I will seek apart
The refuge of some forest cell ;
There, like the hunted quarry, dwell,
Till, on the mountain and the moor,
The stern pursuit be passed and o'er."—

XXX.

"No, by mine honour," Roderick said,
"So help me, Heaven, and my good blade !
No, never ! Blasted be yon Pine,
My fathers' ancient crest, and mine,
If from its shade in danger part
The lineage of the Bleeding Heart !
Hear my blunt speech : Grant me this maid
To wife, thy counsel to mine aid ;
To Douglas, leagued with Roderick Dhu,
Will friends and allies flock enow ;
Like cause of doubt, distrust, and grief,
Will bind to us each Western chief.
When the loud pipes my bridal tell,
The Links of Forth shall hear the knell,
The guards shall start in Stirling's porch ;
And, when I light the nuptial torch,
A thousand villages in flames
Shall scare the slumbers of King James !—
Nay, Ellen, blench not thus away,
And, mother, cease these signs, I pray ;
I meant not all my heart might say.
Small need of inroad, or of fight,
When the sage Douglas may unite
Each mountain clan in friendly band,
To guard the passes of their land,
Till the foiled King, from pathless glen,
Shall bootless turn him home agen."

XXXI.

There are who have, at midnight hour,
 In slumber scaled a dizzy tower,
 And, on the verge that beetled o'er
 The ocean-tide's incessant roar,
 Dreamed calmly out their dangerous dream,
 Till wakened by the morning beam ;
 When, dazzled by the eastern glow,
 Such startler cast his glance below,
 And saw unmeasured depth around,
 And heard unintermitted sound,
 And thought the battled fence so frail
 It waved like cobweb in the gale ;—
 Amid his senses' giddy wheel,
 Did he not desperate impulse feel
 Headlong to plunge himself below,
 And meet the worst his fears foreshow ?—
 Thus, Ellen, dizzy and astound,
 As sudden ruin yawned around,
 By crossing terrors wildly tossed,
 Still for the Douglas fearing most,
 Could scarce the desperate thought withstand
 To buy his safety with her hand.

XXXII.

Such purpose dread could Malcolm spy
 In Ellen's quivering lip and eye,
 And eager rose to speak. But ere
 His tongue could hurry forth his fear,
 Had Douglas marked the hectic strife,
 Where death seemed combating with life ;
 For to her cheek, in feverish flood,
 One instant rushed the throbbing blood,
 Then ebbing back, with sudden sway,
 Left its domain as wan as clay.
 "Roderick, enough ! enough !" he cried,
 "My daughter cannot be thy bride ;
 Not that the blush to wooer dear,
 Nor paleness that of maiden fear.

It may not be—forgive her, Chief,
Nor hazard aught for our relief.
Against his sovereign, Douglas ne'er
Will level a rebellious spear.
'Twas I that taught his youthful hand
To rein a steed and wield a brand :
I see him yet, the princely boy !
Not Ellen more my pride and joy ;
I love him still, despite my wrongs,
By hasty wrath and slanderous tongues.
O seek the grace you well may find,
Without a cause to mine combined."

XXXIII.

Twice through the hall the Chieftain strode ;
The waving of his tartans broad,
And darkened brow, where wounded pride
With ire and disappointment vied,
Seemed, by the torch's gloomy light,
Like the ill Demon of the night,
Stooping his pinions' shadowy sway
Upon the nighted pilgrim's way :
But, unrequited Love ! thy dart
Plunged deepest its envenomed smart,
And Roderick, with thine anguish stung,
At length the hand of Douglas wrung,
While eyes, that mocked at tears before,
With bitter drops were running o'er.
The death-pangs of long-cherished hope
Scarce in that ample breast had scope,
But, struggling with his spirit proud,
Convulsive heaved its chequered shroud,
While every sob—so mute were all—
Was heard distinctly through the hall.
The son's despair, the mother's look,
Ill might the gentle Ellen brook ;
She rose, and to her side there came,
To aid her parting steps, the Græme.

XXXIV.

Then Roderick from the Douglas broke—
As flashes flame through sable smoke,
Kindling its wreaths, long, dark, and low,
To one broad blaze of ruddy glow,
So the deep anguish of despair
Burst, in fierce jealousy, to air.
With stalwart grasp his hand he laid
On Malcolm's breast and belted plaid—
"Back, beardless boy!" he sternly said,
"Back, minion! hold'st thou thus at naught
The lesson I so lately taught?
This roof, the Douglas, and that maid,
Thank thou for punishment delayed."—
Eager as greyhound on his game,
Fiercely with Roderick grappled Græme:
"Perish my name, if aught afford
Its Chieftain safety save his sword!"—
Thus as they strove, their desperate hand
Gripped to the dagger or the brand,
And death had been; but Douglas rose,
And thrust between the struggling foes
His giant strength:—"Chieftains, forego!
I hold the first who strikes, my foe.—
Madmen, forbear your frantic jar!
What! is the Douglas fallen so far,
His daughter's hand is deemed the spoil
Of such dishonourable broil?"—
Sullen and slowly they unclasp,
As struck with shame, their desperate grasp,
And each upon his rival glared,
With foot advanced and blade half bared.

XXXV.

Ere yet the brands aloft were flung,
Margaret on Roderick's mantle hung,
And Malcolm heard his Ellen's scream,
As faltered through terrific dream.

Then Roderick plunged in sheath his sword,
And veiled his wrath in scornful word :
" Rest safe till morning ; pity 'twere
Such cheek should feel the midnight air !
Then mayst thou to James Stuart tell
Roderick will keep the lake and fell,
Nor lackey, with his freeborn clan,
The pageant pomp of earthly man.
More would he of Clan-Alpine know,
Thou canst our strength and passes show.—
Malise, what ho !"—his henchman came *—
" Give our safe conduct to the Græme."—
Young Malcolm answered, calm and bold :
" Fear nothing for thy favourite hold ;
The spot an angel deigned to grace
Is blessed, though robbers haunt the place.
Thy churlish courtesy, for those
Reserve who fear to be thy foes.
As safe to me the mountain way
At midnight as in blaze of day,
Though, with his boldest at his back,
Even Roderick Dhu beset the track.—
Brave Douglas,—lovely Ellen,—nay,
Nought here of parting will I say.
Earth does not hold a lonesome glen,
So secret, but we meet agen.†††
Chieftain ! we too shall find an hour."—
He said, and left the silvan bower.

XXXVI.

Old Allan followed to the strand
(Such was the Douglas's command),
And anxious told how, on the morn,
The stern Sir Roderick deep had sworn,
The Fiery Cross should circle o'er
Dale, glen, and valley, down, and moor.
Much were the peril to the Græme
From those who to the signal came ;

* See Note 21.

Far up the lake 'twere safest land,
 Himself would row him to the strand.
 He gave his counsel to the wind,
 While Malcolm did, unheeding, bind,
 Round dirk and pouch and broadsword rolled,
 His ample plaid in tightened fold,
 And stripped his limbs to such array
 As best might suit the watery way.

XXXVII.

Then spoke abrupt : " Farewell to thee,
 Pattern of old fidelity ! " —
 The Minstrel's hand he kindly pressed —
 " O ! could I point a place of rest !
 My sovereign holds in ward my land,
 My uncle leads my vassal band ;
 To tame his foes, his friends to aid,
 Poor Malcolm has but heart and blade.
 Yet, if there be one faithful Græme,
 Who loves the Chieftain of his name,
 Not long shall honoured Douglas dwell
 Like hunted stag in mountain cell ;
 Nor, ere yon pride-swollen robber dare, —
 I may not give the rest to air !
 Tell Roderick Dhu I owed him nought,
 Not the poor service of a boat
 To waft me to yon mountain-side." —
 Then plunged he in the flashing tide.
 Bold o'er the flood his head he bore,
 And stoutly steered him from the shore ;
 And Allan strained his anxious eye,
 Far 'mid the lake his form to spy.
 Darkening across each puny wave,
 To which the moon her silver gave,
 Fast as the cormorant could skim,
 The swimmer plied each active limb ;
 Then landing in the moonlight dell,
 Loud shouted of his weal to tell.
 The Minstrel heard the far halloo,
 And joyful from the shore withdrew.

CANTO THIRD.

THE GATHERING.

TIME rolls his ceaseless course. The race of yore
 Who danced our infancy upon their knee,
 And told our marvelling boyhood legends store
 Of their strange ventures happed by land or sea,
 How are they blotted from the things that be!
 How few, all weak and withered of their force,
 Wait, on the verge of dark eternity,
 Like stranded wrecks, the tide returning hoarse,
 To sweep them from our sight! Time rolls his ceaseless course.

Yet live there still who can remember well,
 How, when a mountain chief his bugle blew,
 Both field and forest, dingle, cliff, and dell,
 And solitary heath, the signal knew;
 And fast the faithful clan around him drew,
 What time the warning note was keenly wound,
 What time aloft their kindred banner flew,
 While clamorous war-pipes yelled the gathering sound,
 And while the Fiery Cross glanced like a meteor round.*

II.

The summer dawn's reflected hue
 To purple changed Loch Katrine blue;
 Mildly and soft the western breeze
 Just kissed the lake, just stirred the trees,
 And the pleased lake, like maiden coy,
 Trembled but dimpled not for joy.
 The mountain shadows on her breast
 Were neither broken nor at rest;
 In bright uncertainty they lie,
 Like future joys to Fancy's eye.
 The water lily to the light
 Her chalice reared of silver bright.

* See Note 22.

The doe awoke, and to the lawn,
Begemmed with dewdrops, led her fawn.
The grey mist left the mountain side ;
The torrent showed its glistening pride.
Invisible in fleckèd sky
The lark sent down her revelry ;
The blackbird and the speckled thrush
Good-morrow gave from brake and bush ;
In answer cooed the cushat dove,
Her notes of peace, and rest, and love.

III.

No thought of peace, no thought of rest,
Assuaged the storm in Roderick's breast.
With sheathèd broadsword in his hand,
Abrupt he paced the islet strand,
And eyed the rising sun, and laid
His hand on his impatient blade.
Beneath a rock, his vassals' care
Was prompt the ritual to prepare,
With deep and deathful meaning fraught ;
For such Antiquity had taught
Was preface meet, ere yet abroad
The Cross of Fire should take its road.
The shrinking band stood oft aghast
At the impatient glance he cast ;—
Such glance the mountain eagle threw,
As, from the cliffs of Benvenüe,
She spread her dark sails on the wind,
And, high in middle heaven reclined,
With her broad shadow on the lake,
Silenced the warblers of the brake.

IV.

A heap of withered boughs was piled,
Of juniper and rowan wild,
Mingled with shivers from the oak
Rent by the lightning's recent stroke.
Brian, the Hermit, by it stood,
Barefooted, in his frock and hood.

His grizzled beard and matted hair
Obscured a visage of despair ;
His naked arms and legs, seamed o'er,
The scars of frantic penance bore.
That Monk, of savage form and face,*
The impending danger of his race
Had drawn from deepest solitude
Far in Benharrow's bosom rude.
Not his the mien of Christian priest,
But Druid's, from the grave released,
Whose hardened heart and eye might brook
On human sacrifice to look ;
And much, 'twas said, of heathen lore
Mixed in the charms he muttered o'er.
The hallowed creed gave only worse
And deadlier emphasis of curse.
No peasant sought that Hermit's prayer ;
His cave the pilgrim shunned with care ;
The eager huntsman knew his bound,
And in mid chase called off his hound ;
Or if, in lonely glen or strath,
The desert-dweller met his path,
He prayed, and signed the cross between,
While terror took devotion's mien.

v.

Of Brian's birth strange tales were told : †
His mother watched a midnight fold
Built deep within a dreary glen,
Where scattered lay the bones of men
In some forgotten battle slain,
And bleached by drifting wind and rain.
It might have tamed a warrior's heart,
To view such mockery of his art !
The knot-grass fettered there the hand
Which once could burst an iron band ;
Beneath the broad and ample bone
That bucklered heart to fear unknown,

* See Note 23. † See Note 24.

A feeble and a timorous guest,
The fieldfare framed her lowly nest ;
There the slow blindworm left his slime
On the fleet limbs that mocked at time ;
And there, too, lay the leader's skull,
Still wreathed with chaplet flushed and full,
For heathbell, with her purple bloom,
Supplied the bonnet and the plume.
All night, in this sad glen, the maid
Sate, shrouded in her mantle's shade.
She said no shepherd sought her side,
No hunter's hand her snood untied ;
Yet ne'er again to braid her hair
The virgin snood did Alice wear.*
Gone was her maiden glee and sport ;
Her maiden girdle all too short ;
Nor sought she, from that fatal night,
Or holy church or blessed rite,
But locked her secret in her breast,
And died in travail, unconfessed.

VI.

Alone, among his young compeers,
Was Brian from his infant years ;
A moody and heartbroken boy,
Estranged from sympathy and joy,
Bearing each taunt which careless tongue
On his mysterious lineage flung.
Whole nights he spent by moonlight pale
To wood and stream his hap to wail,
Till, frantic, he as truth received
What of his birth the crowd believed,
And sought, in mist and meteor fire,
To meet and know his Phantom Sire !
In vain, to soothe his wayward fate,
The cloister oped her pitying gate ;
In vain, the learning of the age
Unclasped the sable-lettered page,

* See Note 25.

Even in its treasures he could find
 Food for the fever of his mind.
 Eager he read whatever tells
 Of magic, cabala, and spells,
 And every dark pursuit allied
 To curious and presumptuous pride ;
 Till, with fired brain and nerves o'erstrung,
 And heart with mystic horrors wrung,
 Desperate he sought Benharrow's den,
 And hid him from the haunts of men.

VII.

The desert gave him visions wild,
 Such as might suit the spectre's child.
 Where with black cliffs the torrents toil,
 He watched the wheeling eddies boil,
 Till, from their foam, his dazzled eyes
 Beheld the river demon rise ; *
 The mountain mist took form and limb
 Of noontide hag, or goblin grim ; †
 The midnight wind came wild and dread,
 Swelled with the voices of the dead ;
 Far on the future battle-heath
 His eye beheld the ranks of death :
 Thus the lone Seer, from mankind hurled,
 Shaped forth a disembodied world.
 One lingering sympathy of mind
 Still bound him to the mortal kind :
 The only parent he could claim
 Of ancient Alpine's lineage came.
 Late had he heard, in prophet's dream,
 The fatal Ben-Shie's boding scream ; ‡
 Sounds, too, had come in midnight blast,
 Of charging steeds, careering fast
 Along Benharrow's shingly side,
 Where mortal horseman ne'er might ride ; §
 The thunderbolt had split the pine ; —
 All augured ill to Alpine's line.

* See Note 26.

† See Note 27.

‡ See Note 28.

§ See Note 29.

He girt his loins, and came to show
 The signals of impending woe ;
 And now stood prompt to bless or ban,
 As bade the Chieftain of his clan.

VIII.

'Twas all prepared ;—and from the rock,
 A goat, the patriarch of the flock,
 Before the kindling pile was laid,
 And pierced by Roderick's ready blade.
 Patient the sickening victim eyed
 The life-blood ebb in crimson tide
 Down his clogged beard and shaggy limb,
 Till darkness glazed his eyeballs dim.
 The grisly priest, with murmuring prayer,
 A slender crosslet formed with care,
 A cubit's length in measure due ;
 The shaft and limbs were rods of yew,
 Whose parents in Inch-Cailliach wave *
 Their shadows o'er Clan-Alpine's grave,
 And, answering Lomond's breezes deep,
 Soothe many a chieftain's endless sleep.
 The Cross, thus formed, he held on high,
 With wasted hand and haggard eye,
 And strange and mingled feelings woke,
 While his anathema he spoke :—

IX.

" Woe to the clansman, who shall view
 This symbol of sepulchral yew,
 Forgetful that its branches grew
 Where weep the heavens their holiest dew
 On Alpine's dwelling low !
 Deserter of his Chieftain's trust,
 He ne'er shall mingle with their dust,
 But, from his sires and kindred thrust,
 Each clansman's execration just
 Shall doom him wrath and woe ! "

* See Note 30.

He paused ;—the word the vassals took,
With forward step and fiery look,
On high their naked brands they shook,
Their clattering targets wildly strook ;
 And first in murmur low,
Then like the billow in his course,
That far to seaward finds his source,
And flings to shore his mustered force,
Burst, with loud roar, their answer hoarse,
 “ Woe to the traitor, woe ! ”
Ben-an’s grey scalp the accents knew,
The joyous wolf from covert drew,
The exulting eagle screamed afar,—
They knew the voice of Alpine’s war.

X.

The shout was hushed on lake and fell,
The Monk resumed his muttered spell.
Dismal and low its accents came,
The while he scathed the Cross with flame ;
And the few words that reached the air,
Although the holiest name was there,
Had more of blasphemy than prayer.
But when he shook above the crowd
Its kindled points, he spoke aloud :—
“ Woe to the wretch who fails to rear
At this dread sign the ready spear !
For, as the flames this symbol sear,
Her home, the refuge of his fear,
 A kindred fate shall know ;
Far o’er its roof the volumed flame
Clan-Alpine’s vengeance shall proclaim ;
While maids and matrons on his name
Shall call down wretchedness and shame,
 And infamy and woe.”—
Then rose the cry of females, shrill
As gosshawk’s whistle on the hill,
Denouncing misery and ill,
Mingled with childhood’s babbling trill
Of curses stammered slow ;

Answering, with imprecation dread,
 "Sunk be his home in embers red !
 And cursèd be the meanest shed
 That e'er shall hide the houseless head,
 We doom to want and woe !"
 A sharp and shrieking echo gave,
 Coir-Uriskin, thy goblin cave ;
 And the grey pass, where birches wave,
 On Beala-nam-bo.

XI.

Then deeper paused the priest anew,
 And hard his labouring breath he drew,
 While, with set teeth and clenched hand,
 And eyes that glowed like fiery brand,
 He meditated curse more dread,
 And deadlier, on the clansman's head,
 Who, summoned to his Chieftain's aid,
 The signal saw and disobeyed.
 The crosslet's points of sparkling wood
 He quenched among the bubbling blood,
 And as again the sign he reared,
 Hollow and hoarse his voice was heard :
 "When flits this Cross from man to man,
 Vich-Alpine's summons to his clan,
 Burst be the ear that fails to heed !
 Palsied the foot that shuns to speed !
 May ravens tear the careless eyes,
 Wolves make the coward heart their prize !
 As sinks that blood-stream in the earth,
 So may his heart's blood drench his hearth !
 As dies in hissing gore the spark,
 Quench thou his light, Destruction dark !
 And be the grace to him denied,
 Bought by this sign to all beside !"—
 He ceased ; no echo gave agen
 The murmur of the deep Amen.

XII.

Then Roderick, with impatient look,
 From Brian's hand the symbol took.

"Speed, Malise, speed!" he said, and gave
The crosslet to his henchman brave.
"The muster-place be Lanrick-mead—
Instant the time—speed, Malise, speed!"—
Like heathbird when the hawks pursue,
A barge across Loch Katrine flew;
High stood the henchman on the prow;
So rapidly the bargemen row,
The bubbles, where they launched the boat,
Were all unbroken and afloat,
Dancing in foam and ripple still,
When it had neared the mainland hill;
And from the silver beach's side
Still was the prow three fathom wide,
When lightly bounded to the land
The messenger of blood and brand.

XIII.]

Speed, Malise, speed! the dun deer's hide
On fleeter foot was never tied.*
Speed, Malise, speed! such cause of haste
Thine active sinews never braced.
Bend 'gainst the steepy hill thy breast,
Burst down like torrent from its crest;
With short and springing footstep pass
The trembling bog and false morass;
Across the brook like roebuck bound,
And thread the brake like questing hound;
The crag is high, the scaur is deep,
Yet shrink not from the desperate leap;
Parched are thy burning lips and brow,
Yet by the fountain pause not now;
Herald of battle, fate, and fear,
Stretch onward in thy fleet career!
The wounded hind thou track'st not now,
Pursuest not maid through greenwood bough,
Nor pliest thou now thy flying pace
With rivals in the mountain race;

* See Note 31.

But danger, death, and warrior deed,
Are in thy course—speed, Malise, speed !

XIV.

Fast as the fatal symbol flies,
In arms the huts and hamlets rise ;
From winding glen, from upland brown,
They poured each hardy tenant down.
Nor slack'd the messenger his pace ;
He showed the sign, he named the place,
And, pressing forward like the wind,
Left clamour and surprise behind.
The fisherman forsook the strand ;
The swarthy smith took dirk and brand ;
With changèd cheer, the mower blithe
Left in the half-cut swathe the scythe ;
The herds without a keeper strayed ;
The plough was in mid-furrow stay'd ;
The falc'ner tossed his hawk away ;
The hunter left the stag at bay ;—
Prompt at the signal of alarms,
Each son of Alpine rushed to arms :
So swept the tumult and affray
Along the margin of Achray.
Alas ! thou lovely lake ! that e'er
Thy banks should echo sounds of fear !
The rocks, the bosky thickets, sleep
So stilly on thy bosom deep,
The lark's blithe carol from the cloud
Seems for the scene too gaily loud.

XV.

Speed, Malise, speed ! the lake is past,
Duncraggan's huts appear at last,
And peep, like moss-grown rocks, half seen,
Half hidden in the copse so green ;
There mayst thou rest, thy labour done,
Their lord shall speed the signal on.—
As stoops the hawk upon his prey,
The henchman shot him down the way.—

What woeful accents load the gale?
 The funeral yell, the female wail!
 A gallant hunter's sport is o'er,
 A valiant warrior fights no more.
 Who, in the battle or the chase,
 At Roderick's side shall fill his place!—
 Within the hall, where torches' ray
 Supplies the excluded beams of day,
 Lies Duncan on his lowly bier,
 And o'er him streams his widow's tear.
 His stripling son stands mournful by,
 His youngest weeps, but knows not why;
 The village maids and matrons round
 The dismal coronach * resound.

XVI.

Coronach.

He is gone on the mountain,
 He is lost to the forest,
 Like a summer-dried fountain,
 When our need was the sorest.
 The font, reappearing,
 From the raindrops shall borrow;
 But to us comes no cheering,
 To Duncan no morrow!

The hand of the reaper
 Takes the ears that are hoary;
 But the voice of the weeper
 Wails manhood in glory.
 The autumn winds rushing
 Waft the leaves that are searest;
 But our flower was in flushing,
 When blighting was nearest.

Fleet foot on the correi,†
 Sage counsel in cumber,

* Coronach, funeral song. See Note 32.

† Correi or corri, the hollow side of the hill, where game usually lies.

Red hand in the foray,
 How sound is thy slumber !
 Like the dew on the mountain,
 Like the foam on the river,
 Like the bubble on the fountain,
 Thou art gone, and for ever !

XVII.

See Stumah,* who, the bier beside,
 His master's corpse with wonder eyed,
 Poor Stumah ! whom his least halloo
 Could send like lightning o'er the dew,
 Bristles his crest and points his ears,
 As if some stranger step he hears.
 'Tis not a mourner's muffled tread,
 Who comes to sorrow o'er the dead,
 But headlong haste, or deadly fear,
 Urge the precipitate career.
 All stand aghast :—unheeding all,
 The henchman bursts into the hall ;
 Before the dead man's bier he stood,
 Held forth the Cross besmeared with blood :
 "The muster-place is Lanrick-mead ;
 Speed forth the signal ! clansmen, speed !"

XVIII.

Angus, the heir of Duncan's line,
 Sprung forth and seized the fatal sign.
 In haste the stripling to his side
 His father's dirk and broadsword tied ;
 But when he saw his mother's eye
 Watch him in speechless agony,
 Back to her opened arms he flew,
 Pressed on her lips a fond adieu.
 "Alas !" she sobbed,— "and yet be gone,
 And speed thee forth, like Duncan's son !"—
 One look he cast upon the bier,
 Dashed from his eye the gathering tear,

* Stumah, "faithful." The name of a dog.

Breathed deep to clear his labouring breast,
And tossed aloft his bonnet crest ;
Then, like the high-bred colt when, freed,
First he essays his fire and speed,
He vanished, and o'er moor and moss
Sped forward with the Fiery Cross.
Suspended was the widow's tear,
While yet his footsteps she could hear ;
And when she marked the henchman's eye
Wet with unwonted sympathy,
" Kinsman," she said, " his race is run
That should have sped thine errand on ;
The oak has fallen—the sapling bough
Is all Duncraggan's shelter now.
Yet trust I well, his duty done,
The orphan's God will guard my son.—
And you, in many a danger true,
At Duncan's hest your blades that drew,
To arms, and guard that orphan's head !
Let babes and women wail the dead."—
Then weapon-clang, and martial call,
Resounded through the funeral hall,
While from the walls the attendant band
Snatched sword and targe, with hurried hand ;
And short and flitting energy
Glanced from the mourner's sunken eye,
As if the sounds to warrior dear
Might rouse her Duncan from his bier.
But faded soon that borrowed force ;
Grief claimed his right, and tears their course.

XIX.

Benledi saw the Cross of Fire,
It glanced like lightning up Strath-Ire.
O'er dale and hill the summons flew,
Nor rest nor pause young Angus knew ;
The tear that gathered in his eye,
He left the mountain breeze to dry ;
Until, where Teith's young waters roll,
Betwixt him and a wooded knoll,

That graced the sable strath with green,
The chapel of Saint Bride was seen.
Swoln was the stream, remote the bridge,
But Angus paused not on the edge;
Though the dark waves danced dizzily,
Though reeled his sympathetic eye,
He dashed amid the torrent's roar.
His right hand high the crosslet bore,
His left the pole-axe grasped, to guide
And stay his footing in the tide.
He stumbled twice—the foam splashed high;
With hoarser swell the stream raced by;
And had he fallen—for ever there,
Farewell Duncraggan's orphan heir!
But still, as if in parting life,
Firmer he grasped the Cross of strife,
Until the opposing bank he gained,
And up the chapel pathway strained.

xx.

A blithesome rout, that morning tide,
Had sought the chapel of Saint Bride.
Her troth Tombea's Mary gave
To Norman, heir of Armandave;
And, issuing from the Gothic arch,
The bridal now resumed their march.
In rude but glad procession came
Bonneted sire and coif-clad dame;
And plaided youth, with jest and jeer,
Which snooded maiden would not hear;
And children, that, unwitting why,
Lent the gay shout their shrilly cry;
And minstrels, that in measures vied
Before the young and bonny bride,
Whose downcast eye and cheek disclose
The tear and blush of morning rose.
With virgin step, and bashful hand,
She held the kerchief's snowy band;
The gallant bridegroom, by her side,
Beheld his prize with victor's pride;

And the glad mother in her ear.
Was closely whispering word of cheer.

XXI. their vent 1st

Who meets them at the churchyard gate?—
The messenger of fear and fate!
Haste in his hurried accent lies,
And grief is swimming in his eyes.
All dripping from the recent flood,
Panting, and travel-soiled, he stood,
The fatal sign of fire and sword
Held forth, and spoke the appointed word:
“The muster-place is Lanrick-mead;
Speed forth the signal! Norman, speed!”—
And must he change so soon the hand
Just linked to his by holy band,
For the fell Cross of blood and brand?
And must the day, so blithe that rose,
And promised rapture in the close,
Before its setting hour, divide
The bridegroom from the plighted bride?
O fatal doom!—it must! it must!
Clan-Alpine’s cause, her Chieftain’s trust,
Her summons dread, brook no delay:
Stretch to the race—away! away!

XXII.

Yet slow he laid his plaid aside,
And, lingering, eyed his lovely bride,
Until he saw the starting tear
Speak woe he might not stop to cheer;
Then, trusting not a second look,
In haste he sped him up the brook,
Nor backward glanced till on the heath
Where Lubnaig’s lake supplies the Teith.—
What in the racer’s bosom stirred?
The sickening pang of hope deferred,
And memory, with a torturing train
Of all his morning visions vain.

Mingled with love's impatience, came
 The manly thirst for martial fame ;
 The stormy joy of mountaineers,
 Ere yet they rush upon the spears ;
 And zeal for Clan and Chieftain burning,
 And hope, from well-fought field returning,
 With war's red honours on his crest,
 To clasp his Mary to his breast.
 Stung by such thoughts, o'er bank and brae,
 Like fire from flint he glanced away ;
 While high resolve, and feeling strong,
 Burst into voluntary song.

XXIII.

Song.

The heath this night must be my bed,
 The bracken curtain for my head,
 My lullaby the warder's tread,
 Far, far, from love and thee, Mary ;
 To-morrow eve, more stilly laid,
 My couch may be my bloody plaid,
 My vesper song thy wail, sweet maid !—
 It will not waken me, Mary !

I may not, dare not, fancy now
 The grief that clouds thy lovely brow ;
 I dare not think upon thy vow,
 And all it promised me, Mary.
 No fond regret must Norman know ;
 When bursts Clan-Alpine on the foe,
 His heart must be like bended bow,
 His foot like arrow free, Mary.

A time will come with feeling fraught !
 For, if I fall in battle fought,
 Thy hapless lover's dying thought
 Shall be a thought on thee, Mary.
 And if returned from conquered foes,
 How blithely will the evening close,
 How sweet the linnet sing repose,
 To my young bride and me, Mary !

XXIV.

Not faster o'er thy heathery braes,
Balquidder, speeds the midnight blaze,*
Rushing, in conflagration strong,
Thy deep ravines and dells along,
Wrapping thy cliffs in purple glow,
And reddening the dark lakes below ;
Nor faster speeds it, nor so far,
As o'er thy heaths the voice of war.
The signal roused to martial coil
The sullen margin of Loch Voil ;
Waked still Loch Doine ; and to the source
Alarmed, Balvaig, thy swampy course ;
Thence southward turned its rapid road
Adown Strath-Gartney's valley broad :
Till rose in arms each man might claim
A portion in Clan-Alpine's name,
From the grey sire, whose trembling hand
Could hardly buckle on his brand,
To the raw boy, whose shaft and bow
Were yet scarce terror to the crow.
Each valley, each sequestered glen,
Mustered its little horde of men,
That met as torrents from the height
In Highland dales their streams unite,
Still gathering, as they pour along,
A voice more loud, a tide more strong,
Till at the rendezvous they stood
By hundreds prompt for blows and blood ;
Each trained to arms since life began,
Owning no tie but to his clan,
No oath but by his Chieftain's hand,†
No law but Roderick Dhu's command.

XXV.

That summer morn had Roderick Dhu
Surveyed the skirts of Benvenue,

* See Note 33. † See Note 34.

And sent his scouts o'er hill and heath,
 To view the frontiers of Menteith.
 All backward came with news of truce :
 Still lay each martial Græme and Bruce ;
 In Rednoch courts no horsemen wait ;
 No banner waved on Cardross gate ;
 On Duchray's towers no beacon shone ;
 Nor scared the herons from Loch Con ;—
 All seemed at peace.—Now, wot ye why
 The Chieftain, with such anxious eye,
 Ere to the muster he repair,
 This western frontier scanned with care ?—
 In Benvenue's most darksome cleft,
 A fair, though cruel, pledge was left ;
 For Douglas, to his promise true,
 That morning from the isle withdrew,
 And in a deep sequestered dell
 Had sought a low and lonely cell.
 By many a bard, in Celtic tongue,
 Has Coir-nan-Uriskin been sung ;*
 A softer name the Saxons gave,
 And called the grot the Goblin-cave.

XXVI.

It was a wild and strange retreat,
 As e'er was trod by outlaw's feet.
 The dell, upon the mountain's crest,
 Yawned like a gash on warrior's breast ;
 Its trench had stayed full many a rock,
 Hurl'd by primeval earthquake shock
 From Benvenue's grey summit wild,
 And here, in random ruin piled,
 They frowned incumbent o'er the spot,
 And formed the rugged silvan grot.
 The oak and birch, with mingled shade,
 At noontide there a twilight made,
 Unless when short and sudden shone
 Some straggling beam on cliff or stone,

* See Note 35.

With such a glimpse as prophet's eye
Gains on thy depth, Futurity.
No murmur waked the solemn still,
Save tinkling of a fountain rill ;
But when the wind chafed with the lake
A sullen sound would upward break,
With dashing hollow voice, that spoke
The incessant war of wave and rock.
Suspended cliffs, with hideous sway,
Seemed nodding o'er the cavern grey.
From such a den the wolf had sprung,
In such the wild-cat leaves her young ;
Yet Douglas and his daughter fair
Sought for a space their safety there.
Grey Superstition's whisper dread
Debarred the spot to vulgar tread ;
For there, she said, did fays resort,
And satyrs* hold their silvan court,
By moonlight tread their mystic maze,
And blast the rash beholder's gaze.

XXVII.

Now eve, with western shadows long,
Floated on Katrine bright and strong,
When Roderick, with a chosen few,
Repassed the heights of Benvenue.
Above the Goblin-cave they go,
Through the wild pass of Beal-nam-bo ; †
The prompt retainers speed before,
To launch the shallop from the shore,
For cross Loch Katrine lies his way
To view the passes of Achray,
And place his clansmen in array.
Yet lags the Chief in musing mind,
Unwonted sight, his men behind.
A single page, to bear his sword, ‡
Alone attended on his lord ;

* The Uris, or Highland satyr.

† See Note 36.

‡ See Note 37.

The rest their way through thickets break,
And soon await him by the lake.
It was a fair and gallant sight,
To view them from the neighbouring height,
By the low-levelled sunbeams' light ;
For strength and stature, from the clan
Each warrior was a chosen man,
As even afar might well be seen
By their proud step and martial mien.
Their feathers dance, their tartans float,
Their targets gleam, as by the boat
A wild and warlike group they stand,
That well became such mountain strand.

XXVIII.

Their Chief, with step reluctant, still
Was lingering on the craggy hill,
Hard by where turned apart the road
To Douglas's obscure abode.
It was but with that dawning morn
That Roderick Dhu had proudly sworn
To drown his love in war's wild roar,
Nor think of Ellen Douglas more ;
But he who stems a stream with sand,
And fetters flame with flaxen band,
Has yet a harder task to prove—
By firm resolve to conquer love !
Eve finds the Chief, like restless ghost,
Still hovering near his treasure lost ;
For though his haughty heart deny
A parting meeting to his eye,
Still fondly strains his anxious ear
The accents of her voice to hear,
And inly did he curse the breeze
That waked to sound the rustling trees.
But, hark ! what mingles in the strain ?
It is the harp of Allan-bane,
That wakes its measures slow and high,
Attuned to sacred minstrelsy.

What melting voice attends the strings?
'Tis Ellen, or an angel, sings.

XXIX.

Hymn to the Virgin.

Ave Maria! maiden mild!

Listen to a maiden's prayer!
Thou canst hear though from the wild,
Thou canst save amid despair.
Safe may we sleep beneath thy care,
Though banished, outcast, and reviled—
Maiden! hear a maiden's prayer!
Mother, hear a suppliant child!

Ave Maria!

Ave Maria! undefiled!

The flinty couch we now must share
Shall seem with down of eider piled,
If thy protection hover there.
The murky cavern's heavy air
Shall breathe of balm if thou hast smiled;
Then, Maiden! hear a maiden's prayer!
Mother, list a suppliant child!

Ave Maria!

Ave Maria! stainless styled!

Foul demons of the earth and air,
From this their wonted haunt exiled,
Shall flee before thy presence fair.
We bow us to our lot of care,
Beneath thy guidance reconciled;
Hear for a maid a maiden's prayer,
And for a father hear a child!

Ave Maria!

XXX.

Died on the harp the closing hymn—
Unmoved in attitude and limb,
As list'ning still, Clan-Alpine's lord
Stood leaning on his heavy sword,

Until the page, with humble sign,
Twice pointed to the sun's decline.
Then, while his plaid he round him cast,
"It is the last time—'tis the last,"
He muttered thrice,—“the last time e'er
That angel-voice shall Roderick hear!”—
It was a goading thought—his stride
Hied hastier down the mountain-side ;
Sullen he flung him in the boat,
And instant 'cross the lake it shot.
They landed in that silvery bay,
And eastward held their hasty way,
Till, with the latest beams of light
The band arrived on Lanrick height,
Where mustered, in the vale below,
Clan-Alpine's men in martial show.

XXXI.

A various scene the clansmen made,
Some sate, some stood, some slowly strayed ;
But most, with mantles folded round,
Were couched to rest upon the ground,
Scarce to be known by curious eye
From the deep heather where they lie,
So well was matched the tartan screen
With heathbell dark and brackens green ;
Unless where, here and there, a blade,
Or lance's point, a glimmer made,
Like glowworm twinkling through the shade.
But when, advancing through the gloom,
They saw the Chieftain's eagle plume,
Their shout of welcome, shrill and wide,
Shook the steep mountain's steady side.
Thrice it arose, and lake and fell
Three times returned the martial yell ;
It died upon Bochastle's plain,
And Silence claimed her evening reign.

CANTO FOURTH.

THE PROPHECY.

Introduction.

"THE rose is fairest when 'tis budding new,
And hope is brightest when it dawns from fears;
The rose is sweetest washed with morning dew,
And love is loveliest when embalmed in tears.
O wilding rose, whom fancy thus endears,
I bid your blossoms in my bonnet wave,
Emblem of hope and love through future years!"
Thus spoke young Norman, heir of Armandave,
What time the sun arose on Vennachar's broad wave.

II.

Such fond conceit, half said, half sung,
Love prompted to the bridegroom's tongue.
All while he stripped the wild-rose spray,
His axe and bow beside him lay,
For on a pass 'twixt lake and wood,
A wakeful sentinel he stood.
Hark! on the rock a footstep rung,
And instant to his arms he sprung.
"Stand, or thou diest!—What, Malise?—soon
Art thou returned from Braes of Doune.
By thy keen step and glance I know
Thou bring'st us tidings of the foe."—
(For while the Fiery Cross hied on,
On distant scout had Malise gone.)
"Where sleeps the Chief?" the henchman said.—
"Apart, in yonder misty glade;
To his lone couch I'll be your guide."—
Then called a slumberer by his side,
And stirred him with his slackened bow—
"Up, up, Glentarkin! rouse thee, ho!
We seek the Chieftain; on the track,
Keep eagle watch till I come back."

III.

Together up the pass they sped.
"What of the foeman?" Norman said.—

- “ Varying reports from near and far ;
 This certain—that a band of war
 Has for two days been ready boune,
 At prompt command, to march from Doune ;
 King James, the while, with princely powers,
 Holds revelry in Stirling towers.
 Soon will this dark and gathering cloud
 Break on our glens in thunder loud.
 Inured to bide such bitter bout,
 The warrior’s plaid may bear it out ;
 But, Norman, how wilt thou provide
 A shelter for thy bonny bride ? ”—
- “ What ! know ye not that Roderick’s care
 To the lone isle hath caused repair
 Each maid and matron of the clan,
 And every child and aged man
 Unfit for arms ; and given his charge,
 Nor skiff nor shallop, boat nor barge,
 Upon these lakes shall float at large,
 But all beside the islet moor,
 That such dear pledge may rest secure ? ”—

IV.

- “ ’Tis well advised—the Chieftain’s plan
 Bespeaks the father of his clan.
 But wherefore sleeps Sir Roderick Dhu
 Apart from all his followers true ? ”—
- “ It is because last evening-tide
 Brian an augury hath tried,
 Of that dread kind which must not be
 Unless in dread extremity,
 The Taghairm called ; by which, afar,
 Our sirès foresaw the events of war.*
 Duncraggan’s milk-white bull they slew.”—

MALISE.

- “ Ah ! well the gallant brute I knew !
 The choicest of the prey we had,
 When swept our merry-men Gallangad.

* See Note 38.

His hide was snow, his horns were dark,
 His red eye glowed like fiery spark ;
 So fierce, so tameless, and so fleet,
 Sore did he cumber our retreat,
 And kept our stoutest kerns in awe,
 Even at the pass of Beal 'maha.
 But steep and flinty was the road,
 And sharp the hurrying pikemen's goad,
 And when we came to Dennan's Row,
 A child might scatheless stroke his brow."—

V.

NORMAN.

"That bull was slain : his reeking hide
 They stretched the cataract beside,
 Whose waters their wild tumult toss
 Adown the black and craggy boss
 Of that huge cliff, whose ample verge
 Tradition calls the Hero's Targe.*
 Couched on a shelf beneath its brink,
 Close where the thundering torrents sink,
 Rocking beneath their headlong sway,
 And drizzled by the ceaseless spray,
 Midst groan of rock and roar of stream,
 The wizard waits prophetic dream.
 Nor distant rests the Chief ;—but hush !
 See, gliding slow through mist and bush,
 The Hermit gains yon rock, and stands
 To gaze upon our slumbering bands.
 Seems he not, Malise, like a ghost
 That hovers o'er a slaughtered host ?
 Or raven on the blasted oak,
 That, watching while the deer is broke, †
 His morsel claims with sullen croak ?"—

MALISE.

"Peace ! peace ! to other than to me,
 Thy words were evil augury ;

* See Note 39. † See Note 42. * Quartered.

But still I hold Sir Roderick's blade
 Clan-Alpine's omen and her aid ;
 Not aught that, gleaned from heaven or hell,
 Yon fiend-begotten Monk can tell.
 The Chieftain joins him, see—and now,
 Together they descend the brow."

VI.

And, as they came, with Alpine's Lord
 The Hermit Monk held solemn word :
 " Roderick ! it is a fearful strife,
 For man endowed with mortal life,
 Whose shroud of sentient clay can still
 Feel feverish pang and fainting chill,
 Whose eye can stare in stony trance,
 Whose hair can rouse like warrior's lance,—
 'Tis hard for such to view, unfurled,—
 The curtain of the future world.
 Yet, witness every quaking limb,
 My sunken pulse, my eyeballs dim,
 My soul with harrowing anguish torn,—
 This for my Chieftain have I borne !—
 The shapes that sought my fearful couch,
 A human tongue may ne'er avouch ;
 No mortal man—save he who, bred
 Between the living and the dead,
 Is gifted beyond nature's law—
 Had e'er survived to say he saw.
 At length the fateful answer came,
 In characters of living flame !
 Not spoke in word, nor blazed in scroll,
 But borne and branded on my soul :—
 WHICH SPILLS THE FOREMOST FOEMAN'S LIFE,
 THAT PARTY CONQUERS IN THE STRIFE ! " *

VII.

" Thanks, Brian, for thy zeal and care !
 Good is thine augury, and fair.

* See Note 40.

Clan-Alpine ne'er in battle stood,
But first our broadswords tasted blood.
A surer victim still I know,
Self-offered to the auspicious blow :
A spy has sought my land this morn,
No eve shall witness his return !
My followers guard each pass's mouth,
To east, to westward, and to south ;
Red Murdoch, bribed to be his guide,
Has charge to lead his steps aside,
Till, in deep path or dingle brown,
He light on those shall bring him down.—
But see, who comes his news to show !—
Malise ! what tidings of the foe ? ”—

VIII.

- “ At Doune, o'er many a spear and glaive,
Two Barons proud their banners wave.
I saw the Moray's silver star,
And marked the sable pale of Mar.”—
“ By Alpine's soul, high tidings those !
I love to hear of worthy foes,
When move they on ? ”—“ To-morrow's noon
Will see them here for battle boune.” *
“ Then shall it see a meeting stern !—
But, for the place—say, couldst thou learn
Nought of the friendly clans of Earn ?
Strengthened by them, we well might bide
The battle on Benledi's side.
Thou couldst not ?—Well ! Clan-Alpine's men
Shall man the Trosachs' shaggy glen ;
Within Loch Katrine's gorge we'll fight,
All in our maids' and matrons' sight,
Each for his hearth and household fire,
Father for child, and son for sire, —
Lover for maid beloved !—But why—
Is it the breeze affects mine eye ?
Or dost thou come, ill-omened tear !
A messenger of doubt or fear ?

* For battle boune, ready for battle.

No ! sooner may the Saxon lance
 Unfix Benledi from his stance,
 Than doubt or terror can pierce through
 The unyielding heart of Roderick Dhu !
 'Tis stubborn as his trusty targe.—
 Each to his post !—all know their charge.”
 The pibroch sounds, the bands advance,
 The broadswords gleam, the banners dance,
 Obedient to the Chieftain's glance.—
 I turn me from the martial roar,
 And seek Coir-Uriskin once more.

IX.

Where is the Douglas ?—He is gone ;
 And Ellen sits on the grey stone
 Fast by the cave, and makes her moan ;
 While vainly Allan's words of cheer
 Are poured on her unheeding ear :
 “ He will return—Dear lady, trust !—
 With joy return ;—he will—he must.
 Well was it time to seek afar
 Some refuge from impending war,
 When e'en Clan-Alpine's rugged swarm
 Are cowed by the approaching storm.
 I saw their boats, with many a light,
 Floating the livelong yesternight,
 Shifting like flashes darted forth
 By the red streamers of the north ;
 I marked at morn how close they ride,
 Thick moored by the lone islet's side,
 Like wild-ducks couching in the fen,
 When stoops the hawk upon the glen.
 Since this rude race dare not abide
 The peril on the mainland side,
 Shall not thy noble father's care
 Some safe retreat for thee prepare ? ”—

X.

ELLEN'S REPLY

“ No, Allan, no ! Pretext so kind
 My wakeful terrors could not blind.

When in such tender tone, yet grave,
Douglas a parting blessing gave,
The tear that glistened in his eye
Drowned not his purpose fixed on high.
My soul, though feminine and weak,
Can image his ; e'en as the lake,
Itself disturbed by slightest stroke,
Reflects the invulnerable rock.
He hears report of battle rife,
He deems himself the cause of strife.
I saw him redden, when the theme
Turned, Allan, on thine idle dream,
Of Malcolm Græme in fetters bound,
Which I, thou saidst, about him wound.
Think'st thou he trowed thine omen aught ?
Oh no ! 'twas apprehensive thought
For the kind youth,—for Roderick too
(Let me be just), that friend so true ;
In danger both, and in our cause !
Minstrel, the Douglas dare not pause.
Why else that solemn warning given,
' If not on earth, we meet in heaven ' ?
Why else, to Cambuskenneth's fane,
If eve return him not again,
Am I to hie, and make me known ?
Alas ! he goes to Scotland's throne,
Buys his friends' safety with his own ;—
He goes to do—what I had done,
Had Douglas' daughter been his son !"—

XI.

" Nay, lovely Ellen !—dearest, nay !
If aught should his return delay,
He only named yon holy fane
As fitting place to meet again.
Be sure he's safe ; and for the Græme,—
Heaven's blessing on his gallant name !—
My visioned sight may yet prove true,
Nor bode of ill to him or you.

When did my gifted dream beguile ?
 Think of the stranger at the isle ;
 And think upon the harpings slow,
 That presaged this approaching woe !
 Sooth was my prophecy of fear ;
 Believe it when it augurs cheer.
 Would we had left this dismal spot !
 Ill luck still haunts a fairy grot.
 Of such a wondrous tale I know—
 Dear lady, change that look of woe !
 My harp was wont thy grief to cheer.”—

ELLEN.

“Well, be it as thou wilt ; I hear,
 But cannot stop the bursting tear.”—
 The Minstrel tried his simple art,
 But distant far was Ellen’s heart.

Ballad.

ALICE BRAND.

Merry it is in the good greenwood,
 When the mavis* and merle† are singing,
 When the deer sweeps by, and the hounds are
 in cry,
 And the hunter’s horn is ringing.

“O Alice Brand, my native land
 Is lost for love of you ;
 And we must hold by wood and wold,
 As outlaws wont to do.

“O Alice, ’twas all for thy locks so bright,
 And ’twas all for thine eyes so blue,
 That on the night of our luckless flight,
 Thy brother bold I slew.

* Thrush. † Blackbird.

- "Now must I teach to hew the beech
The hand that held the glaive,
For leaves to spread our lowly bed,
And stakes to fence our cave.
- "And for vest of pall, thy fingers small,
That wont on harp to stray,
A cloak must shear from the slaughtered deer,
To keep the cold away."

- "O Richard! if my brother died,
'Twas but a fatal chance;
For darkling was the battle tried,
And fortune sped the lance.
- "If pall and vair no more I wear,
Nor thou the crimson sheen,
As warm, we'll say, is the russet grey,
As gay the forest-green.
- "And, Richard, if our lot be hard,
And lost thy native land,
Still Alice has her own Richard,
And he his Alice Brand."

XIII.

Ballad continued.

- 'Tis merry, 'tis merry, in good greenwood,
So blithe Lady Alice is singing;
On the beech's pride, and oak's brown side,
Lord Richard's axe is ringing.
- Up spoke the moody Elfin King,
Who woned within the hill,—
Like wind in the porch of a ruined church,
His voice was ghostly shrill.
- "Why sounds yon stroke on beech and oak,
Our moonlight circle's screen?
Or who comes here to chase the deer,
Beloved of our Elfin Queen?*

* See Note 41.

Or who may dare on wold to wear
The fairies' fatal green?*

"Up, Urgan, up! to yon mortal hie,
For thou wert christened man; †
For cross or sign thou wilt not fly,
For muttered word or ban.

"Lay on him the curse of the withered heart,
The curse of the sleepless eye;
Till he wish and pray that his life would part,
Nor yet find leave to die."

XIV.

Ballad continued.

'Tis merry, 'tis merry, in good greenwood,
Though the birds have stilled their singing;
The evening blaze doth Alice raise,
And Richard is fagots bringing.

Up Urgan starts, that hideous dwarf,
Before Lord Richard stands,
And, as he crossed and blessed himself—
"I fear not sign," quoth the grisly elf,
"That is made with bloody hands."

But out then spoke she, Alice Brand,
That woman void of fear—
"And if there's blood upon his hand,
'Tis but the blood of deer."

"Now loud thou liest, thou bold of mood!
It cleaves unto his hand,
The stain of thine own kindly blood,
The blood of Ethert Brand."

Then forward stepped she, Alice Brand,
And made the holy sign,—

* See Note 42. † See Note 43.

“And if there’s blood on Richard’s hand,
A spotless hand is mine.

“And I conjure thee, Demon Elf,
By Him whom demons fear,
To show us whence thou art thyself,
And what thine errand here?”

xv.

Ballad continued.

“’Tis merry, ’tis merry, in Fairyland,
When fairy birds are singing,
When the court doth ride by their monarch’s side,
With bit and bridle ringing :

“And gaily shines the Fairyland—
But all is glistening show,*
Like the idle gleam that December’s beam
Can dart on ice and snow.

“And fading, like that varied gleam,
Is our inconstant shape,
Who now like knight and lady seem,
And now like dwarf and ape.

“It was between the night and day,
When the Fairy King has power,
That I sunk down in a sinful fray,
And, ’twixt life and death, was snatched away,
To the joyless Elfin bower.†

“But wist I of a woman bold,
Who thrice my brow durst sign,
I might regain my mortal mold,
As fair a form as thine.”

She crossed him once—she crossed him twice—
That lady was so brave ;

* See Note 44.

† See Note 45.

The fouler grew his goblin hue;
The darker grew the cave.

She crossed him thrice, that lady bold;
He rose beneath her hand
The fairest knight on Scottish mold—
Her brother, Ethert Brand!

Merry it is in good greenwood,
When the mavis and merle are singing;
But merrier were they in Dunfermline grey,
When all the bells were ringing.

XVI.

Just as the minstrel sounds were stayed,
A stranger climbed the steepy glade:
His martial step, his stately mien,
His hunting suit of Lincoln green,
His eagle glance, remembrance claims—
'Tis Snowdoun's Knight, 'tis James Fitz-James.
Ellen beheld as in a dream,
Then, starting, scarce suppressed a scream:
"O stranger! in such hour of fear,
What evil hap has brought thee here?"—
"An evil hap how can it be,
That bids me look again on thee?
By promise bound, my former guide
Met me betimes this morning tide,
And marshalled, over bank and bourne,
The happy path of my return."—
"The happy path?—what! said he nought
Of war, of battle to be fought,
Of guarded pass?"—"No, by my faith!
Nor saw I aught could augur scathe."—
"O haste thee, Allan, to the kern—
Yonder his tartans I discern;
Learn thou his purpose, and conjure
That he will guide the stranger sure!—
What prompted thee, unhappy man?
The meanest serf in Roderick's clan

Had not been bribed by love or fear,
Unknown to him, to guide thee here.”—

XVII.

“Sweet Ellen, dear my life must be,
Since it is worthy care from thee ;
Yet life I hold but idle breath,
When love or honour’s weighed with death.
Then let me profit by my chance,
And speak my purpose bold at once.
I come to bear thee from a wild
Where ne’er before such blossom smiled ;
By this soft hand to lead thee far
From frantic scenes of feud and war.
Near Bochastle my horses wait ;
They bear us soon to Stirling gate.
I’ll place thee in a lovely bower,
I’ll guard thee like a tender flower.”—
“O hush, Sir Knight ! ’twere female art
To say I do not read thy heart ;
Too much, before, my selfish ear
Was idly soothed my praise to hear.
That fatal bait hath lured thee back,
In deathful hour, o’er dangerous track ;
And how, O how, can I atone
The wreck my vanity brought on !—
One way remains—I’ll tell him all—
Yes ! struggling bosom, forth it shall !
Thou, whose light folly bears the blame,
Buy thine own pardon with thy shame !
But first—my father is a man
Outlawed and exiled, under ban ;
The price of blood is on his head,
With me ’twere infamy to wed.—
Still wouldst thou speak ?—then hear the truth !
Fitz-James, there is a noble youth—
If yet he is !—exposed for me
And mine to dread extremity ;—
Thou hast the secret of my heart :
Forgive, be generous, and depart !”—

XVIII.

Fitz-James knew every wily train
A lady's fickle heart to gain;
But here he knew and felt them vain.
There shot no glance from Ellen's eye
To give her steadfast speech the lie;
In maiden confidence she stood,
Though mantled in her cheek the blood,
And told her love with such a sigh
Of deep and hopeless agony,
As death had sealed her Malcolm's doom,
And she sat sorrowing on his tomb.
Hope vanished from Fitz-James's eye,
But not with hope fled sympathy.
He proffered to attend her side,
As brother would a sister guide.—
“O! little know'st thou Roderick's heart!
Safer for both we go apart.
O haste thee, and from Allan learn
If thou mayst trust yon wily kern.”—
With hand upon his forehead laid,
The conflict of his mind to shade,
A parting step or two he made;
Then, as some thought had crossed his brain,
He paused, and turned, and came again.

XIX.

“Hear, lady, yet, a parting word!—
It chanced in fight that my poor sword
Preserved the life of Scotland's lord.
This ring the grateful Monarch gave,
And bade, when I had boon to crave,
To bring it back, and boldly claim
The recompense that I would name.
Ellen, I am no courtly lord,
But one who lives by lance and sword,
Whose castle is his helm and shield,
His lordship the embattled field.

What from a prince can I demand,
 Who neither reck of state nor land?
 Ellen, thy hand : the ring is thine—
 Each guard and usher knows the sign;
 Seek thou the King without delay—
 This signet shall secure thy way—
 And claim thy suit, whate'er it be,
 As ransom of his pledge to me.”
 He placed the golden circlet on,
 Paused—kissed her hand—and then was gone.
 The aged Minstrel stood aghast,
 So hastily Fitz-James shot past.
 He joined his guide, and wending down
 The ridges of the mountain brown,
 Across the stream they took their way,
 That joins Loch Katrine to Achray.

meditation line for XX.

All in the Trosachs' glen was still,
 Noontide was sleeping on the hill :
 Sudden his guide whooped loud and high—
 “Murdoch ! was that a signal cry ?”—
 He stammered forth, “I shout to scare
 Yon raven from his dainty fare.”
 He looked—he knew the raven's prey,
 His own brave steed :—“Ah, gallant grey !
 For thee—for me, perchance—'twere well
 We ne'er had seen the Trosachs' dell.—
 Murdoch, move first, but silently ;
 Whistle or whoop, and thou shalt die !”—
 Jealous and sullen on they fared,
 Each silent, each upon his guard.

XXI.

Now wound the path its dizzy ledge
 Around a precipice's edge,
 When lo ! a wasted female form,
 Blighted by wrath of sun and storm,
 In tattered weeds and wild array,
 Stood on a cliff beside the way,

And glancing round her restless eye
 Upon the wood, the rock, the sky,
 Seemed nought to mark, yet all to spy.
 Her brow was wreathed with gaudy broom ;
 With gesture wild she waved a plume
 Of feathers, which the eagles fling
 To crag and cliff from dusky wing ;
 Such spoils her desperate step had sought
 Where scarce was footing for the goat.
 The tartan plaid she first descried,
 And shrieked till all the rocks replied ;
 As loud she laughed when near they drew,
 For then the Lowland garb she knew ;
 And then her hands she wildly wrung,
 And then she wept, and then she sung—
 She sung !—the voice, in better time,
 Perchance to harp or lute might chime ;
 And now, though strained and roughened, still
 Rung wildly sweet to dale and hill.

XXII.

Song.

They bid me sleep, they bid me pray,
 They say my brain is warped and wrung :
 I cannot sleep on Highland brae,
 I cannot pray in Highland tongue.
 But were I now where Allan glides,
 Or heard my native Devan's tides,*
 So sweetly would I rest, and pray
 That Heaven would close my wintry day !

'Twas thus my hair they bade me braid,
 They bade me to the church repair ;
 It was my bridal morn, they said,
 And my true love would meet me there.

* The Allan and the Devan are two beautiful streams—the latter celebrated in the poetry of Burns—which descend from the Perthshire hills into the great carse or plain of Stirling.

But woe betide the cruel guile,
That drowned in blood the morning smile !
And woe betide the fairy dream !
I only waked to sob and scream.

XXIII.

“Who is this maid? what means her lay?
She hovers o’er the hollow way,
And flutters wide her mantle grey,
As the lone heron spreads his wing,
By twilight, o’er a haunted spring.”—
“’Tis Blanche of Devan,” Murdoch said,
“A crazed and captive Lowland maid,
Ta’en on the morn she was a bride,
When Roderick forayed Devan-side.
The gay bridegroom resistance made,
And felt our Chief’s unconquered blade.
I marvel she is now at large,
But oft she ’scapes from Maudlin’s charge.—
Hence, brain-sick fool!”—He raised his bow:—
“Now, if thou strik’st her but one blow,
I’ll pitch thee from the cliff as far
As ever peasant pitched a bar.”—
“Thanks, champion, thanks!” the Maniac cried,
And pressed her to Fitz-James’s side.
“See the grey pennons I prepare,
To seek my true love through the air !
I will not lend that savage groom,
To break his fall, one downy plume !
No!—deep amid disjointed stones,
The wolves shall batten on his bones ;
And then shall his detested plaid,
By bush and brier in mid air staid,
Wave forth a banner fair and free,
Meet signal for their revelry.”—

XXIV.

“Hush thee, poor maiden, and be still!”—
“O! thou look’st kindly, and I will.—

Mine eye has dried and wasted been,
 But still it loves the Lincoln green ;
 And though mine ear is all unstrung,
 Still, still it loves the Lowland tongue.

" For O my sweet William was forester true,
 He stole poor Blanche's heart away !
 His coat it was all of the greenwood hue,
 And so blithely he trilled the Lowland lay ! "

" It was not that I meant to tell.....
 But thou art wise, and guessest well."
 Then, in a low and broken tone,
 And hurried note, the song went on.
 Still on the Clansman, fearfully,
 She fixed her apprehensive eye ;
 Then turned it on the Knight, and then
 Her look glanced wildly o'er the glen.

XXV.

" The toils are pitched, and the stakes are set—
 Ever sing merrily, merrily ;
 The bows they bend, and the knives they whet—
 Hunters live so cheerily.

" It was a stag, a stag of ten,*
 Bearing his branches sturdily ;
 He came stately down the glen—
 Ever sing hardily, hardily.

" It was there he met with a wounded doe,
 She was bleeding deathfully ;
 She warned him of the toils below,
 O so faithfully, faithfully !

" He had an eye, and he could heed—
 Ever sing warily, warily ;
 He had a foot, and he could speed—
 Hunters watch so narrowly."

* Having ten branches on his antlers.

XXVI.

Fitz-James's mind was passion-tossed,
When Ellen's hints and fears were lost;
But Murdoch's shout suspicion wrought,
And Blanche's song conviction brought.—
Not like a stag that spies the snare,
But lion of the hunt aware,
He waved at once his blade on high—
“Disclose thy treachery, or die!”
Forth at full speed the Clansman flew,
But in his race his bow he drew.
The shaft just grazed Fitz-James's crest,
And thrilled in Blanche's faded breast.—
Murdoch of Alpine! prove thy speed,
For ne'er had Alpine's son such need!
With heart of fire, and foot of wind,
The fierce avenger is behind!
Fate judges of the rapid strife—
The forfeit death—the prize is life!
Thy kindred ambush lies before,
Close couched upon the heathery moor;
Them couldst thou reach!—it may not be;
Thine ambushed kin thou ne'er shalt see,
The fiery Saxon gains on thee!—
Resistless speeds the deadly thrust,
As lightning strikes the pine to dust;
With foot and hand Fitz-James must strain,
Ere he can win his blade again.
Bent o'er the fall'n, with falcon eye,
He grimly smiled to see him die;
Then slower wended back his way,
Where the poor maiden bleeding lay.

XXVII.

She sate beneath the birchen-tree,
Her elbow resting on her knee;
She had withdrawn the fatal shaft,
And gazed on it, and feebly laughed;

Her wreath of broom and feathers grey,
Daggled with blood, beside her lay.
The Knight to stanch the life-stream tried,—
“Stranger, it is in vain!” she cried.
“This hour of death has given me more
Of reason’s power than years before;
For, as these ebbing veins decay,
My frenzied visions fade away.
A helpless, injured wretch I die,
And something tells me in thine eye
That thou wert mine avenger born.—
Seest thou this tress?—O! still I’ve worn
This little tress of yellow hair,
Through danger, frenzy, and despair!
It once was bright and clear as thine,
But blood and tears have dimmed its shine.
I will not tell thee when ’twas shred,
Nor from what guiltless victim’s head—
My brain would turn!—but it shall wave
Like plumage on thy helmet brave,
Till sun and wind shall bleach the stain,
And thou wilt bring it me again.—
I waver still!—O God! more bright
Let Reason beam her parting light!—
O! by thy knighthood’s honoured sign,
And for thy life preserved by mine,
When thou shalt see a darksome man,
Who boasts him Chief of Alpine’s clan,
With tartans broad and shadowy plume,
And hand of blood, and brow of gloom,
Be thy heart bold, thy weapon strong,
And wreak poor Blanche of Devan’s wrong!—
They watch for thee by pass and fell.....
Avoid the path.....O God!.....farewell!”

XXVIII.

A kindly heart had brave Fitz-James;
Fast poured his eye at pity’s claims,
And now, with mingled grief and ire,
He saw the murdered maid expire.

- “ God, in my need, be my relief,
As I wreak this on yonder Chief ! ”
A lock from Blanche’s tresses fair
He blended with her bridegroom’s hair ;
The mingled braid in blood he dyed,
And placed it on his bonnet-side :
- “ By Him whose word is truth ! I swear,
No other favour will I wear,
Till this sad token I imbrue
In the best blood of Roderick Dhu !—
But hark ! what means yon faint halloo ?
The chase is up ! but they shall know
The stag at bay’s a dangerous foe.”
Barred from the known but guarded way,
Through copse and cliffs Fitz-James must stray,
And oft must change his desperate track,
By stream and precipice turned back.
Heartless, fatigued, and faint, at length,
From lack of food and loss of strength,
He couched him in a thicket hoar,
And thought his toils and perils o’er :—
- “ Of all my rash adventures past,
This frantic feat must prove the last !
Who e’er so mad but might have guessed
That all this Highland hornets’ nest
Would muster up in swarms so soon
As e’er they heard of bands at Doune ?—
Like bloodhounds now they search me out—
Hark, to the whistle and the shout !
If farther through the wilds I go,
I only fall upon the foe ;
I’ll couch me here till evening grey,
Then darkling try my dangerous way.”

XXIX.

The shades of eve come slowly down,
The woods are wrapped in deeper brown,
The owl awakens from her dell,
The fox is heard upon the fell ;

Enough remains of glimmering light
 To guide the wanderer's steps aright ;
 Yet not enough from far to show
 His figure to the watchful foe.
 With cautious step, and ear awake,
 He climbs the crag and threads the brake ;
 And not the summer solstice, there,
 Tempered the midnight mountain air,
 But every breeze that swept the wold
 Benumbed his drenchèd limbs with cold.
 In dread, in danger, and alone,
 Famished and chilled, through ways unknown,
 Tangled and steep, he journeyed on ;
 Till, as a rock's huge point he turned,
 A watch-fire close before him burned.

XXX.

Beside its embers red and clear
 Basked, in his plaid, a mountaineer ;
 And up he sprung with sword in hand,—
 "Thy name and purpose ! Saxon, stand !"—
 "A stranger."—"What dost thou require ?"—
 "Rest and a guide, and food and fire.
 My life's beset, my path is lost,
 The gale has chilled my limbs with frost."—
 "Art thou a friend to Roderick ?"—"No."—
 "Thou dar'st not call thyself a foe ?"—
 "I dare ! to him and all the band
 He brings to aid his murderous hand."—
 "Bold words !—but, though the beast of game
 The privilege of chase may claim,
 Though space and law the stag we lend
 Ere hound we slip, or bow we bend,
 Who ever recked where, how, or when
 The prowling fox was trapped or slain ? *
 Thus treacherous scouts—yet sure they lie,
 Who say thou cam'st a secret spy !"—
 "They do, by Heaven !—Come Roderick Dhu,
 And of his clan the boldest two,

* See Note 46. and at xol

And let me but till morning rest,
I write the falsehood on their crest."—
"If by the blaze I mark aright,
Thou bear'st the belt and spur of knight."—
"Then by these tokens mayst thou know,
Each proud oppressor's mortal foe."—
"Enough, enough! sit down and share
A soldier's couch, a soldier's fare."

XXXI.

He gave him of his Highland cheer,
The hardened flesh of mountain deer ; *
Dry fuel on the fire he laid,
And bade the Saxon share his plaid.
He tended him like welcome guest,
Then thus his further speech addressed :—
"Stranger, I am to Roderick Dhu
A clansman born, a kinsman true ;
Each word against his honour spoke,
Demands of me avenging stroke.
Yet more : upon thy fate, 'tis said,
A mighty augury is laid ;
It rests with me to wind my horn—
Thou art with numbers overborne ;
It rests with me, here, brand to brand,
Worn as thou art, to bid thee stand :
But not for clan, nor kindred's cause,
Will I depart from honour's laws.
To assail a wearied man were shame,
And stranger is a holy name ;
Guidance and rest, and food and fire,
In vain he never must require.
Then rest thee here till dawn of day ;
Myself will guide thee on the way,
O'er stock and stone, through watch and ward,
Till past Clan-Alpine's outmost guard,
As far as Coilantogle's ford ;
From thence thy warrant is thy sword."—

* See Note 47.

"I take thy courtesy, by Heaven !

As freely as 'tis nobly given."—

"Well, rest thee ; for the bittern's cry
Sings us the lake's wild lullaby."

With that he shook the gathered heath,

And spread his plaid upon the wreath ;

And the brave foemen, side by side,

Lay peaceful down, like brothers tried,

And slept until the dawning beam

Purpled the mountain and the stream.

CANTO FIFTH.

THE COMBAT.

I.

FAIR as the earliest beam of eastern light,

When first, by the bewildered pilgrim spied,

It smiles upon the dreary brow of night,

And silvers o'er the torrent's foaming tide,

And lights the fearful path on mountain side,—

Fair as that beam, although the fairest far,

Giving to horror grace, to danger pride,

Shine martial Faith, and Courtesy's bright star,

Through all the wreckful storms that cloud the brow of War.

II.

That early beam, so fair and sheen,

Was twinkling through the hazel screen,

When, rousing at its glimmer red,

The warriors left their lowly bed,

Looked out upon the dappled sky,

Muttered their soldier matins by,

And then awaked their fire, to steal,

As short and rude, their soldier meal.

That o'er, the Gael* around him threw

His graceful plaid of varied hue,

* The Scottish Highlander calls himself Gael, or Gaul, and terms the Lowlanders Sassenach, or Saxons.

And, true to promise, led the way,
By thicket green and mountain grey.
A wildering path!—they winded now
Along the precipice's brow,
Commanding the rich scenes beneath,
The windings of the Forth and Teith,
And all the vales between that lie,
Till Stirling's turrets melt in sky ;
Then, sunk in copse, their farthest glance
Gained not the length of horseman's lance.
'Twas oft so steep, the foot was fain
Assistance from the hand to gain ;
So tangled oft that, bursting through,
Each hawthorn shed her showers of dew—
That diamond dew, so pure and clear,
It rivals all but Beauty's tear !

III.

At length they came where, stern and steep,
The hill sinks down upon the deep.
Here Vennachar in silver flows,
There, ridge on ridge, Benledi rose ;
Ever the hollow path twined on,
Beneath steep bank and threatening stone :
A hundred men might hold the post
With hardihood against a host.
The rugged mountain's scanty cloak
Was dwarfish shrubs of birch and oak,
With shingles bare, and cliffs between,
And patches bright of bracken green,
And heather black, that waved so high,
It held the copse in rivalry.
But where the lake slept deep and still,
Dank osiers fringed the swamp and hill ;
And oft both path and hill were torn,
Where wintry torrent down had borne,
And heaped upon the cumbered land
Its wreck of gravel, rocks, and sand.
So toilsome was the road to trace,
The guide, abating of his pace,

Led slowly through the pass's jaws,
 And asked Fitz-James, by what strange cause
 He sought these wilds? traversed by few,
 Without a pass from Roderick Dhu.

THE PASS, HILL ST.
 IV. 11

- "Brave Gael, my pass, in danger tried,
 Hangs in my belt and by my side;
 Yet, sooth to tell," the Saxon said,
 "I dreamed not now to claim its aid.
 When here, but three days since, I came,
 Bewildered in pursuit of game,
 All seemed as peaceful and as still
 As the mist slumbering on yon hill;
 Thy dangerous Chief was then afar,
 Nor soon expected back from war.
 Thus said, at least, my mountain guide,
 Though deep, perchance, the villain lied."—
 "Yet why a second venture try?"—
 "A warrior thou, and ask me why!—
 Moves our free course by such fixed cause,
 As gives the poor mechanic laws?
 Enough, I sought to drive away
 The lazy hours of peaceful day;
 Slight cause will then suffice to guide
 A knight's free footsteps far and wide—
 A falcon flown, a greyhound strayed,
 The merry glance of mountain maid;
 Or, if a path be dangerous known,
 The danger's self is lure alone."—

THE PASS, HILL ST.
 V. 11

- "Thy secret keep, I urge thee not;
 Yet, ere again ye sought this spot,
 Say, heard ye nought of Lowland war
 Against Clan-Alpine raised by Mar?"—
 "No, by my word;—of bands prepared
 To guard King James's sports I heard;
 Nor doubt I aught, but, when they hear
 This muster of the mountaineer,

Their pennons will abroad be flung,
Which else in Doune had peaceful hung."—
"Free be they flung! for we were loath
Their silken folds should feast the moth.
Free be they flung!—as free shall wave
Clan-Alpine's Pine in banner brave.
But, Stranger, peaceful since you came,
Bewildered in the mountain game,
Whence the bold boast by which you show
Vich-Alpine's vowed and mortal foe?"—
"Warrior, but yester-morn I knew
Nought of thy Chieftain, Roderick Dhu,
Save as an outlawed, desperate man,
The chief of a rebellious clan,
Who, in the Regent's court and sight,
With ruffian dagger stabbed a knight:
Yet this alone might from his part
Sever each true and loyal heart."

VI.

Wrothful at such arraignment foul,
Dark lowered the Clansman's sable scowl.
A space he paused, then sternly said,—
"And heard'st thou why he drew his blade?
Heard'st thou that shameful word and blow
Brought Roderick's vengeance on his foe?
What recked the Chieftain if he stood
On Highland heath, or Holy-Rood?
He rights such wrong where it is given,
If it were in the court of heaven."—
"Still was it outrage;—yet, 'tis true,
Not then claimed sovereignty his due;
While Albany, with feeble hand,
Held borrowed truncheon of command,*
The young King, mewed in Stirling tower,
Was stranger to respect and power.
But then, thy Chieftain's robber life!—
Winning mean prey by causeless strife,

* See Note 48.

Wrenching from ruined Lowland swain
His herds and harvest reared in vain—
Methinks a soul, like thine, should scorn
The spoils from such foul foray borne.”

VII.

The Gael beheld him grim the while,
And answered with disdainful smile,—
“Saxon, from yonder mountain high,
I marked thee send delighted eye,
Far to the south and east, where lay,
Extended in succession gay,
Deep waving fields and pastures green,
With gentle slopes and groves between :
These fertile plains, that softened vale,
Were once the birthright of the Gael ;
The stranger came with iron hand,
And from our fathers reft the land.
Where dwell we now? See, rudely swell
Crag over crag, and fell o’er fell.
Ask we this savage hill we tread,
For fattened steer or household bread ;
Ask we for flocks these shingles dry,
And well the mountain might reply,—
‘To you, as to your sires of yore,
Belong the target and claymore !
I give you shelter in my breast ;
Your own good blades must win the rest.’
Pent in this fortress of the North,
Think’st thou we will not sally forth,
To spoil the spoiler as we may,
And from the robber rend the prey ?
Ay, by my soul !—While on yon plain
The Saxon rears one shock of grain ;
While, of ten thousand herds, there strays
But one along yon river’s maze—
The Gael, of plain and river heir,*
Shall, with strong hand, redeem his share.

* See Note 49.

Where live the mountain chiefs who hold,
That plundering Lowland field and fold
Is aught but retribution true?—
Seek other cause 'gainst Roderick Dhu."

VIII.

Answered Fitz-James,—“ And, if I sought,
Think'st thou no other could be brought?
What deem ye of my path waylaid,
My life given o'er to ambuscade? ”—
“ As of a meed to rashness due :
Hadst thou sent warning fair and true—
I seek my hound, or falcon strayed,
I seek, good faith, a Highland maid—
Free hadst thou been to come and go ;
But secret path marks secret foe.
Nor yet, for this, even as a spy,
Hadst thou, unheard, been doomed to die,
Save to fulfil an augury.”—
“ Well, let it pass ; nor will I now
Fresh cause of enmity avow,
To chafe thy mood and cloud thy brow :
Enough, I am by promise tied
To match me with this man of pride.
Twice have I sought Clan-Alpine's glen
In peace ; but when I come agen,
I come with banner, brand, and bow,
As leader seeks his mortal foe.
For love-lorn swain, in lady's bower,
Ne'er panted for the appointed hour,
As I, until before me stand
This rebel Chieftain and his band.”—

IX.

“ Have, then, thy wish ! ”—He whistled shrill,
And he was answered from the hill ;
Wild as the scream of the curlew,
From crag to crag the signal flew.
Instant, through copse and heath, arose
Bonnets and spears and bended bows ;

On right, on left, above, below,
Sprung up at once the lurking foe ;
From shingles grey their lances start,
The bracken bush sends forth the dart,
The rushes and the willow-wand
Are bristling into axe and brand,
And every tuft of broom gives life
To plaided warrior armed for strife.
That whistle garrisoned the glen
At once with full five hundred men,
As if the yawning hill to heaven
A subterranean host had given.
Watching their leader's beck and will,
All silent there they stood, and still.
Like the loose crags whose threatening mass
Lay tottering o'er the hollow pass,
As if an infant's touch could urge
Their headlong passage down the verge,
With step and weapon forward flung,
Upon the mountain side they hung.
The Mountaineer cast glance of pride
Along Benledi's living side ;
Then fixed his eye and sable brow
Full on Fitz-James—"How say'st thou now ?
These are Clan-Alpine's warriors true ;
And, Saxon,—I am Roderick Dhu !"

X.

Fitz-James was brave : though to his heart
The life-blood thrilled with sudden start,
He manned himself with dauntless air,
Returned the Chief his haughty stare,
His back against a rock he bore,
And firmly placed his foot before :—
"Come one, come all ! this rock shall fly
From its firm base as soon as I !"
Sir Roderick marked, and in his eyes
Respect was mingled with surprise,
And the stern joy which warriors feel
In foemen worthy of their steel.

Short space he stood, then waved his hand—
Down sunk the disappearing band ;
Each warrior vanished where he stood,
In broom or bracken, heath or wood ;
Sunk brand and spear and bended bow,
In osiers pale and copses low :
It seemed as if their mother Earth
Had swallowed up her warlike birth:
The wind's last breath had tossed in air
Pennon, and plaid, and plumage fair,—
The next but swept a lone hill-side,
Where heath and fern were waving wide ;
The sun's last glance was glinted back
From spear and glaive, from targe and jack,—
The next, all unreflected, shone
On bracken green, and cold grey stone.

XI.

Fitz-James looked round, yet scarce believed
The witness that his sight received ;
Such apparition well might seem
Delusion of a dreadful dream.
Sir Roderick in suspense he eyed,
And to his look the Chief replied :
“ Fear nought—nay, that I need not say—
But—doubt not aught from mine array.
Thou art my guest ;—I pledged my word
As far as Coilantogle ford ;
Nor would I call a clansman's brand
For aid against one valiant hand,
Though on our strife lay every vale
Rent by the Saxon from the Gael.
So move we on ;—I only meant
To show the reed on which you leant,
Deeming this path you might pursue
Without a pass from Roderick Dhu.”*
They moved :—I said Fitz-James was brave,
As ever knight that belted glaive ;

* See Note 50.

Yet dare not say that now his blood
Kept on its wont and tempered flood,
As, following Roderick's stride, he drew
That seeming lonesome pathway through,
Which yet, by fearful proof, was rife
With lances that, to take his life,
Waited but signal from a guide
So late dishonoured and defied.
Ever, by stealth, his eye sought round
The vanished guardians of the ground ;
And still, from copse and heather deep,
Fancy saw spear and broadsword peep,
And in the plover's shrilly strain
The signal whistle heard again.
Nor breathed he free till far behind
The pass was left ; for then they wind
Along a wide and level green,
Where neither tree nor tuft was seen,
Nor rush, nor bush of broom was near,
To hide a bonnet or a spear.

XII.

The Chief in silence strode before,
And reached that torrent's sounding shore,
Which, daughter of three mighty lakes,
From Vennachar in silver breaks,
Sweeps through the plain, and ceaseless mines
On Bochastle the mouldering lines,
Where Rome, the Empress of the world,
Of yore her eagle wings unfurled.*
And here his course the Chieftain staid,
Threw down his target and his plaid,
And to the Lowland warrior said :—
“ Bold Saxon ! to his promise just,
Vich-Alpine has discharged his trust.
This murderous Chief, this ruthless man,
This head of a rebellious clan,
Hath led thee safe, through watch and ward,
Far past Clan-Alpine's outmost guard.

* See Note 51.

Now, man to man, and steel to steel,
 A Chieftain's vengeance thou shalt feel.
 See, here all vantageless I stand,
 Armed, like thyself, with single brand,*
 For this is Coilantogle ford,
 And thou must keep thee with thy sword."

XIII.

The Saxon paused :—"I ne'er delayed
 When foeman bade me draw my blade ;
 Nay, more, brave Chief, I vowed thy death :
 Yet sure thy fair and generous faith,
 And my deep debt for life preserved,
 A better meed have well deserved ;—
 Can nought but blood our feud atone ?
 Are there no means ?"—"No, Stranger, none !
 And hear—to fire thy flagging zeal—
 The Saxon cause rests on thy steel ;
 For thus spoke Fate, by prophet bred
 Between the living and the dead :
 'Who spills the foremost foeman's life,
 His party conquers in the strife.'"—
 "Then, by my word," the Saxon said,
 "The riddle is already read :
 Seek yonder brake beneath the cliff,—
 There lies Red Murdoch, stark and stiff.
 Thus Fate has solved her prophecy ;
 Then yield to Fate, and not to me.
 To James, at Stirling, let us go,
 When, if thou wilt be still his foe,
 Or if the King shall not agree
 To grant thee grace and favour free,
 I plight mine honour, oath, and word,
 That, to thy native strengths restored,
 With each advantage shalt thou stand,
 That aids thee now to guard thy land."

XIV.

Dark lightning flashed from Roderick's eye :—
 "Soars thy presumption then so high,

* See Note 52.

Because a wretched kern ye slew,
 Homage to name to Roderick Dhu?
 He yields not, he, to man nor Fate!
 Thou add'st but fuel to my hate:—
 My clansman's blood demands revenge.—
 Not yet prepared?—By Heaven, I change
 My thought, and hold thy valour light
 As that of some vain carpet-knight,
 Who ill deserved my courteous care,
 And whose best boast is but to wear
 A braid of his fair lady's hair.”—
 “I thank thee, Roderick, for the word!
 It nerves my heart, it steels my sword;
 For I have sworn this braid to stain
 In the best blood that warms thy vein.
 Now, truce, farewell! and, ruth, begone!—
 Yet think not that by thee alone,
 Proud Chief! can courtesy be shown.
 Though not from copse, or heath, or cairn,
 Start at my whistle clansmen stern,
 Of this small horn one feeble blast
 Would fearful odds against thee cast.
 But fear not—doubt not—which thou wilt—
 We try this quarrel hilt to hilt.”
 Then each at once his falchion drew,
 Each on the ground his scabbard threw,
 Each looked to sun, and stream, and plain,
 As what they ne'er might see again;
 Then, foot, and point, and eye opposed,
 In dubious strife they darkly closed.

XV.

Ill fared it then with Roderick Dhu
 That on the field his targe he threw,
 Whose brazen studs and tough bull-hide
 Had death so often dashed aside;
 For, trained abroad his arms to wield,
 Fitz-James's blade was sword and shield.*

* See Note 53.

He practised every pass and ward,
To thrust, to strike, to feint, to guard;
While less expert, though stronger far,
The Gael maintained unequal war.
Three times in closing strife they stood,
And thrice the Saxon blade drank blood—
No stinted draught, no scanty tide,
The gushing flood the tartans dyed.
Fierce Roderick felt the fatal drain,
And showered his blows like wintry rain;
And, as firm rock, or castle-roof,
Against the winter shower is proof,
The foe, invulnerable still,
Foiled his wild rage by steady skill;
Till, at advantage ta'en, his brand
Forced Roderick's weapon from his hand,
And, backward borne upon the lea,
Brought the proud Chieftain to his knee.

XVI.

"Now, yield thee, or by Him who made
The world, thy heart's blood dyes my blade!"—
"Thy threats, thy mercy, I defy!
Let recreant yield who fears to die."—
Like adder darting from his coil,
Like wolf that dashes through the toil,
Like mountain-cat who guards her young,
Full at Fitz-James's throat he sprung;
Received, but recked not of a wound,
And locked his arms his foeman round.—
Now, gallant Saxon, hold thine own!
No maiden's hand is round thee thrown;
That desperate grasp thy frame might feel,
Through bars of brass and triple steel!—
They tug, they strain!—down, down they go,
The Gael above, Fitz-James below!
The Chieftain's grip his throat compressed,
His knee was planted in his breast;
His clotted locks he backward threw,
Across his brow his hand he drew,

From blood and mist to clear his sight,
Then gleamed aloft his dagger bright !—
But hate and fury ill supplied
The stream of life's exhausted tide,
And all too late the advantage came,
To turn the odds of deadly game ;
For, while the dagger gleamed on high,
Reeled soul and sense, reeled brain and eye.
Down came the blow ! but in the heath
The erring blade found bloodless sheath.
The struggling foe may now unclasp
The fainting Chief's relaxing grasp ;
Unwounded from the dreadful close,
But breathless all, Fitz-James arose.

XVII.

He faltered thanks to Heaven for life,
Redeemed, unhoped, from desperate strife ;
Next on his foe his look he cast,
Whose every gasp appeared his last.
In Roderick's gore he dipped the braid,—
“ Poor Blanche ! thy wrongs are dearly paid :
Yet with thy foe must die, or live,
The praise that Faith and Valour give.”
With that he blew a bugle-note,
Undid the collar from his throat,
Unbonneted, and by the wave
Sate down his brow and hands to lave.
Then faint afar are heard the feet
Of rushing steeds in gallop fleet ;
The sounds increase, and now are seen
Four mounted squires in Lincoln green ;
Two who bear lance, and two who lead,
By loosened rein, a saddled steed ;
Each onward held his headlong course,
And by Fitz-James reined up his horse,—
With wonder viewed the bloody spot.
“ Exclaim not, gallants ! question not.
You, Herbert and Luffness, alight,
And bind the wounds of yonder knight.

Let the gray palfrey bear his weight
 We destined for a fairer freight,
 And bring him on to Stirling straight ;
 I will before at better speed,
 To seek fresh horse and fitting weed.
 The sun rides high ;—I must be boune .
 To see the archer-game at noon ;
 But lightly Bayard clears the lea,—
 De Vaux and Herries, follow me.—

XVIII.

“Stand, Bayard, stand !”—the steed obeyed,
 With arching neck and bended head,
 And glancing eye and quivering ear,
 As if he loved his lord to hear.
 No foot Fitz-James in stirrup staid,
 No grasp upon the saddle laid,
 But wreathed his left hand in the mane,
 And lightly bounded from the plain,
 Turned on the horse his armed heel,
 And stirred his courage with the steel.
 Bounded the fiery steed in air,
 The rider sat erect and fair,
 Then, like a bolt from steel crossbow
 Forth launched, along the plain they go.
 They dashed that rapid torrent through,
 And up Carhonic’s hill they flew ;
 Still at the gallop pricked the Knight,
 His merry-men followed as they might,
 Along thy banks, swift Teith ! they ride,
 And in the race they mocked thy tide ;
 Torry and Lendrick now are past,
 And Deanstown lies behind them cast ;
 They rise, the bannered towers of Doune,*
 They sink in distant woodland soon ;
 Blair-Drummond sees the hoofs strike fire,
 They sweep like breeze through Ochtertyre ;

* The ruins of Doune Castle, formerly the residence of the Earls of Menteith, are situated at the confluence of the Ardoch and the Teith.

They mark just glance and disappear
 The lofty brow of ancient Kier ;
 They bathe their coursers' sweltering sides,
 Dark Forth ! amid thy sluggish tides,
 And on the opposing shore take ground
 With splash, with scramble, and with bound.
 Right-hand they leave thy cliffs, Craig-Forth !
 And soon the bulwark of the North,
 Grey Stirling, with her towers and town,
 Upon their fleet career looked down.

XIX.

As up the flinty path they strained,
 Sudden his steed the leader reined ;
 A signal to his squire he flung,
 Who instant to his stirrup sprung :—
 “ Seest thou, De Vaux, yon woodsman grey,
 Who townward holds the rocky way,
 Of stature tall and poor array ?
 Mark'st thou the firm yet active stride
 With which he scales the mountain-side ?
 Know'st thou from whence he comes, or whom ? ”—
 “ No, by my word ;—a burly groom
 He seems, who in the field or chase
 A baron's train would nobly grace.”—
 “ Out, out, De Vaux ! can fear supply,
 And jealousy, no sharper eye ?
 Afar, ere to the hill he drew,
 That stately form and step I knew ;
 Like form in Scotland is not seen,
 Treads not such step on Scottish green.
 'Tis James of Douglas, by Saint Serle !
 The uncle of the banished Earl.
 Away, away, to court, to show
 The near approach of dreaded foe :
 The King must stand upon his guard ;
 Douglas and he must meet prepared.”
 Then right-hand wheeled their steeds, and straight
 They won the Castle's postern gate.

XX.

The Douglas, who had bent his way
From Cambuskenneth's abbey grey,
Now, as he climbed the rocky shelf,
Held sad communion with himself :—
“ Yes ! all is true my fears could frame :
A prisoner lies the noble Græme ;
And fiery Roderick soon will feel
The vengeance of the royal steel.
I, only I, can ward their fate,—
God grant the ransom come not late !
The Abbess hath her promise given
My child shall be the bride of Heaven ;—
Be pardoned one repining tear !
For He, who gave her, knows how dear,
How excellent—but that is by,
And now my business is—to die.
Ye towers ! within whose circuit dread
A Douglas by his sovereign bled ;
And thou, O sad and fatal mound ! *
That oft hast heard the death-axe sound,
As on the noblest of the land
Fell the stern headsman's bloody hand,—
The dungeon, block, and nameless tomb
Prepare—for Douglas seeks his doom !
But hark ! what blithe and jolly peal
Makes the Franciscan steeple reel ?
And see ! upon the crowded street,
In motley groups what masquers meet !
Banner and pageant, pipe and drum,
And merry morrice-dancers come.
I guess, by all this quaint array,
The burghers hold their sports to-day. †
James will be there ;—he loves such show,
Where the good yeoman bends his bow,
And the tough wrestler foils his foe,

* An eminence on the north-east of the castle, where state criminals were executed. Stirling was often polluted with noble blood.

† See Note 54.

As well as where, in proud career,
 The highborn tilter shivers spear.
 I'll follow to the Castle-park,
 And play my prize ;—King James shall mark
 If age has tamed these sinews stark,
 Whose force so oft, in happier days,
 His boyish wonder loved to praise."

XXI.

The Castle gates were open flung,
 The quivering drawbridge rocked and rung,
 And echoed loud the flinty street
 Beneath the coursers' clattering feet,
 As slowly down the steep descent
 Fair Scotland's King and nobles went,
 While all along the crowded way
 Was jubilee and loud huzza.
 And ever James was bending low
 To his white jennet's saddle-bow,
 Doffing his cap to city dame,
 Who smiled and blushed for pride and shame :
 And well the simperer might be vain,—
 He chose the fairest of the train.
 Gravely he greets each city sire,
 Commends each pageant's quaint attire,
 Gives to the dancers thanks aloud,
 And smiles and nods upon the crowd,
 Who rend the heavens with their acclaims,
 "Long live the Commons' King, King James !"
 Behind the King thronged peer and knight,
 And noble dame and damsel bright,
 Whose fiery steeds ill-brooked the stay
 Of the steep street and crowded way.
 But in the train you might discern
 Dark lowering brow and visage stern :
 There nobles mourned their pride restrained,
 And the mean burghers' joys disclaimed ;
 And chiefs, who, hostage for their clan,
 Were each from home a banished man,

There thought upon their own grey tower,
Their waving woods, their feudal power,
And deemed themselves a shameful part
Of pageant which they cursed in heart.

XXII.

Now, in the Castle-park, drew out
Their chequered bands the joyous rout.
There morricers, with bell at heel
And blade in hand, their mazes wheel;
But chief, beside the butts, there stand
Bold Robin Hood * and all his band—
Friar Tuck with quarterstaff and cowl,
Old Scathelocke with his surly scowl,
Maid Marian, fair as ivory bone,
Scarlet, and Mutch, and Little John;
Their bugles challenge all that will
In archery to prove their skill.
The Douglas bent a bow of might,—
His first shaft centred in the white;
And when in turn he shot again,
His second split the first in twain.
From the King's hand must Douglas take
A silver dart, the archer's stake.
Fondly he watched, with watery eye,
Some answering glance of sympathy:
No kind emotion made reply!
Indifferent as to archer wight,
The Monarch gave the arrow bright.†

XXIII.

Now, clear the ring! for, hand to hand,
The manly wrestlers take their stand.
Two o'er the rest superior rose,
And proud demanded mightier foes,
Nor called in vain; for Douglas came.—
For life is Hugh of Larbert lame,

* See Note 55.

† The Douglas of the poem is an imaginary person, a supposed uncle of the Earl of Angus.

Scarce better John of Alloa's fare,
Whom senseless home his comrades bear.
Prize of the wrestling match, the King
To Douglas gave a golden ring,*
While coldly glanced his eye of blue,
As frozen drop of wintry dew.
Douglas would speak, but in his breast
His struggling soul his words suppressed ;
Indignant then he turned him where
Their arms the brawny yeomen bare,
To hurl the massive bar in air.
When each his utmost strength had shown,
The Douglas rent an earth-fast stone
From its deep bed, then heaved it high,
And sent the fragment through the sky
A rood beyond the farthest mark ;—
And still in Stirling's royal park,
The grey-haired sires, who know the past,
To strangers point the Douglas-cast,
And moralize on the decay
Of Scottish strength in modern day.

XXIV.

The vale with loud applauses rang,
The Ladies' Rock sent back the clang.
The King, with look unmoved, bestowed
A purse well filled with pieces broad.
Indignant smiled the Douglas proud,
And threw the gold among the crowd,
Who now, with anxious wonder, scan,
And sharper glance, the dark grey man ;
Till whispers rose among the throng,
That heart so free, and hand so strong,
Must to the Douglas blood belong :
The old men marked, and shook the head,
To see his hair with silver spread,
And winked aside, and told each son
Of feats upon the English done,

* See Note 56.

Ere Douglas of the stalwart hand
Was exiled from his native land.
The women praised his stately form,
Though wrecked by many a winter's storm ;
The youth with awe and wonder saw
His strength surpassing Nature's law.
Thus judged, as is their wont, the crowd,
Till murmur rose to clamours loud.
But not a glance from that proud ring
Of peers who circled round the King,
With Douglas held communion kind,
Or called the banished man to mind ;
No, not from those who, at the chase,
Once held his side the honoured place,
Begirt his board, and, in the field,
Found safety underneath his shield :
For he, whom royal eyes disown,
When was his form to courtiers known ?

XXV.

The Monarch saw the gambols flag,
And bade let loose a gallant stag,
Whose pride, the holiday to crown,
Two favourite greyhounds should pull down,
That venison free, and Bordeaux wine,
Might serve the archery to dine.
But Lufra—whom from Douglas' side,
Nor bribe nor threat could e'er divide,
The fleetest hound in all the North—
Brave Lufra saw, and darted forth.
She left the royal hounds midway,
And dashing on the antlered prey,
Sunk her sharp muzzle in his flank,
And deep the flowing life-blood drank.
The King's stout huntsman saw the sport
By strange intruder broken short,
Came up, and, with his leash unbound,
In anger struck the noble hound.—
The Douglas had endured, that morn,
The King's cold look, the nobles' scorn,

And last, and worst to spirit proud,
 Had borne the pity of the crowd.
 But Lufra had been fondly bred,
 To share his board, to watch his bed,
 And oft would Ellen, Lufra's neck,
 In maiden glee, with garlands deck;
 They were such playmates that, with name
 Of Lufra, Ellen's image came:
 His stifled wrath is brimming high,
 In darkened brow and flashing eye;—
 As waves before the bark divide,
 The crowd gave way before his stride;
 Needs but a buffet and no more,
 The groom lies senseless in his gore.
 Such blow no other hand could deal,
 Though gauntleted in glove of steel.

XXVI.

Then clamoured loud the royal train,
 And brandished swords and staves amain.
 But stern the Baron's warning—"Back!
 Back, on your lives, ye menial pack!
 Beware the Douglas.—Yes! behold,
 King James, the Douglas, doomed of old,
 And vainly sought for near and far,
 A victim to atone the war,
 A willing victim, now attends,
 Nor craves thy grace but for his friends."—
 "Thus is my clemency repaid?
 Presumptuous lord!" the Monarch said;
 "Of thy misproud ambitious clan,
 Thou, James of Bothwell, wert the man,
 The only man, in whom a foe
 My woman-mercy would not know.
 But shall a Monarch's presence brook
 Injurious blow and haughty look?—
 What ho! the Captain of our Guard!
 Give the offender fitting ward.—
 Break off the sports!"—for tumult rose,
 And yeomen 'gan to bend their bows,—

“Break off the sports!” he said, and frowned,
“And bid our horsemen clear the ground.”

XXVII.

Then uproar wild and misarray
Marred the fair form of festal day.
The horsemen pricked among the crowd,
Repelled by threats and insult loud;
To earth are borne the old and weak,
The timorous fly, the women shriek;
With flint, with shaft, with staff, with bar,
The hardier urge tumultuous war.
At once round Douglas darkly sweep
The royal spears in circle deep,
And slowly scale the pathway steep;
While on the rear in thunder pour
The rabble with disordered roar.
With grief the noble Douglas saw
The commons rise against the law,
And to the leading soldier said,—
Sir John of Hyndford! ’twas my blade
That knighthood on thy shoulder laid;
For that good deed, permit me then
A word with these misguided men.—

XXVIII.

“Hear, gentle friends! ere yet for me
Ye break the bands of fealty.
My life, my honour, and my cause,
I tender free to Scotland’s laws.
Are these so weak as must require
The aid of your misguided ire?
Or, if I suffer causeless wrong,
Is then my selfish rage so strong,
My sense of public weal so low,
That, for mean vengeance on a foe,
Those cords of love I should unbind
Which knit my country and my kind?
Oh no! Believe, in yonder tower,
It will not soothe my captive hour

To know those spears our foes should dread,
For me in kindred gore are red ;
To know, in fruitless brawl begun,
For me that mother wails her son,
For me that widow's mate expires,
For me that orphans weep their sires,
That patriots mourn insulted laws,
And curse the Douglas for the cause.
O let your patience ward such ill,
And keep your right to love me still !”

XXIX.

The crowd's wild fury sunk again
In tears, as tempests melt in rain.
With lifted hands and eyes, they prayed
For blessings on his generous head,
Who for his country felt alone,
And prized her blood beyond his own.
Old men, upon the verge of life,
Blessed him who stayed the civil strife ;
And mothers held their babes on high,
The self-devoted Chief to spy,
Triumphant over wrong and ire,
To whom the prattlers owed a sire.
Even the rough soldier's heart was moved ;
As if behind some bier beloved,
With trailing arms and drooping head,
The Douglas up the hill he led,
And at the Castle's battled verge,
With sighs, resigned his honoured charge.

XXX.

The offended Monarch rode apart,
With bitter thought and swelling heart,
And would not now vouchsafe again
Through Stirling streets to lead his train.
“ O Lennox, who would wish to rule
This changeling crowd, this common fool ?
Hear'st thou,” he said, “ the loud acclaim,
With which they shout the Douglas' name ?

With like acclaim, the vulgar throat
Strained for King James their morning note ;
With like acclaim they hailed the day
When first I broke the Douglas' sway ;
And like acclaim would Douglas greet,
If he could hurl me from my seat.
Who o'er the herd would wish to reign,
Fantastic, fickle, fierce, and vain !
Vain as the leaf upon the stream,
And fickle as a changeful dream ;
Fantastic as a woman's mood,
And fierce as Frenzy's fevered blood.
Thou many-headed monster-thing,
O who would wish to be thy king !—

XXXI.

“ But soft ! what messenger of speed
Spurs hitherward his panting steed ?
I guess his cognizance afar—
What from our cousin, John of Mar ? ”—
“ He prays, my liege, your sports keep bound
Within the safe and guarded ground :
For some foul purpose yet unknown,—
Most sure for evil to the throne,—
The outlawed Chieftain, Roderick Dhu,
Has summoned his rebellious crew ;
'Tis said, in James of Bothwell's aid
These loose banditti stand arrayed.
The Earl of Mar, this morn, from Doune,
To break their muster marched, and soon
Your Grace will hear of battle fought ;
But earnestly the Earl besought,
Till for such danger he provide,
With scanty train you will not ride.”—

XXXII.

“ Thou warn'st me I have done amiss,—
I should have earlier looked to this :
I lost it in this bustling day.—
Retrace with speed thy former way ;

Spare not for spoiling of thy steed,
 The best of mine shall be thy meed.
 Say to our faithful Lord of Mar,
 We do forbid the intended war:
 Roderick, this morn, in single fight,
 Was made our prisoner by a knight;
 And Douglas hath himself and cause
 Submitted to our kingdom's laws.
 The tidings of their leaders lost
 Will soon dissolve the mountain host;
 Nor would we that the vulgar feel,
 For their Chief's crimes, avenging steel.
 Bear Mar our message, Braco, fly."—
 He turned his steed,—“My Liege, I hie;
 Yet, ere I cross this lily lawn,
 I fear the broadswords will be drawn.”
 The turf the flying courser spurned,
 And to his towers the King returned.

XXXIII.

Ill with King James's mood that day
 Suited gay feast and minstrel lay;
 Soon were dismissed the courtly throng,
 And soon cut short the festal song.
 Nor less upon the saddened town
 The evening sunk in sorrow down.
 The burghers spoke of civil jar,
 Of rumoured feuds and mountain war,
 Of Moray, Mar, and Roderick Dhu,
 All up in arms:—the Douglas too,
 They mourned him pent within the hold,
 “Where stout Earl William was of old—”^{*}
 And there his word the speaker staid,
 And finger on his lip he laid,
 Or pointed to his dagger blade.
 But jaded horsemen, from the west,
 At evening to the Castle pressed;
 And busy talkers said they bore
 Tidings of fight on Katrine's shore—

* Stabbed by James II. in Stirling Castle.

At noon the deadly fray begun,
And lasted till the set of sun.
Thus giddy rumour shook the town,
Till closed the Night her pennons brown.

CANTO SIXTH.

THE GUARD-ROOM.

I.

THE sun, awakening, through the smoky air
Of the dark city casts a sullen glance,
Rousing each caitiff to his task of care,
Of sinful man the sad inheritance ;
Summoning revellers from the lagging dance ;
Scaring the prowling robber to his den ;
Gilding on battled tower the warder's lance ;
And warning student pale to leave his pen,
And yield his drowsy eyes to the kind nurse of men.

What various scenes, and, O ! what scenes of woe,
Are witnessed by that red and struggling beam !
The fevered patient, from his pallet low,
Through crowded hospital beholds it stream ;
The ruined maiden trembles at its gleam ;
The debtor wakes to thought of gyve and jail ;
The love-lorn wretch starts from tormenting dream ;
The wakeful mother, by the glimmering pale,
Trims her sick infant's couch, and soothes his feeble wail. ; וְהַיְחָלָה אִמּוֹתָם

II.

At dawn the towers of Stirling rang
With soldier-step and weapon-clang,
While drums, with rolling note, foretell
Relief to weary sentinels.
Through narrow loop and casement barred,
The sunbeams sought the Court of Guard,
And struggling with the smoky air,
Deadened the torches' yellow glare.

In comfortless alliance shone
The lights through arch of blackened stone,
And showed wild shapes in garb of war,
Faces deformed with beard and scar,
All haggard from the midnight watch,
And fevered with the stern debauch ;
For the oak table's massive board,
Flooded with wine, with fragments stored,
And beakers drained, and cups o'erthrown,
Showed in what sport the night had flown.
Some, weary, snored on floor and bench ;
Some laboured still their thirst to quench ;
Some, chilled with watching, spread their hands
O'er the huge chimney's dying brands,
While round them, or beside them flung,
At every step their harness rung.

III.

These drew not for their fields the sword,
Like tenants of a feudal lord,
Nor owned the patriarchal claim
Of chieftain in their leader's name ;
Adventurers they, * from far who roved,
To live by battle which they loved.
There the Italian's clouded face,
The swarthy Spaniard's there you trace ;
The mountain-loving Switzer there
More freely breathed in mountain air ;
The Fleming there despised the soil,
That paid so ill the labourer's toil ;
Their rolls showed French and German name ;
And merry England's exiles came,
To share, with ill-concealed disdain,
Of Scotland's pay the scanty gain.
All brave in arms, well trained to wield
The heavy halberd, brand, and shield ;
In camps licentious, wild, and bold ;
In pillage, fierce and uncontrolled ;

* See Note 57.

And now, by holytide and feast,
From rules of discipline released.

IV.

They held debate of bloody fray
Fought 'twixt Loch Katrine and Achray.
Fierce was their speech, and, 'mid their words,
Their hands oft grappled to their swords.
Nor sunk their tone to spare the ear
Of wounded comrades groaning near,
Whose mangled limbs, and bodies gored,
Bore token of the mountain sword,
Though, neighbouring to the Court of Guard,
Their prayers and feverish wails were heard—
Sad burden to the ruffian joke,
And savage oath by fury spoke!—
At length up started John of Brent,
A yeoman from the banks of Trent;
A stranger to respect or fear,
In peace a chaser of the deer,
In host a hardy mutineer,
But still the boldest of the crew
When deed of danger was to do.
He grieved, that day, their games cut short,
And marred the dicer's brawling sport,
And shouted loud, "Renew the bowl!
And, while a merry catch I troll,
Let each the buxom chorus bear,
Like brethren of the brand and spear."

V.

Soldier's Song.

Our vicar still preaches that Peter and Poule
Laid a swinging long curse on the bonny brown bowl,
That there's wrath and despair in the jolly black-jack,
And the seven deadly sins in a flagon of sack;
Yet whoop, Barnaby! off with thy liquor,
Drink upsees* out, and a fig for the vicar!

* A bacchanalian interjection borrowed from the Dutch.

Our vicar he calls it damnation to sip
 The ripe ruddy dew of a woman's dear lip,
 Says, that Beelzebub lurks in her kerchief so sly,
 And Apollyon shoots darts from her merry black eye ;
 Yet whoop, Jack ! kiss Gillian the quicker,
 Till she bloom like a rose, and a fig for the vicar !

Our vicar thus preaches—and why should he not ?
 For the dues of his cure are the placket and pot ;
 And 'tis right of his office poor laymen to lurch,
 Who infringe the domains of our good Mother Church.
 Yet whoop, bully-boys ! off with your liquor,
 Sweet Marjorie's the word, and a fig for the vicar !

VI.

The warder's challenge, heard without,
 Stayed in mid-roar the merry shout.
 A soldier to the portal went,—
 “Here is old Bertram, sirs, of Ghent ;
 And beat for jubilee the drum !—
 A maid and minstrel with him come.”
 Bertram, a Fleming, grey and scarred,
 Was entering now the Court of Guard,
 A harper with him, and, in plaid
 All muffled close, a mountain maid,
 Who backward shrunk to 'scape the view
 Of the loose scene and boisterous crew.
 “What news ?” they roared.—“I only know,
 From noon till eve we fought with foe
 As wild and as untamable
 As the rude mountains where they dwell.
 On both sides store of blood is lost,
 Nor much success can either boast.”—
 “But whence thy captives, friend ? such spoil
 As theirs must needs reward thy toil.
 Old dost thou wax, and wars grow sharp :
 Thou now hast glee-maiden and harp ;
 Get thee an ape, and trudge the land,
 The leader of a juggler band.”*—

* See Note 58.

VII.

“No, comrade—no such fortune mine.
After the fight these sought our line,
That aged harper and the girl,
And, having audience of the Earl,
Mar bade I should purvey them steed,
And bring them hitherward with speed.
Forbear your mirth and rude alarm,
For none shall do them shame or harm.”—
“Hear ye his boast?” cried John of Brent,
Ever to strife and jangling bent.
“Shall he strike doe beside our lodge,
And yet the jealous niggard grudge
To pay the forester his fee?
I’ll have my share, howe’er it be,
Despite of Moray, Mar, or thee.”
Bertram his forward step withstood;
And, burning in his vengeful mood,
Old Allan, though unfit for strife,
Laid hand upon his dagger-knife.
But Ellen boldly stepped between,
And dropped at once the tartan screen;—
So, from his morning cloud, appears
The sun of May, through summer tears.
The savage soldiery, amazed,
As on descended angel gazed;
Even hardy Brent, abashed and tamed,
Stood half admiring, half ashamed.

VIII.

Boldly she spoke,—“Soldiers, attend!
My father was the soldier’s friend;
Cheered him in camps, in marches led,
And with him in the battle bled.
Not from the valiant, or the strong,
Should exile’s daughter suffer wrong.”
Answered De Brent, most forward still
In every feat or good or ill,—

"I shame me of the part I played—
 And thou an outlaw's child, poor maid!
 An outlaw I by forest laws,
 And merry Needwood knows the cause.
 Poor Rose,—if Rose be living now,"
 He wiped his iron eye and brow,
 "Must bear such age, I think, as thou.—
 Hear ye, my mates: I go to call
 The captain of our watch to hall.
 There lies my halberd on the floor;
 And he that steps my halberd o'er,
 'To do the maid injurious part,
 My shaft shall quiver in his heart!—
 Beware loose speech, or jesting rough:
 Ye all know John de Brent. Enough!"

IX.

Their captain came, a gallant young
 (Of Tullibardine's house he sprung);
 Nor wore he yet the spurs of knight.
 Gay was his mien, his humour light,
 And, though by courtesy controlled,
 Forward his speech, his bearing bold.
 The highborn maiden ill could brook
 The scanning of his curious look
 And dauntless eye;—and yet, in sooth,
 Young Lewis was a generous youth;
 But Ellen's lovely face and mien,
 Ill suited to the garb and scene,
 Might lightly bear construction strange,
 And give loose fancy scope to range.—
 "Welcome to Stirling towers, fair maid!
 Come ye to seek a champion's aid,
 On palfrey white, with harper hoar,
 Like errant damosel of yore?
 Does thy high quest a knight require,
 Or may the venture suit a squire?"
 Her dark eye flashed; she paused, and sighed,—
 "O what have I to do with pride!—

Through scenes of sorrow, shame, and strife,
 A suppliant for a father's life,
 I crave an audience of the King.
 Behold, to back my suit, a ring,
 The royal pledge of grateful claims,
 Given by the Monarch to Fitz-James."

X.

The signet-ring young Lewis took,
 With deep respect and altered look,
 And said,—“This ring our duties own;
 And pardon, if to worth unknown,
 In semblance mean obscurely veiled,
 Lady, in aught my folly failed.
 Soon as the day flings wide his gates,
 The King shall know what suitor waits.
 Please you, meanwhile, in fitting bower
 Repose you till his waking hour;
 Female attendance shall obey
 Your hest, for service or array.
 Permit I marshal you the way.”
 But, ere she followed, with the grace
 And open bounty of her race,
 She bade her slender purse be shared
 Among the soldiers of the guard.
 The rest with thanks their guerdon took;
 But Brent, with shy and awkward look,
 On the reluctant maiden's hold
 Forced bluntly back the proffered gold :—
 “Forgive a haughty English heart,
 And O forget its ruder part !
 The vacant purse shall be my share,
 Which in my barret-cap I'll bear,
 Perchance, in jeopardy of war,
 Where gayer crests may keep afar.”
 With thanks—'twas all she could—the maid
 His rugged courtesy repaid

XI.

When Ellen forth with Lewis went,
 Allan made suit to John of Brent :—

"My lady safe, O let your grace
 Give me to see my master's face!
 His minstrel I,—to share his doom
 Bound from the cradle to the tomb.
 Tenth in descent, since first my sires
 Waked for his noble house their lyres;
 Nor one of all the race was known
 But prized its weal above their own.
 With the Chief's birth begins our care;
 Our harp must soothe the infant heir,
 Teach the youth tales of fight, and grace
 His earliest feat of field or chase;
 In peace, in war, our rank we keep,
 We cheer his board, we soothe his sleep,
 Nor leave him till we pour our verse—
 A doleful tribute!—o'er his hearse.
 Then let me share his captive lot;
 It is my right—deny it not!"—
 "Little we reck," said John of Brent,
 "We Southern men, of long descent;
 Nor wot we how a name—a word—
 Makes clansmen vassals to a lord:
 Yet kind my noble landlord's part,—
 God bless the house of Beaudesert!
 And, but I loved to drive the deer,
 More than to guide the labouring steer,
 I had not dwelt an outcast here.
 Come, good old Minstrel, follow me;
 Thy lord and chieftain shalt thou see."—

XII.

Then, from a rusted iron hook,
 A bunch of ponderous keys he took,
 Lighted a torch, and Allan led
 Through grated arch and passage dread.
 Portals they passed, where, deep within,
 Spoke prisoner's moan and fetters' din;
 Through rugged vaults, where, loosely stored,
 Lay wheel, and axe, and headsman's sword,

And many a hideous engine grim,
For wrenching joint, and crushing limb,
By artists formed, who deemed it shame
And sin to give their work a name.
They halted at a low-browed porch,
And Brent to Allan gave the torch,
While bolt and chain he backward rolled,
And made the bar unhasp its hold.
They entered :—'twas a prison-room
Of stern security and gloom ;
Yet not a dungeon, for the day
Through lofty gratings found its way,
And rude and antique garniture
Decked the sad walls and oaken floor—
Such as the rugged days of old
Deemed fit for captive noble's hold.
“ Here,” said De Brent, “ thou mayst remain
Till the leech visit him again.
Strict is his charge, the warders tell,
To tend the noble prisoner well.”
Retiring then the bolt he drew,
And the lock's murmurs growled anew
Roused at the sound, from lowly bed
A captive feebly raised his head ;
The wondering Minstrel looked, and knew---
Not his dear lord, but Roderick Dhu !
For, come from where Clan-Alpine fought,
They, erring, deemed the Chief he sought.

XIII.

As the tall ship, whose lofty prone
Shall never stem the billows more,
Deserted by her gallant band,
Amid the breakers lies astrand,—
So, on his couch, lay Roderick Dhu !
And oft his fevered limbs he threw
In toss abrupt, as when her sides
Lie rocking in the advancing tides,
That shake her frame with ceaseless beat,
Yet cannot heave her from her seat ;—

- O ! how unlike her course at sea !
 Or his free step on hill and lea !—
 Soon as the Minstrel he could scan,—
 “ What of thy lady ?—of my clan ?—
 My mother ?—Douglas ?—tell me all !
 Have they been ruined in my fall ?
 Ah, yes ! or wherefore art thou here ?
 Yet speak,—speak boldly,—do not fear.”—
 (For Allan, who his mood well knew,
 Was choked with grief and terror too.) —
 “ Who fought ?—who fled ?—Old man, be brief ;—
 Some might—for they had lost their Chief.
 Who basely live ?—who bravely died ? ”—
 “ O calm thee, Chief ! ” the Minstrel cried,
 “ Ellen is safe ; ”—“ For that, thank Heaven ! ”—
 “ And hopes are for the Douglas given ;
 The Lady Margaret too is well ;
 And, for thy clan,—on field or fell,
 Has never harp of minstrel told
 Of combat fought so true and bold.
 Thy stately Pine is yet unbent,
 Though many a goodly bough is rent.”

[XIV.

- The Chieftain reared his form on high,
 And fever's fire was in his eye ;
 But ghastly, pale, and livid streaks
 Chequered his swarthy brow and cheeks.—
 “ Hark, Minstrel ! I have heard thee play,
 With measure bold, on festal day,
 In yon lone isle,.....again where ne'er
 Shall harper play, or warrior hear !.....
 That stirring air that peals on high,
 O'er Dermid's race our victory.*—
 Strike it !—and then (for well thou canst),
 Free from thy minstrel-spirit glanced,
 Fling me the picture of the fight
 When met my clan the Saxon might.

* See Note 59.

I'll listen, till my fancy hears
 The clang of swords, the crash of spears !
 These grates, these walls, shall vanish then,
 For the fair field of fighting men,
 And my free spirit burst away,
 As if it soared from battle-fray."—
 The trembling Bard with awe obeyed,—
 Slow on the harp his hand he laid ;
 But soon remembrance of the sight
 He witnessed from the mountain's height,
 With what old Bertram told at night,
 Awakened the full power of song,
 And bore him in career along—
 As shallop launched on river's tide,
 That slow and fearful leaves the side,
 But, when it feels the middle stream,
 Drives downward swift as lightning's beam.

SCENE II.—THE LAKE. XV.

Battle of Beal' an Duine.*

The Minstrel came once more to view
 The eastern ridge of Benvenue,
 For, ere he parted, he would say
 Farewell to lovely Loch Achray—
 Where shall he find, in foreign land,
 So lone a lake, so sweet a strand !—
 There is no breeze upon the fern,
 No ripple on the lake ;
 Upon her eyrie nods the erne,
 The deer has sought the brake,
 The small birds will not sing aloud,
 The springing trout lies still—
 So darkly glooms yon thunder cloud,
 That swathes, as with a purple shroud,
 Benledi's distant hill,
 Is it the thunder's solemn sound
 That mutters deep and dread,
 Or echoes from the groaning ground
 The warrior's measured tread ?

* See Note 60. Ed. 5.

Is it the lightning's quivering glance
That on the thicket streams,
Or do they flash on spear and lance
The sun's retiring beams?—
I see the dagger-crest of Mar,
I see the Moray's silver star,
Wave o'er the cloud of Saxon war
That up the lake comes winding far!
To hero bound for battle-strife,
Or bard of martial lay,
'Twere worth ten years of peaceful life
One glance at their array!

XVI.

Their light-armed archers far and near
Surveyed the tangled ground;
Their centre ranks, with pike and spear,
A twilight forest frowned;
Their barbèd horsemen, in the rear,
The stern battalia crowned.
No cymbal clashed, no clarion rang,
Still were the pipe and drum;
Save heavy tread, and armour's clang,
The sullen march was dumb.
There breathed no wind their crests to shake,
Or wave their flags abroad;
Scarce the frail aspen seemed to quake,
That shadowed o'er their road.
Their vaward scouts no tidings bring,
Can rouse no lurking foe,
Nor spy a trace of living thing,
Save when they stirred the roe;
The host moves, like a deep-sea wave,
Where rise no rocks its pride to brave,
High-swelling, dark, and slow.
The lake is passed, and now they gain
A narrow and a broken plain,
Before the Trosachs' rugged jaws;
And here the horse and spearmen pause,

While, to explore the dangerous glen,
Dive through the pass the archer-men.

XVII.

At once there rose so wild a yell
Within that dark and narrow dell,
As all the fiends, from heaven that fell,
Had pealed the banner-cry of hell !
Forth from the pass in tumult driven,
Like chaff before the wind of heaven,

The archery appear :

For life ! for life ! their flight they ply ;
And shriek, and shout, and battle-cry,
And plaids and bonnets waving high,
And broadswords flashing to the sky,

Are maddening in the rear.

Onward they drive, in dreadful race,

Pursuers and pursued ;

Before that tide of flight and chase,

How shall it keep its rooted place,

The spearmen's twilight wood ?—

Down, down," cried Mar, "your lances down !

Bear back both friend and foe !"

Like reeds before the tempest's frown,

That serried grove of lances brown

At once lay levelled low ;

And closely shouldering side to side,

The bristling ranks the onset bide.—

"We'll quell the savage mountaineer,

As their Tinchel* cows the game !

They come as fleet as forest deer,

We'll drive them back as tame."—

XVIII.

Bearing before them, in their course,

The relics of the archer force,

Like wave with crest of sparkling foam,

Right onward did Clan-Alpine come.

* A circle of sportsmen who, by surrounding a great space, and gradually narrowing, brought immense quantities of deer together, which usually made desperate efforts to break through the Tinchel.

Above the tide, each broadsword bright
 Was brandishing like beam of light,
 Each targe was dark below ;
 And with the ocean's mighty swing,
 When heaving to the tempest's wing,
 They hurled them on the foe.
 I heard the lance's shivering crash,
 As when the whirlwind rends the ash ;
 I heard the broadsword's deadly clang,
 As if a hundred anvils rang !
 But Moray wheeled his rearward rank
 Of horsemen on Clan-Alpine's flank,—
 “ My banner-man, advance !
 I see,” he cried, “ their column shake.—
 Now, gallants ! for your ladies' sake,
 Upon them with the lance ! ”—
 The horsemen dashed among the rout,
 As deer break through the broom ;
 Their steeds are stout, their swords are out,
 They soon make lightsome room.
 Clan-Alpine's best are backward borne—
 Where, where was Roderick then ?
 One blast upon his bugle-horn
 Were worth a thousand men !
 And reflux through the pass of fear
 The battle's tide was poured ;
 Vanished the Saxon's struggling spear ;
 Vanished the mountain sword.
 As Bracklinn's chasm, so black and steep,
 Receives her roaring linn,
 As the dark caverns of the deep
 Suck the wild whirlpool in,
 So did the deep and darksome pass
 Devour the battle's mingled mass ;
 None linger now upon the plain,
 Save those who ne'er shall fight again.

XIX.

Now westward rolls the battle's din,
 That deep and doubling pass within.—

Minstrel, away ! the work of fate
Is bearing on : its issue wait !
Where the rude 'Trosachs' dread defile
Opens on Katrine's lake and isle.—
Grey Benvenue I soon repassed,
Loch Katrine lay beneath me cast.

The sun is set, the clouds are met,

The lowering scowl of heaven

An inky hue of vivid blue

To the deep lake has given ;

Strange gusts of wind from mountain glen

Swept o'er the lake, then sunk agen.

I heeded not the eddying surge,

Mine eye but saw the 'Trosachs' gorge,

Mine ear but heard the sullen sound

Which like an earthquake shook the ground,

And spoke the stern and desperate strife

That parts not but with parting life,

Seeming, to minstrel ear, to toll

The dirge of many a passing soul.

Nearer it comes—the dim-wood glen

The martial flood disgorged agen,

But not in mingled tide ;

The plaided warriors of the North

High on the mountain thunder forth,

And overhang its side ;

While by the lake below appears

The dark'ning cloud of Saxon spears.

At weary bay each shattered band,

Eyeing their foemen, sternly stand ;

Their banners stream like tattered sail

That flings its fragments to the gale,

And broken arms and disarray

Marked the fell havoc of the day.

—XX. Second Part—

Viewing the mountain's ridge askance,

The Saxons stood in sullen trance,

Till Moray pointed with his lance,

And cried, " Behold yon isle !—

See! none are left to guard its strand
But women weak, that wring the hand.
'Tis there of yore the robber band
Their booty wont to pile.

My purse, with bonnet-pieces store,
To him will swim a bowshot o'er,
And loose a shallop from the shore;
Lightly we'll tame the war-wolf then,
Lords of his mate, and brood, and den."
Forth from the ranks a spearman sprung,
On earth his casque and corselet rung,

He plunged him in the wave,
All saw the deed—the purpose knew;
And to their clamours Benvenue

A mingled echo gave—
The Saxons shout, their mate to cheer,
The helpless females scream for fear,
And yells for rage the mountaineer.
'Twas then, as by the outcry riven,
Poured down at once the lowering heaven;
A whirlwind swept Loch Katrine's breast,
Her billows reared their snowy crest.
Well for the swimmer swelled they high,
To mar the Highland marksman's eye;
For round him showered, 'mid rain and hail,

The vengeful arrows of the Gael.—
In vain. He nears the isle; and lo!
His hand is on a shallop's bow.
Just then a flash of lightning came,
It tinged the waves and strand with flame;—
I marked Duncraggan's widowed dame,
Behind an oak I saw her stand,
A naked dirk gleamed in her hand:
It darkened,—but amid the moan
Of waves I heard a dying groan.
Another flash!—the spearman floats
A weltering corse beside the boats,
And the stern matron o'er him stood,
Her hand and dagger streaming blood.

XXI.

“Revenge ! revenge !” the Saxons cried ;
The Gaels’ exulting shout replied.
Despite the elemental rage,
Again they hurried to engage ;
But ere they closed in desperate fight,
Bloody with spurring came a knight,
Sprung from his horse, and, from a crag,
Waved ’twixt the hosts a milk-white flag.
Clarion and trumpet by his side
Rung forth a truce-note high and wide ;
While, in the Monarch’s name, afar
A herald’s voice forbade the war,
For Bothwell’s lord, and Roderick bold,
Were both, he said, in captive hold.—
But here the lay made sudden stand,
The harp escaped the Minstrel’s hand !
Oft had he stolen a glance, to spy
How Roderick brooked his minstrelsy.
At first, the Chieftain, to the chime,
With lifted hand kept feeble time ;
That motion ceased, yet feeling strong
Varied his look as changed the song.
At length, no more his deafened ear
The minstrel melody can hear ;
His face grows sharp, his hands are clenched,
As if some pang his heart-strings wrenched ;
Set are his teeth, his fading eye
Is sternly fixed on vacancy :
Thus, motionless, and moanless, drew
His parting breath, stout Roderick Dhu !—
Old Allan-bane looked on aghast,
While grim and still his spirit passed ;
But when he saw that life was fled,
He poured his wailing o’er the dead.

XXII.

Lament.

And art thou cold, and lowly laid,
Thy foeman’s dread, thy people’s aid,

Breadalbane's boast, Clan-Alpine's shade !
 For thee shall none a requiem say ?—
 For thee, who loved the minstrel's lay ;
 For thee, of Bothwell's house the stay,
 The shelter of her exiled line,—
 E'en in this prison-house of thine,
 I'll wail for Alpine's honoured Pine !

What groans shall yonder valleys fill !
 What shrieks of grief shall rend yon hill !
 What tears of burning rage shall thrill,
 When mourns thy tribe thy battles done,
 Thy fall before the race was won,
 Thy sword ungirt ere set of sun !
 There breathes not clansman of thy line,
 But would have given his life for thine.—
 O woe for Alpine's honoured Pine !

Sad was thy lot on mortal stage !—
 The captive thrush may brook the cage,
 The prisoned eagle dies for rage.
 Brave spirit, do not scorn my strain !
 And, when its notes awake again,
 Even she, so long beloved in vain,
 Shall with my harp her voice combine,
 And mix her woe and tears with mine,
 To wail Clan-Alpine's honoured Pine.

XXIII.

Ellen, the while, with bursting heart,
 Remained in lordly bower apart,
 Where played, with many coloured gleams,
 Through storied pane the rising beams.
 In vain on gilded roof they fall,
 And lightened up a tapestried wall ;
 And for her use a menial train
 A rich collation spread in vain.
 The banquet proud, the chamber gay,
 Scarce drew one curious glance astray ;
 Or, if she looked, 'twas but to say,
 With better omen dawned the day

In that lone isle, where waved on high
 The dun-deer's hide for canopy ;
 Where oft her noble father shared
 The simple meal her care prepared,
 While Lufra, crouching by her side,
 Her station claimed with jealous pride,
 And Douglas, bent on woodland game,
 Spoke of the chase to Malcolm Græme,
 Whose answer, oft at random made,
 The wandering of his thoughts betrayed.
 Those who such simple joys have known
 Are taught to prize them when they're gone.—
 But sudden, see, she lifts her head !
 The window seeks with cautious tread.
 What distant music has the power
 To win her in this woeful hour ?
 'Twas from a turret that o'erhung
 Her latticed bower, the strain was sung.

XXIV.

Day of the Imprisoned Huntsman.

My hawk is tired of perch and hood,
 My idle greyhound loathes his food,
 My horse is weary of his stall,
 And I am sick of captive thrall.
 I wish I were, as I have been,
 Hunting the hart in forest green,
 With bended bow and bloodhound free,
 For that's the life is meet for me.

I hate to learn the ebb of time
 From yon dull steeple's drowsy chime,
 Or mark it as the sunbeams crawl,
 Inch after inch, along the wall.
 The lark was wont my matins ring,
 The sable rook my vespers sing ;
 These towers, although a king's they be,
 Have not a hall of joy for me.

No more at dawning morn I rise,
 And sun myself in Ellen's eyes,

Drive the fleet deer the forest through,
And homeward wend with evening dew ;
A blithesome welcome blithely meet,
And lay my trophies at her feet ;
While fled the eve on wing of glee,—
That life is lost to love and me !

XXV.

The heart-sick lay was hardly said,
The list'ner had not turned her head,
It trickled still, the starting tear,
When light a footstep struck her ear,
And Snowdoun's graceful Knight was near.
She turned the hastier, lest again
The prisoner should renew his strain.—
“ O welcome, brave Fitz-James ! ” she said ;
“ How may an almost orphan maid
Pay the deep debt ”—“ O say not so !
To me no gratitude you owe.
Not mine, alas, the boon to give,
And bid thy noble father live ;
I can but be thy guide, sweet maid,
With Scotland's King thy suit to aid.
No tyrant he, though ire and pride
May lay his better mood aside.
Come, Ellen, come !—'tis more than time,
He holds his court at morning prime.”
With beating heart, and bosom wrung,
As to a brother's arm she clung.
Gently he dried the falling tear,
And gently whispered hope and cheer ;
Her faltering steps half led, half staid,
Through gallery fair and high arcade,
Till, at his touch, its wings of pride
A portal arch unfolded wide.

XXVI.

Within 'twas brilliant all and light,
A thronging scene of figures bright ;
It glowed on Ellen's dazzled sight,

As when the setting sun has given
Ten thousand hues to summer even,
And, from their tissue, fancy frames
Aerial knights and fairy dames.
Still by Fitz-James her footing staid,
A few faint steps she forward made ;
Then slow her drooping head she raised,
And fearful round the presence gazed :
For him she sought who owned this state,
The dreaded prince whose will was fate !
She gazed on many a princely port
Might well have ruled a royal court ;
On many a splendid garb she gazed ;
Then turned bewildered and amazed,
For all stood bare, and, in the room,
Fitz-James alone wore cap and plume.
To him each lady's look was lent,
On him each courtier's eye was bent ;
Midst furs and silks and jewels sheen,
He stood, in simple Lincoln green,
The centre of the glittering ring,—
And Snowdown's Knight is Scotland's King ! *

XXVII.

As wreath of snow on mountain-breast
Slides from the rock that gave it rest,
Poor Ellen glided from her stay,
And at the Monarch's feet she lay.
No word her choking voice commands ;
She showed the ring—she clasped her hands
O ! not a moment could he brook,
The generous prince, that suppliant look !
Gently he raised her—and, the while,
Checked with a glance the circle's smile ;
Graceful, but grave, her brow he kissed,
And bade her terrors be dismissed :—
“ Yes, Fair ; the wandering poor Fitz-James
The fealty of Scotland claims.
To him thy woes, thy wishes, bring ;
He will redeem his signet-ring.

* See Note 61.

Ask nought for Douglas : yester even
 His prince and he have much forgiven.
 Wrong hath he had from slanderous tongue ;
 I, from his rebel kinsmen, wrong.
 We would not, to the vulgar crowd,
 Yield what they craved with clamour loud ;
 Calmly we heard and judged his cause,
 Our council aided, and our laws.
 I stanch'd thy father's death-feud stern
 With stout De Vaux and grey Glencairn ;
 And Bothwell's lord henceforth we own
 The friend and bulwark of our throne.—
 But, lovely infidel, how now ?
 What clouds thy misbelieving brow ?—
 Lord James of Douglas, lend thine aid ;
 Thou must confirm this doubting maid.”

XXVIII.

Then forth the noble Douglas sprung,
 And on his neck his daughter hung.
 The Monarch drank, that happy hour,
 The sweetest, holiest draught of Power,—
 When it can say, with godlike voice,
 Arise, sad Virtue, and rejoice !
 Yet would not James the general eye
 On Nature's raptures long should pry ;
 He stepped between—“Nay, Douglas, nay,
 Steal not my proselyte away !
 The riddle 'tis my right to read,
 That brought this happy chance to speed.—
 Yes, Ellen, when disguised I stray
 In life's more low but happier way,
 'Tis under name which veils my power—
 Nor falsely veils, for Stirling's tower
 Of yore the name of Snowdoun claims,*
 And Normans call me James Fitz-James.
 Thus watch I o'er insulted laws,
 Thus learn to right the injured cause.”

* See Note 62.

Then, in a tone apart and low,—
“ Ah, little traitress ! none must know
What idle dream, what lighter thought,
What vanity full dearly bought,
Joined to thine eye’s dark witchcraft, drew
My spellbound steps to Benvenue,
In dangerous hour, and all but gave
Thy Monarch’s life to mountain glaive ! ”—
Aloud he spoke—“ Thou still dost hold
That little talisman of gold,
Pledge of my faith, Fitz-James’s ring—
What seeks fair Ellen of the King ? ”

Book XXIX.

Full well the conscious maiden guessed
He probed the weakness of her breast ;
But, with that consciousness, there came
A lightening of her fears for Græme,
And more she deemed the Monarch’s ire
Kindled ’gainst him who, for her sire,
Rebellious broadsword boldly drew ;
And, to her generous feeling true,
She craved the grace of Roderick Dhu.
“ Forbear thy suit : the King of kings
Alone can stay life’s parting wings.
I know his heart, I know his hand,
Have shared his cheer, and proved his brand ;—
My fairest earldom would I give
To bid Clan-Alpine’s Chieftain live !—
Hast thou no other boon to crave ?
No other captive friend to save ? ”—
Blushing, she turned her from the King,
And to the Douglas gave the ring,
As if she wished her sire to speak
The suit that stained her glowing cheek.—
“ Nay, then, my pledge has lost its force,
And stubborn Justice holds her course.
Malcolm, come forth ! ”—And, at the word,
Down kneeled the Græme to Scotland’s Lord.
“ For thee, rash youth, no suppliant sues,
From thee may Vengeance claim her dues,

Who, nurtured underneath our smile,
Hast paid our care by treacherous wile,
And sought, amid thy faithful clan,
A refuge for an outlawed man,
Dishonouring thus thy loyal name.—
Fetters and warder for the Græme !”
His chain of gold the King unstrung,
The links o’er Malcolm’s neck he flung ;
Then gently drew the glittering band,
And laid the clasp on Ellen’s hand.

HARP of the North, farewell ! The hills grow dark,
On purple peaks a deeper shade descending ;
In twilight copse the glowworm lights her spark,
The deer, half-seen, are to the covert wending.
Resume thy wizard elm ! the fountain lending,
And the wild breeze, thy wilder minstrelsy ;
Thy numbers sweet with Nature’s vespers blending,
With distant echo from the fold and lea,
And herd-boy’s evening pipe, and hum of housing bee.

Yet, once again, farewell, thou Minstrel Harp !
Yet, once again, forgive my feeble sway,
And little reck I of the censure sharp
May idly cavil at an idle lay.
Much have I owed thy strains on life’s long way,
Through secret woes the world has never known,
When on the weary night dawned wearier day,
And bitterer was the grief devoured alone.
That I o’erlive such woes, Enchantress ! is thine own.

Hark ! as my lingering footsteps slow retire,
Some spirit of the air has waked thy string !
’Tis now a seraph bold, with touch of fire,
’Tis now the brush of Fairy’s frolic wing.
Receding now, the dying numbers ring
Fainter and fainter down the rugged dell,
And now the mountain breezes scarcely bring
A wandering witch-note of the distant spell—
And now, ’tis silent all !—Enchantress, fare thee well !

PREFACE TO FIRST EDITION, 1811.

THE following Poem is founded upon a Spanish Tradition, particularly detailed in the Notes ; but bearing, in general, that Don Roderick, the last Gothic King of Spain, when the Invasion of the Moors was impending, had the temerity to descend into an ancient vault near Toledo, the opening of which had been denounced as fatal to the Spanish Monarchy. The legend adds, that his rash curiosity was mortified by an emblematical representation of those Saracens who, in the year 714, defeated him in battle, and reduced Spain under their dominion. I have presumed to prolong the Vision of the Revolutions of Spain down to the present eventful crisis of the Peninsula ; and to divide it, by a supposed change of scene, into THREE PERIODS. The FIRST of these represents the Invasion of the Moors, the Defeat and Death of Roderick, and closes with the peaceful occupation of the country by the Victors. The SECOND PERIOD embraces the state of the Peninsula, when the conquests of the Spaniards and Portuguese in the East and West Indies had raised to the highest pitch the renown of their arms ; sullied, however, by superstition and cruelty. An allusion to the inhumanities of the Inquisition terminates this picture. The LAST PART of the Poem opens with the state of Spain previous to the unparalleled treachery of BUONAPARTE ; gives a sketch of the usurpation attempted upon that unsuspecting and friendly kingdom, and terminates with the arrival of the British succours. It may be further proper to mention, that the object of the Poem is less to commemorate or detail particular incidents, than to exhibit a general and impressive picture of the several periods brought upon the stage.

I am too sensible of the respect due to the Public, especially by one who has already experienced more than ordinary indulgence, to offer any apology for the inferiority of the poetry to the subject it is chiefly designed to commemorate. Yet I think it proper to mention, that while I was hastily executing a work, written for a temporary purpose, and on passing events, the task was most cruelly interrupted by the successive deaths of LORD PRESIDENT BLAIR, and LORD VISCOUNT MELVILLE. In those distinguished characters, I had not only to regret persons whose lives were most important to Scotland, but also whose notice and patronage honoured my entrance upon active life ; and, I may add, with melancholy pride, who permitted my more advanced age to claim no common share in their friendship. Under such interruptions, the following verses, which my best and happiest efforts must have left far unworthy of their theme, have, I am myself sensible, an appearance of negligence and incoherence, which, in other circumstances, I might have been able to remove.

THE VISION OF DON RODERICK.

INTRODUCTION.

I.

LIVES there a strain, whose sounds of mounting fire
May rise distinguished o'er the din of war ;
Or died it with yon Master of the Lyre,
Who sung beleaguered Ilion's evil star ?
Such, WELLINGTON, might reach thee from afar,
Wafting its descant wide o'er Ocean's range ;
Nor shouts, nor clashing arms, its mood could mar,
All as it swelled 'twixt each loud trumpet-change,
That clangs to Britain victory, to Portugal revenge !

II.

Yes ! such a strain, with all o'er-pouring measure,
Might melodize with each tumultuous sound,
Each voice of fear or triumph, woe or pleasure,
That rings Mondego's ravaged shores around ;
The thundering cry of hosts with conquest crowned,
The female shriek, the ruined peasant's moan,
The shout of captives from their chains unbound,
The foiled oppressor's deep and sullen groan,
A Nation's choral hymn for tyranny o'erthrown.

III.

But we, weak minstrels of a laggard day,
Skilled but to imitate an elder page,
Timid and raptureless, can we repay
The debt thou claim'st in this exhausted age ?

Thou givest our lyres a theme that might engage
 Those that could send thy name o'er sea and land,
 While sea and land shall last ; for Homer's rage
 A theme ; a theme for Milton's mighty hand :
 How much unmeet for us, a faint degenerate band !

IV.

Ye mountains stern ! within whose rugged breast
 The friends of Scottish freedom found repose ;
 Ye torrents ! whose hoarse sounds have soothed their rest,
 Returning from the field of vanquished foes,—
 Say, have ye lost each wild majestic close,
 That erst the choir of Bards or Druids flung,
 What time their hymn of victory arose,
 And Cattræth's glens with voice of triumph rung,
 And mystic Merlin harped, and grey-haired Llywarch sung?*

V.

Oh ! if your wilds such minstrelsy retain,
 As sure your changeful gales seem oft to say,
 When sweeping wild and sinking soft again,
 Like trumpet-jubilee or harp's wild sway ;
 If ye can echo such triumphant lay,
 Then lend the note to him has loved you long !
 Who pious gathered each tradition grey
 That floats your solitary wastes along,
 And with affection vain gave them new voice in song.

VI.

For not till now, how oft so'er the task
 Of truant verse hath lightened graver care,
 From Muse or Sylvan was he wont to ask,
 In phrase poetic, inspiration fair ;
 Careless he gave his numbers to the air,—
 They came unsought for, if applauses came.
 Nor for himself prefers he now the prayer :
 Let but his verse befit a hero's fame,
 Immortal be the verse !—forgot the poet's name.

* See Note 1.

VII.

Hark, from yon misty cairn their answer tossed :
“ Minstrel ! the fame of whose romantic lyre,
Capricious swelling now, may soon be lost,
Like the light flickering of a cottage fire,
If to such task presumptuous thou aspire,
Seek not from us the meed to warrior due :
Age after age has gathered son to sire,
Since our grey cliffs the din of conflict knew,
Or, pealing through our vales, victorious bugles blew.

VIII.

“ Decayed our old traditionary lore,
Save where the lingering fays renew their ring,
By milkmaid seen beneath the hawthorn hoar,
Or round the marge of Minchmore’s haunted spring ;
Save where their legends grey-haired shepherds sing,
That now scarce win a listening ear but thine,
Of feuds obscure, and Border ravaging,
And rugged deeds recount in rugged line,
Of moonlight foray made on Teviot, Tweed, or Tyne.

IX.

“ No ! search romantic lands, where the near sun
Gives with unstinted boon ethereal flame,
Where the rude villager, his labour done,
In verse spontaneous chants some favoured name ; †
Whether Olalia’s charms his tribute claim,
Her eye of diamond, and her locks of jet ;
Or whether, kindling at the deeds of Græme, ‡
He sing, to wild Morisco measure set,
Old Albin’s red claymore, green Erin’s bayonet !

X.

“ Explore those regions, where the flinty crest
Of wild Nevada ever gleams with snows,
Where in the proud Alhambra’s ruined breast
Barbaric monuments of pomp repose ;

* See Note 2.

† See Note 3.

‡ See Note 4.

Or where the banners of more ruthless foes
 Than the fierce Moor, float o'er Toledo's fane,
 From whose tall towers even now the patriot throws
 An anxious glance, to spy upon the plain
 The blended ranks of England, Portugal, and Spain.

XI.

"There, of Numantian fire a swarthy spark
 Still lightens in the sunburnt native's eye;
 The stately port, slow step, and visage dark,
 Still mark enduring pride and constancy.
 And, if the glow of feudal chivalry
 Beam not, as once, thy nobles' dearest pride,
 Iberia! oft thy crestless peasantry
 Have seen the plumed Hidalgo quit their side—
 Have seen, yet dauntless stood; 'gainst fortune fought and died.

XII.

"And cherished still by that unchanging race,
 Are themes for minstrelsy more high than thine;
 Of strange tradition many a mystic trace,
 Legend and vision, prophecy and sign;
 Where wonders wild of Arabesque combine
 With Gothic imagery of darker shade,
 Forming a model meet for minstrel line.
 Go, seek such theme!"—the Mountain Spirit said:
 With filial awe I heard—I heard, and I obeyed.

THE VISION.

I.

REARING their crests amid the cloudless skies,
 And darkly clustering in the pale moonlight,
 Toledo's holy towers and spires arise,
 As from a trembling lake of silver white.
 Their mingled shadows intercept the sight
 Of the broad burial-ground outstretched below;
 And nought disturbs the silence of the night;
 All sleeps in sullen shade or silver glow—
 All save the heavy swell of Teio's ceaseless flow.

II.

All save the rushing swell of Teio's tide,
Or, distant heard, a courser's neigh or tramp;
Their changing rounds as watchful horsemen ride,
To guard the limits of King Roderick's camp.
For, through the river's night-fog rolling damp,
Was many a proud pavilion dimly seen,
Which glimmered back, against the moon's fair lamp,
Tissues of silk and silver twisted sheen,
And standards proudly pitched, and warders armed between

III.

But of their Monarch's person keeping ward,
Since last the deep-mouthed bell of vespers tolled,
The chosen soldiers of the royal guard
Their post beneath the proud Cathedral hold:
A band unlike their Gothic sires of old,
Who, for the cap of steel and iron mace,
Bear slender darts, and casques bedecked with gold,
While silver-studded belts their shoulders grace,
Where ivory quivers ring in the broad falchion's place.

IV.

In the light language of an idle court,
They murmured at their master's long delay,
And held his lengthened orisons in sport:—
“What! will Don Roderick here till morning stay,
To wear in shrift and prayer the night away?
And are his hours in such dull penance passed
For fair Florinda's plundered charms to pay?”*—
Then to the east their weary eyes they cast,
And wished the lingering dawn would glimmer forth at last

V.

But, far within, Toledo's Prelate lent
An ear of fearful wonder to the King;
The silver lamp a fitful lustre sent,
So long that sad confession witnessing:

* See Note 5.

For Roderick told of many a hidden thing,
 Such as are loathly uttered to the air,
 When Fear, Remorse, and Shame the bosom wring,
 And Guilt his secret burden cannot bear,
 And Conscience seeks in speech a respite from Despair.

VI.

Full on the Prelate's face and silver hair
 The stream of failing light was feebly rolled ;
 But Roderick's visage, though his head was bare,
 Was shadowed by his hand and mantle's fold.
 While of his hidden soul the sins he told,
 Proud Alaric's descendant could not brook
 That mortal man his bearing should behold,
 Or boast that he had seen, when Conscience shook,
 Fear tame a monarch's brow, Remorse a warrior's look.

VII.

The old man's faded cheek waxed yet more pale,
 As many a secret sad the King bewrayed ;
 As sign and glance eked out the unfinished tale,
 When in the midst his faltering whisper stayed.—
 " Thus royal Witiza was slain," he said.
 " Yet, holy Father, deem not it was I"—
 Thus still Ambition strives her crimes to shade—
 " O rather deem 'twas stern necessity !
 Self-preservation bade, and I must kill or die.

VIII.

" And if Florinda's shrieks alarmed the air,
 If she invoked her absent sire in vain,
 And on her knees implored that I would spare,
 Yet, reverend priest, thy sentence rash refrain !—
 All is not as it seems ; the female train
 Know by their bearing to disguise their mood :"—
 But Conscience here, as if in high disdain,
 Sent to the Monarch's cheek the burning blood ;
 He stayed his speech abrupt, and up the Prelate stood.

IX.

“O hardened offspring of an iron race !
What of thy crimes, Don Roderick, shall I say ?
What alms, or prayers, or penance can efface
Murder’s dark spot, wash treason’s stain away ?
For the foul ravisher how shall I pray,
Who, scarce repentant, makes his crime his boast ?
How hope Almighty vengeance shall delay,
Unless, in mercy to yon Christian host,
He spare the shepherd, lest the guiltless sheep be lost.”

X.

Then kindled the dark Tyrant in his mood,
And to his brow returned its dauntless gloom ;
“And welcome then,” he cried, “be blood for blood,
For treason treachery, for dishonour doom !
Yet will I know whence come they, or by whom.
Show, for thou canst—give forth the fated key,
And guide me, Priest, to that mysterious room,
Where, if aught true in old tradition be,
His nation’s future fates a Spanish King shall see.”—

XI.

“Ill-fated Prince ! recall the desperate word,
Or pause ere yet the omen thou obey !
Bethink, yon spellbound portal would afford
Never to former Monarch entrance-way ;
Nor shall it ever ope, old records say,
Save to a King, the last of all his line,
What time his empire totters to decay,
And treason digs, beneath, her fatal mine,
And, high above, impends avenging wrath divine.”—

XII.

“Prelate ! a Monarch’s fate brooks no delay !
Lead on !”—The ponderous key the old man took,
And held the winking lamp, and led the way
By winding stair, dark aisle, and secret nook,

Then on an ancient gateway bent his look ;
 And as the key the desperate King essayed,
 Low muttered thunders the Cathedral shook ;
 And twice he stopped, and twice new effort made,
 Till the huge bolts rolled back, and the loud hinges brayed.

XIII.

Long, large, and lofty was that vaulted hall ;
 Roof, walls, and floor were all of marble stone,
 Of polished marble, black as funeral pall,
 Carved o'er with signs and characters unknown.
 A paly light, as of the dawning, shone
 Through the sad bounds, but whence they could not spy—
 For window to the upper air was none—
 Yet, by that light, Don Roderick could descry
 Wonders that ne'er till then were seen by mortal eye.

XIV.

Grim sentinels, against the upper wall,
 Of molten bronze, two Statues held their place ;
 Massive their naked limbs, their stature tall,
 Their frowning foreheads golden circlets grace.
 Moulded they seemed for kings of giant race
 That lived and sinned before the avenging Flood :
 This grasped a scythe, that rested on a mace ;
 This spread his wings for flight, that pondering stood ;
 Each stubborn seemed and stern, immutable of mood.

XV.

Fixed was the right-hand Giant's brazen look
 Upon his brother's glass of shifting sand,
 As if its ebb he measured by a book,
 Whose iron volume loaded his huge hand ;
 In which was wrote of many a fallen land,
 Of empires lost, and kings to exile driven :
 And o'er that pair their names in scroll expand—
 " LO, DESTINY and TIME ! to whom by Heaven
 The guidance of the earth is for a season given."

XVI.

Even while they read, the sand-glass wastes away ;
And, as the last and lagging grains did creep,
That right-hand Giant 'gan his club upsway,
As one that startles from a heavy sleep.
Full on the upper wall the mace's sweep
At once descended with the force of thunder,
And hurtling down at once, in crumbled heap,
The marble boundary was rent asunder,
And gave to Roderick's view new sights of fear and wonder.

XVII.

For they might spy, beyond that mighty breach,
Realms as of Spain in visioned prospect laid,
Castles and towers, in due proportion each,
As by some skilful artist's hand portrayed :
Here, crossed by many a wild Sierra's shade,
And boundless plains that tire the traveller's eye ;
There, rich with vineyard and with olive-glade,
Or deep-embrowned by forests huge and high,
Or washed by mighty streams that slowly murmured by.

XVIII.

And here, as erst upon the antique stage
Passed forth the bands of masquers trimly led,
In various forms, and various equipage,
While fitting strains the hearer's fancy fed ;
So, to sad Roderick's eye in order spread,
Successive pageants filled that mystic scene,
Showing the fate of battles ere they bled,
And issue of events that had not been ;
And, ever and anon, strange sounds were heard between.

XIX.

First shrilled an unrepeatd female shriek !—
It seemed as if Don Roderick knew the call,
For the bold blood was blanching in his cheek.—
Then answered kettle-drum and atabal,

Gong-peal and cymbal-clank the ear appal,
 The Tecbir war-cry, and the Lelie's yell,*
 Ring wildly dissonant along the hall.

Needs not to Roderick their dread import tell—
 "The Moor!" he cried, "the Moor!—ring out the tocsin bell!

XX.

"They come! they come! I see the groaning lands
 White with the turbans of each Arab horde;
 Swart Zaarah joins her misbelieving bands,
 Alla and Mahomet their battle-word,
 The choice they yield, the Koran or the sword.—
 See how the Christians rush to arms amain!—
 In yonder shout the voice of conflict roared;
 The shadowy hosts are closing on the plain—
 Now, God and St. Iago strike, for the good cause of Spain!

XXI.

"By Heaven, the Moors prevail! the Christians yield!—
 Their coward leader gives for flight the sign!
 The sceptred craven mounts to quit the field—
 Is not yon steed Orelia?—Yes, 'tis mine! †
 But never was she turned from battle-line;
 Lo! where the recreant spurs o'er stock and stone!—
 Curses pursue the slave and wrath divine!
 Rivers engulf him!"—"Hush!" in shuddering tone
 The Prelate said; "rash Prince, yon visioned form's thine own."

XXII.

Just then, a torrent crossed the flier's course;
 The dangerous ford the Kingly Likeness tried;
 But the deep eddies whelmed both man and horse,
 Swept like benighted peasant down the tide;
 And the proud Moslemah spread far and wide,
 As numerous as their native locust band;
 Berber and Ismael's sons the spoils divide,
 With naked scimitars mete out the land,
 And for their bondsmen base the freeborn natives brand.

* See Note 6. † See Note 7.

XXIII.

Then rose the grated Harem, to enclose
The loveliest maidens of the Christian line ;
Then, menials, to their misbelieving foes
Castile's young nobles held forbidden wine ;
Then, too, the holy Cross, salvation's sign,
By impious hands was from the altar thrown,
And the deep aisles of the polluted shrine
Echoed, for holy hymn and organ tone,
The Santon's frantic dance, the Fakir's gibbering moan.

XXIV.

How fares Don Roderick ?—E'en as one who spies
Flames dart their glare o'er midnight's sable woof,
And hears around his children's piercing cries,
And sees the pale assistants stand aloof ;
While cruel Conscience brings him bitter proof,
His folly, or his crime, has caused his grief ;
And, while above him nods the crumbling roof,
He curses earth and Heaven—himself in chief—
Desperate of earthly aid, despairing Heaven's relief !

XXV.

That scythe-armed Giant turned his fatal glass,
And twilight on the landscape closed her wings ;
Far to Asturian hills the war-sounds pass,
And in their stead rebeck or timbrel rings ;
And to the sound the bell-decked dancer springs,
Bazaars resound as when their marts are met,
In tourney light the Moor his jerrid flings,
And on the land, as evening seemed to set,
The Imaum's chant was heard from mosque or minaret.

XXVI.

So passed that pageant. Ere another came,
The visionary scene was wrapped in smoke,
Whose sulph'rous wreaths were crossed by sheets of flame ;
With every flash a bolt explosive broke,

Till Roderick deemed the fiends had burst their yoke,
 And waved 'gainst heaven the infernal gonfalone !
 For War a new and dreadful language spoke,
 Never by ancient warrior heard or known—
 Lightning and smoke her breath, and thunder was her tone.

XXVII.

From the dim landscape roll the clouds away—
 The Christians have regained their heritage :
 Before the Cross has waned the Crescent's ray,
 And many a monastery decks the stage,
 And lofty church, and low-browed hermitage.
 The land obeys a Hermit and a Knight,—
 The Genii these of Spain for many an age ;
 This clad in sackcloth, that in armour bright,
 And that was VALOUR named, this BIGOTRY was hight.

XXVIII.

VALOUR was harnessed like a Chief of old,
 Armed at all points, and prompt for knightly gest :
 His sword was tempered in the Ebro cold,
 Morena's eagle-plume adorned his crest,
 The spoils of Afric's lion bound his breast.
 Fierce he stepped forward and flung down his gage,
 As if of mortal kind to brave the best.
 Him followed his Companion, dark and sage,
 As he, my Master, sung the dangerous Archimage.

XXIX.

Haughty of heart and brow the Warrior came,
 In look and language proud as proud might be,
 Vaunting his lordship, lineage, fights, and fame,
 Yet was that barefoot Monk more proud than he ;
 And as the ivy climbs the tallest tree,
 So round the loftiest soul his toils he wound,
 And with his spells subdued the fierce and free,
 Till ermined Age, and Youth in arms renowned,
 Honouring his scourge and haircloth, meekly kissed the ground.

XXX.

And thus it chanced that VALOUR, peerless knight,
Who ne'er to King or Kaiser veiled his crest,
Victorious still in bull-feast or in fight,
Since first his limbs with mail he did invest,
Stooped ever to that Anchoret's behest ;
Nor reasoned of the right nor of the wrong,
But at his bidding laid the lance in rest,
And wrought fell deeds the troubled world along,
For he was fierce as brave, and pitiless as strong.

XXXI.

Oft his proud galleys sought some new-found world,
That latest sees the sun, or first the morn ;
Still at that Wizard's feet their spoils he hurled,—
Ingots of ore from rich Potosi borne,
Crowns by Caciques, aigrettes by Omrahs worn,*
Wrought of rare gems, but broken, rent, and foul ;
Idols of gold from heathen temples torn,
Bedabbled all with blood.—With grisly scowl
The Hermit marked the stains, and smiled beneath his cowl.

XXXII.

Then did he bless the offering, and bade make
Tribute to Heaven of gratitude and praise ;
And at his word the choral hymns awake,
And many a hand the silver censer sways.
But with the incense-breath these censers raise
Mix steams from corpses smouldering in the fire ;
The groans of prisoned victims mar the lays,
And shrieks of agony confound the quire,
While, 'mid the mingled sounds, the darkened scenes expire.

XXXIII.

Preluding light, were strains of music heard,
As once again revolved that measured sand ;
Such sounds as when, for silvan dance prepared,
Gay Xeres summons forth her vintage band ;

* Caciques...Omrahs, Peruvian and Mexican chiefs.

When for the light bolero ready stand
 The mozo blithe, with gay muchacha met ; *
 He conscious of his broidered cap and band,
 She of her netted locks and light corsette,
 Each tiptoe perched to spring, and shake the castanet.

XXXIV.

And well such strains the opening scene became ;
 For VALOUR had relaxed his ardent look,
 And at a lady's feet, like lion tame,
 Lay stretched, full loath the weight of arms to brook
 And softened BIGOTRY, upon his book,
 Pattered a task of little good or ill :
 But the blithe peasant plied his pruning-hook,
 Whistled the muleteer o'er vale and hill,
 And rung from village green the merry segnidille.

XXXV.

Grey Royalty; grown impotent of toil,
 Let the grave sceptre slip his lazy hold,
 And, careless, saw his rule become the spoil
 Of a loose Female and her minion bold :
 But peace was on the cottage and the fold,
 From court intrigue, from bickering faction far ;
 Beneath the chestnut-tree Love's tale was told ;
 And to the tinkling of the light guitar,
 Sweet stooped the western sun, sweet rose the evening star.

XXXVI.

As that sea-cloud, in size like human hand,
 When first from Carmel by the Tishbite seen,
 Came slowly overshadowing Israel's land,
 Awhile, perchance, bedecked with colours sheen,
 While yet the sunbeams on its skirts had been,
 Limning with purple and with gold its shroud,
 Till darker folds obscured the blue serene,
 And blotted heaven with one broad sable cloud—
 Then sheeted rain burst down, and whirlwinds howled aloud ;—

* See Note 8.

XXXVII.

Even so, upon that peaceful scene was poured,
Like gathering clouds, full many a foreign band,
And HE, their Leader, wore in sheath his sword,
And offered peaceful front and open hand,
Veiling the perjured treachery he planned
By friendship's zeal and honour's specious guise,
Until he won the passes of the land ;
Then burst were honour's oath and friendship's ties !
He clutched his vulture-grasp, and called fair Spain his prize.

XXXVIII.

An Iron Crown his anxious forehead bore ;
And well such diadem his heart became,
Who ne'er his purpose for remorse gave o'er,
Or checked his course for piety or shame ;
Who, trained a soldier, deemed a soldier's fame
Might flourish in the wreath of battles won,
Though neither truth nor honour decked his name ;
Who, placed by fortune on a Monarch's throne,
Recked not of Monarch's faith or Mercy's kingly tone.

XXXIX.

From a rude isle his ruder lineage came :
The spark that, from a suburb hovel's hearth
Ascending, wraps some capital in flame,
Hath not a meaner or more sordid birth.
And for the soul that bade him waste the earth—
The sable land-flood from some swamp obscure,
That poisons the glad husband-field with dearth,
And by destruction bids its fame endure,
Hath not a source more sullen, stagnant, and impure.

XL.

Before that Leader strode a shadowy Form :
Her limbs like mist, her torch like meteor showed,
With which she beckoned him through fight and storm,
And all he crushed that crossed his desperate road,

Nor thought, nor feared, nor looked on what he trode ;
 Realms could not glut his pride, blood could not slake,
 So oft as e'er she shook her torch abroad—
 It was AMBITION bade his terrors wake,
 Nor deigned she, as of yore, a milder form to take.

XLI.

No longer now she spurned at mean revenge,
 Or stayed her hand for conquered foeman's moan ;
 As when, the fates of aged Rome to change,
 By Cæsar's side she crossed the Rubicon.
 Nor joyed she to bestow the spoils she won,
 As when the banded powers of Greece were tasked
 To war beneath the Youth of Macedon :
 No seemly veil her modern minion asked ;
 He saw her hideous face, and loved the fiend unmasked.

XLII.

That Prelate marked his march—on banners blazed
 With battles won in many a distant land,
 On eagle-standards and on arms he gazed.
 "And hop'st thou, then," he said, "thy power shall stand?
 O thou hast builded on the shifting sand,
 And thou hast tempered it with slaughter's flood ;
 And know, fell scourge in the Almighty's hand !
 Gore-moistened trees shall perish in the bud,
 And, by a bloody death, shall die the Man of Blood !"

XLIII.

The ruthless Leader beckoned from his train
 A wan fraternal Shade, and bade him kneel,
 And paled his temples with the crown of Spain,
 While trumpets rang, and heralds cried, "Castile !"*
 Not that he loved him—no !—in no man's weal,
 Scarce in his own, e'er joyed that sullen heart ;
 Yet round that throne he bade his warriors wheel,
 That the poor Puppet might perform his part,
 And be a sceptred slave, at his stern beck to start.

* See Note 9.

XLIV.

But on the Natives of that Land misused
Not long the silence of amazement hung,
Nor brooked they long their friendly faith abused ;
For, with a common shriek, the general tongue
Exclaimed, "To arms !" and fast to arms they sprung.
And VALOUR woke, that Genius of the Land !
Pleasure, and ease, and sloth aside he flung,
As burst the awakening Nazarite his band,
When 'gainst his treacherous foes he clenched his dreadful hand.*

XLV.

That Mimic Monarch now cast anxious eye
Upon the Satraps that begirt him round ;
Now doffed his royal robe in act to fly,
And from his brow the diadem unbound.
So oft, so near the Patriot bugle wound,
From Tarick's walls to Bilboa's mountains blown,
These martial satellites hard labour found
To guard awhile his substituted throne—
Light recking of his cause, but battling for their own.

XLVI.

From Alpuhara's peak that bugle rung,
And it was echoed from Corunna's wall ;
Stately Seville responsive war-shout flung,
Grenada caught it in her Moorish hall ;
Galicia bade her children fight or fall,
Wild Biscay shook his mountain-coronet,
Valencia roused her at the battle-call,
And, foremost still where Valour's sons are met,
First started to his gun each fiery Miquelet.

XLVII.

But unappalled, and burning for the fight,
The Invaders march, of victory secure ;
Skilful their force to sever or unite,
And trained alike to vanquish or endure.

* See Judges xv. 9-16.

Nor skilful less, cheap conquest to ensure,
 Discord to breathe and jealousy to sow,
 To quell by boasting, and by bribes to lure ;
 While nought against them bring the unpractised foe,
 Save hearts for Freedom's cause, and hands for Freedom's blow.

XLVIII.

Proudly they march—but oh ! they march not forth
 By one hot field to crown a brief campaign,
 As when their Eagles, sweeping through the North,
 Destroyed at every stoop an ancient reign !
 Far other fate had Heaven decreed for Spain :
 In vain the steel, in vain the torch was plied,
 New Patriot armies started from the slain ;
 High blazed the war, and long, and far, and wide,*
 And oft the God of Battles blessed the righteous side.

XLIX.

Nor unatoned, where Freedom's foes prevail,
 Remained their savage waste : with blade and brand,
 By day the Invaders ravaged hill and dale ;
 But, with the darkness, the Guerilla band
 Came like night's tempest, and avenged the land,
 And claimed for blood the retribution due,
 Probed the hard heart and lopped the murderous hand ;
 And Dawn, when o'er the scene her beams she threw,
 'Midst ruins they had made, the spoilers' corpses knew.

L.

What minstrel verse may sing, or tongue may tell,
 Amid the visioned^d strife from sea to sea,
 How oft the Patriot banners rose or fell,
 Still honoured^d in defeat as victory !
 For that sad pageant of events to be,
 Showed every form of fight by field and flood ;
 Slaughter and Ruin, shouting forth their glee,
 Beheld, while riding on the tempest-scud,
 The waters choked with slain, the earth bedrenched with blood !

* See Note 10.

LI.

Then Zaragoza---blighted be the tongue
That names thy name without the honour due !
For never hath the harp of Minstrel rung
Of faith so felly proved, so firmly true !
Mine, sap, and bomb thy shattered ruins knew,
Each art of war's extremity had room,
'Twice from thy half-sacked streets the foe withdrew,
And when at length stern Fate decreed thy doom,
They won not Zaragoza, but her children's bloody tomb.*

LII.

Yet raise thy head, sad city ! Though in chains;
Enthralled thou canst not be ! Arise and claim
Reverence from every heart where Freedom reigns,
For what thou worshippest !---thy sainted dame,
She of the Column, honoured be her name,
By all, whate'er their creed, who honour love !
And like the sacred relics of the flame,
That gave some martyr to the bless'd above,
To every loyal heart may thy sad embers prove !

LIII.

Nor thine alone such wreck. Gerona fair !
Faithful to death thy heroes should be sung,
Manning the towers while o'er their heads the air
Swart as the smoke from raging furnace hung ;
Now thicker dark'ning where the mine was sprung,
Now briefly lightened by the cannon's flare,
Now arched with fire-sparks as the bomb was flung,
And redd'ning now with conflagration's glare,
While by the fatal light the foes for storm prepare.

LIV.

While all around was danger, strife, and fear,
While the earth shook, and darkened was the sky,
And wide Destruction stunned the listening ear,
Appalled the heart, and stupefied the eye,---

* See Note II.

Afar was heard that thrice-repeated cry,
In which old Albion's heart and tongue unite,
Whene'er her soul is up and pulse beats high,
Whether it hail the wine-cup or the fight,
And bid each arm be strong, or bid each heart be light.

LV.

Don Roderick turned him as the shout grew loud—
A varied scene the changeful vision showed ;
For where the ocean mingled with the cloud,
A gallant navy stemmed the billows broad.
From mast and stern St. George's symbol flowed,
Blent with the silver cross to Scotland dear ;
Mottling the sea their landward barges rowed,
And flashed the sun on bayonet, brand, and spear,
And the wild beach returned the seaman's jovial cheer.

LVI.

It was a dread yet spirit-stirring sight !
The billows foamed beneath a thousand oars,
Fast as they land the red-cross ranks unite,
Legions on legions brightening all the shores.
Then banners rise, and cannon-signal roars,
Then peals the warlike thunder of the drum,
Thrills the loud fife, the trumpet-flourish pours,
And patriot hopes awake, and doubts are dumb,
For, bold in Freedom's cause, the bands of Ocean come !

LVII.

A various host they came, whose ranks display
Each mode in which the warrior meets the fight :
The deep battalion locks its firm array,
And meditates his aim the marksman light ;
Far glance the lines of sabres flashing bright,
Where mounted squadrons shake the echoing mead ;
Lacks not artillery breathing flame and night,
Nor the fleet ordnance whirled by rapid steed,
That rivals lightning's flash in ruin and in speed.

LVIII.

A various host—from kindred realms they came,
Brethren in arms, but rivals in renown.
For yon fair bands shall merry England claim,
And with their deeds of valour deck her crown.
Hers their bold port, and hers their martial frown,
And hers their scorn of death in Freedom's cause,
Their eyes of azure, and their locks of brown,
And the blunt speech that bursts without a pause,
And freeborn thoughts, which league the Soldier with the Laws.

LIX.

And oh ! loved warriors of the Minstrel's land !
Yonder your bonnets nod, your tartans wave.
The rugged form may mark the mountain band,
And harsher features, and a mien more grave ;
But ne'er in battlefield throbbed heart so brave
As that which beats beneath the Scottish plaid ;
And when the pibroch bids the battle rave,
And level for the charge your arms are laid,
Where lives the desperate foe that for such onset staid !

LX.

Hark ! from yon stately ranks what laughter rings,
Mingling wild mirth with war's stern minstrelsy,
His jest while each blithe comrade round him flings,
And moves to death with military glee :
Boast, Erin, boast them ! tameless, frank, and free,
In kindness warm, and fierce in danger known,
Rough Nature's children, humorous as she :
And HE, yon Chieftain—strike the proudest tone
Of thy bold harp, green Isle !—the Hero is thine own.

LXI.

Now on the scene Vimeira should be shown,
On Talavera's fight should Roderick gaze,
And hear Corunna wail her battle won,
And see Busaco's crest with lightning blaze.

But shall fond fable mix with heroes' praise?

Hath Fiction's stage for Truth's long triumphs room?

And dare her wild-flowers mingle with the bays,

That claim a long eternity to bloom

Around the warrior's crest and o'er the warrior's tomb!

LXII.

Or may I give adventurous Fancy scope,

And stretch a bold hand to the awful veil

That hides futurity from anxious hope,

Bidding beyond it scenes of glory hail,

And painting Europe rousing at the tale

Of Spain's invaders from her confines hurled,

While kindling nations buckle on their mail,

And Fame, with clarion blast and wings unfurled,

To Freedom and Revenge awakes an injured World?

LXIII.

O vain, though anxious, is the glance I cast,

Since Fate has marked futurity her own:—

Yet Fate resigns to Worth the glorious past,

The deeds recorded and the laurels won.

Then, though the Vault of Destiny* be gone,

King, Prelate, all the phantasms of my brain,

Melted away like mist-wreaths in the sun,

Yet grant for faith, for valour, and for Spain,

One note of pride and fire, a Patriot's parting strain!

CONCLUSION.

I.

“Who shall command Estrella's mountain-tide

Back to the source, when tempest-chafed, to hie?

Who, when Gascogne's yexed gulf is raging wide,

Shall hush it as a nurse her infant's cry?

* See Note 12.

His magic power let such vain boaster try;
And when the torrent shall his voice obey,
And Biscay's whirlwinds list his lullaby,
Let him stand forth and bar mine eagles' way,
And they shall heed his voice, and at his bidding stay.

II.

"Else, ne'er to stoop till high on Lisbon's towers
They close their wings, the symbol of our yoke,
And their own sea hath whelmed yon red-cross Powers!"
Thus, on the summit of Alverca's rock,
To Marshal, Duke, and Peer, Gaul's Leader spoke.
While downward on the land his legions press:
Before them it was rich with vine and flock,
And smiled like Eden in her summer dress;
Behind their wasteful march, a reeking wilderness.*

III.

And shall the boastful Chief maintain his word,
Though Heaven hath heard the wailings of the land
Though Lusitania whet her vengeful sword,
Though Britons arm, and WELLINGTON command!
No! grim Busaco's iron ridge shall stand
An adamantine barrier to his force;
And from its base shall wheel his shattered band,
As from the unshaken rock the torrent hoarse,
Bears off its broken waves, and seeks a devious course.

IV.

Yet not because Alcoba's mountain-hawk
Hath on his best and bravest made her food,
In numbers confident, yon Chief shall balk
His Lord's imperial thirst for spoil and blood:
For full in view the promised conquest stood,
And Lisbon's matrons, from their walls, might stun
The myriads that had half the world subdued,
And hear the distant thunders of the drum:
That bids the band of France to storm and havoc come.

* See Note 13.

V.

Four moons have heard these thunders idly rolled,
 Have seen these wistful myriads eye their prey,
 As famished wolves survey a guarded fold—
 But in the middle path a Lion lay !
 At length they move—but not to battle-fray,
 Nor blaze yon fires where meets the manly fight ;
 Beacons of infamy, they light the way
 Where cowardice and cruelty unite
 To damn with double shame their ignominious flight !

VI. Don Roderick's Address

O triumph for the fiends of Lust and Wrath !
 Ne'er to be told, yet ne'er to be forgot,
 What wanton horrors marked their wreckful path !
 The peasant butchered in his ruined cot,
 The hoary priest even at the altar shot,
 Childhood and age given o'er to sword and flame,
 Woman to infamy ;—no crime forgot,
 By which inventive demons might proclaim
 Immortal hate to man, and scorn of God's great name !

VII.

The rudest sentinel, in Britain born,
 With horror paused to view the havoc done,
 Gave his poor crust to feed some wretch forlorn,*
 Wiped his stern eye, then fiercer grasped his gun.
 Nor with less zeal shall Britain's peaceful son
 Exult the debt of sympathy to pay ;
 Riches nor poverty the tax shall shun,
 Nor prince nor peer, the wealthy nor the gay,
 Nor the poor peasant's mite, nor bard's more worthless lay.

VIII.

But thou—unfoughten wilt thou yield to Fate,
 Minion of Fortune, now miscalled in vain !
 Can vantage-ground no confidence create,
 Marcella's pass, nor Guarda's mountain-chain ?

* See Note 14.

Vainglorious fugitive ! * yet turn again !

Behold, where, named by some prophetic Seer,
Flows Honour's Fountain, † as foredoomed the stain
From thy dishonoured name and arms to clear—
Fallen Child of Fortune, turn, redeem her favour here !

IX.

Yet, ere thou turn'st, collect each distant aid—
Those chief that never heard the Lion roar !
Within whose souls lives not a trace portrayed,
Of Talavera, or Mondego's shore !
Marshal each band thou hast, and summon more ;
Of war's fell stratagems exhaust the whole ;
Rank upon rank, squadron on squadron pour,
Legion on legion on thy foeman roll,
And weary out his arm—thou canst not quell his soul.

X.

O vainly gleams with steel Agueda's shore,
Vainly thy squadrons hide Assuava's plain,
And front the flying thunders as they roar,
With frantic charge, and tenfold odds, in vain ! ‡
And what avails thee that, for CAMERON slain,
Wild from his plaided ranks the yell was given—§
Vengeance and grief gave mountain rage the rein,
And, at the bloody spear-point headlong driven,
The Despot's giant guards fled like the rack of heaven.

XI.

Go, baffled boaster ! teach thy haughty mood
To plead at thine imperious master's throne !
Say thou hast left his legions in their blood,
Deceived his hopes, and frustrated thine own ;
Say that thine utmost skill and valour shown,
By British skill and valour were outvied ;
Last say thy conqueror was WELLINGTON !
And if he chafe, be his own fortune tried—
God and our cause to friend, the venture we'll abide.

* See Note 15.

† The literal translation of Fuentes d' Honoro.

‡ See Note 16.

§ See Note 17.

XII.

But you, ye heroes of that well-fought day,
 How shall a bard, unknowing and unknown,
 His meed to each victorious leader pay,
 Or bind on every brow the laurels won?
 Yet fain my harp would wake its boldest tone,
 O'er the wide sea to hail CADOGAN brave;
 And he, perchance, the minstrel note might own,
 Mindful of meeting brief that Fortune gave
 'Mid yon far western isles that hear the Atlantic rave.

XIII.

Yes! hard the task, when Britons wield the sword,
 To give each Chief and every field its fame:
 Hark! Albuera thunders BERESFORD,
 And Red Barrosa shouts for dauntless GRÆME!
 O for a verse of tumult and of flame,
 Bold as the bursting of their cannon sound,
 To bid the world re-echo to their fame!
 For never, upon gory battle-ground,
 With conquest's well-bought wreath were braver victors crowned!

XIV.

O who shall grudge him Albuera's bays,
 Who brought a race regenerate to the field,
 Roused them to emulate their fathers' praise,
 Tempered their headlong rage, their courage steeled,
 And raised fair Lusitania's fallen shield,*
 And gave new edge to Lusitania's sword,
 And taught her sons forgotten arms to wield—
 Shivered my harp, and burst its every chord,
 If it forgot thy worth, victorious BERESFORD!

XV.

Not on that bloody field of battle won,
 Though Gaul's proud legions rolled like mist away,
 Was half his self-devoted valour shown,—
 He gaged but life on that illustrious day;

* See Note 18.

But when he toiled those squadrons to array,
Who fought like Britons in the bloody game,
Sharper than Polish pike or assagay,
He braved the shafts of censure and of shame,
And, dearer far than life, he pledged a soldier's fame.

XVI.

Nor be his praise o'erpassed who strove to hide
Beneath the warrior's vest affection's wound,
Whose wish Heaven for his country's weal denied ;
Danger and fate he sought, but glory found.
From clime to clime, where'er war's trumpets sound,
The wanderer went ; yet, Caledonia ! still
Thine was his thought in march and tented ground ,
He dreamed 'mid Alpine cliffs of Athole's hill,
And heard in Ebro's roar his Lyndoch's lovely rill.

XVII.

O hero of a race renowned of old,
Whose war-cry oft has waked the battle-swell,
Since first distinguished in the onset bold,
Wild sounding when the Roman rampart fell !
By Wallace' side it rung the Southron's knell ;
Alderne, Kilsythe, and Tibber owned its fame ;
Tummell's rude pass can of its terrors tell :
But ne'er from prouder field arose the name,
Than when wild Ronda learned the conquering shout of GRÆME ! *

XVIII.

But all too long, through seas unknown and dark
(With Spenser's parable I close my tale),
By shoal and rock hath steered my venturous bark ;
And landward now I drive before the gale.
And now the blue and distant shore I hail,
And nearer now I see the port expand ;
And now I gladly furl my weary sail,
And, as the prow light touches on the strand,
I strike my red-cross flag, and bind my skiff to land.

THIS POEM,

THE SCENE OF WHICH IS LAID IN HIS BEAUTIFUL
DEMESNE OF ROKEBY,

IS INSCRIBED,

IN TOKEN OF SINCERE FRIENDSHIP.

ADVERTISEMENT TO FIRST EDITION, 1813.

THE Scene of this Poem is laid at Rokeby, near Greta Bridge, in Yorkshire, and shifts to the adjacent fortress of Barnard Castle, and to other places in that vicinity.

The Time occupied by the Action is a space of Five Days, Three of which are supposed to elapse between the end of the Fifth and the beginning of the Sixth Canto.

The date of the supposed events is immediately subsequent to the great battle of Marston Moor, July 3, 1644. This period of public confusion has been chosen, without any purpose of combining the Fable with the Military or Political Events of the Civil War, but only as affording a degree of probability to the Fictitious Narrative now presented to the Public.

ROKBY.

CANTO FIRST.

I.

THE Moon is in her summer glow,
But hoarse and high the breezes blow,
And, racking o'er her face, the cloud
Varies the tincture of her shroud ;
On Barnard's towers, and Tees's stream,*
She changes as a guilty dream,
When conscience, with remorse and fear,
Goads sleeping Fancy's wild career.
Her light seems now the blush of shame,
Seems now fierce anger's darker flame,
Shifting that shade, to come and go,
Like apprehension's hurried glow ;
Then sorrow's livery dims the air,
And dies in darkness, like despair.
Such varied hues the warder sees
Reflected from the woodland Tees ;
Then from old Baliol's tower looks forth,
Sees the clouds mustering in the north,
Hears upon turret-roof and wall,
By fits, the plashing rain-drop fall,
Lists to the breeze's boding sound,
And wraps his shaggy mantle round.

II.

Those towers, which in the changeful gleam
Throw murky shadows on the stream—

* See Note 1.

Those towers of Barnard hold a guest,
The emotions of whose troubled breast,
In wild and strange confusion driven,
Rival the flitting rack of heaven.
Ere sleep stern OSWALD's senses tied,
Oft had he changed his weary side,
Composed his limbs, and vainly sought
By effort strong to banish thought.
Sleep came at length, but with a train
Of feelings true and fancies vain,
Mingling, in wild disorder cast,
The expected future with the past.
Conscience, anticipating time,
Already rues the enacted crime,
And calls her furies forth, to shake
The sounding scourge and hissing snake ;
While her poor victim's outward throes
Bear witness to his mental woes,
And show what lesson may be read
Beside a sinner's restless bed.

III.

Thus Oswald's labouring feelings trace
Strange changes in his sleeping face,
Rapid and ominous as these
With which the moonbeams tinge the Tees.
There might be seen of shame the blush ;
There anger's dark and fiercer flush ;
While the perturbed sleeper's hand
Seemed grasping dagger-knife or brand.
Relaxed that grasp, the heavy sigh,
The tear in the half-opening eye,
The pallid cheek and brow, confessed
That grief was busy in his breast.
Nor paused that mood—a sudden start
Impelled the life-blood from the heart ;
Features convulsed, and mutterings dread,
Show terror reigns in sorrow's stead.
That pang the painful slumber broke,
And Oswald, with a start, awoke.

IV.

He woke, and feared again to close
His eyelids in such dire repose ;
He woke—to watch the lamp, and tell
From hour to hour the castle-bell,
Or listen to the owl's cry,
Or the sad breeze that whistles by,
Or catch, by fits, the tuneless rhyme
With which the warder cheats the time,
And envying think how, when the sun
Bids the poor soldier's watch be done,
Couched on his straw, and fancy free,
He sleeps like careless infancy.

V.

Far townward sounds a distant tread,
And Oswald, starting from his bed,
Hath caught it, though no human ear,
Unsharpened by revenge and fear,
Could e'er distinguish horse's clank *
Until it reached the castle-bank.
Now nigh and plain the sound appears ;
The warder's challenge now he hears ;
Then clanking chains and levers tell
That o'er the moat the drawbridge fell,
And, in the castle-court below,
Voices are heard, and torches glow,
As marshalling the stranger's way
Straight for the room where Oswald lay ;
The cry was,—“ Tidings from the host,
Of weight—a messenger comes post.”
Stifling the tumult of his breast,
His answer Oswald thus expressed—
“ Bring food and wine, and trim the fire ;
Admit the stranger, and retire.”

. VI.

The stranger came with heavy stride,
The morion's plumes his visage hide,

* See Note 2:

And the buff-coat, in ample fold,
Mantles his form's gigantic mould.*
Full slender answer deignèd he
To Oswald's anxious courtesy,
But marked, by a disdainful smile,
He saw and scorned the petty wile,
When Oswald changed the torch's place,
Anxious that on the soldier's face
Its partial lustre might be thrown,
To show his looks, yet hide his own.
His guest, the while, laid low aside
The ponderous cloak of tough bull's hide,
And to the torch glanced broad and clear
The corselet of a cuirassier ;
Then from his brows the casque he drew,
And from the dank plume dashed the dew ;
From gloves of mail relieved his hands,
And spread them to the kindling brands ;
And, turning to the genial board,
Without a health, or pledge, or word
Of meet and social reverence said,
Deeply he drank, and fiercely fed—
As free from ceremony's sway,
As famished wolf that tears his prey.

VII.

With deep impatience, tinged with fear,
His host beheld him gorge his cheer,
And quaff the full carouse, that lent
His brow a fiercer hardiment.
Now Oswald stood a space aside,
Now paced the room with hasty stride,
In feverish agony to learn
Tidings of deep and dread concern,
Cursing each moment that his guest
Protracted o'er his ruffian feast.
Yet, viewing with alarm, at last,
The end of that uncouth repast,

* See Note 3.

Almost he seemed their haste to rue,
As, at his sign, his train withdrew,
And left him with the stranger, free
To question of his mystery.
Then did his silence long proclaim
A struggle between fear and shame.

VIII.

Much in the stranger's mien appears
To justify suspicious fears.
On his dark face a scorching clime,
And toil, had done the work of time—
Roughened the brow, the temples bared,
And sable hairs with silver shared ;
Yet left—what age alone could tame—
The lip of pride, the eye of flame,
The full-drawn lip that upward curled,
The eye that seemed to scorn the world.
That lip had terror never blenched ;
Ne'er in that eye had teardrop quenched
The flash severe of swarthy glow,
That mocked at pain, and knew not woe.
Inured to danger's direst form,
Tornade and earthquake, flood and storm,
Death had he seen by sudden blow,
By wasting plague, by tortures slow,*
By mine or breach, by steel or ball,
Knew all his shapes, and scorned them all.

IX.

But yet, though BERTRAM's hardened look,
Unmoved, could blood and danger brook,
Still worse than apathy had place
On his swart brow and callous face ;
For evil passions, cherished long,
Had ploughed them with impressions strong.
All that gives gloss to sin, all gay
Light folly, passed with youth away ;

* See Note 4.

But rooted stood, in manhood's hour,
The weeds of vice without their flower.
And yet the soil in which they grew,
Had it been tamed when life was new,
Had depth and vigour to bring forth
The hardier fruits of virtuous worth.
Not that, e'en then, his heart had known
The gentler feelings' kindly tone ;
But lavish waste had been refined
To bounty in his chastened mind,
And lust of gold, that waste to feed,
Been lost in love of glory's meed,
And, frantic then no more, his pride
Had ta'en fair virtue for its guide.

x.

Even now, by conscience unrestrained,
Clogged by gross vice, by slaughter stained,
Still knew his daring soul to soar,
And mastery o'er the mind he bore ;
For meaner guilt, or heart less hard,
Quailed beneath Bertram's bold regard.
And this felt Oswald, while in vain
He strove, by many a winding train,
To lure his sullen guest to show,
Unasked, the news he longed to know,
While on far other subject hung
His heart, than faltered from his tongue.
Yet nought for that his guest did deign
To note or spare his secret pain,
But still, in stern and stubborn sort,
Returned him answer dark and short,
Or started from the theme, to range
In loose digression wild and strange,
And forced the embarrassed host to buy,
By query close, direct reply.

xi.

Awhile he glozed upon the cause
Of Commons, Covenant, and Laws,

And Church Reformed—but felt rebuke
 Beneath grim Bertram's sneering look.
 Then stammered—"Has a field been fought?
 Has Bertram news of battle brought?
 For sure a soldier, famed so far
 In foreign fields for feats of war,
 On eve of fight ne'er left the host,
 Until the field were won and lost."—
 "Here, in your towers by circling Tees,
 You, Oswald Wycliffe, rest at ease;
 Why deem it strange that others come
 To share such safe and easy home,
 From fields where danger, death, and toil,
 Are the reward of civil broil?"—
 "Nay, mock not, friend! since well we know
 The near advances of the foe,
 To mar our northern army's work,
 Encamped before beleaguered York;
 Thy horse with valiant Fairfax lay,
 And must have fought—how went the day?"—

XII.

"Wouldst hear the tale?—On Marston heath
 Met, front to front, the ranks of death;*
 Flourished the trumpets fierce, and now
 Fired was each eye and flushed each brow;
 On either side loud clamours ring,
 'God and the Cause!'—'God and the King!'
 Right English all, they rushed to blows,
 With nought to win and all to lose.
 I could have laughed—but lacked the time—
 To see, in phrenesy sublime,
 How the fierce zealots fought and bled,
 For king or state, as humour led;
 Some for a dream of public good,
 Some for church tippet, gown, and hood,
 Draining their veins, in death to claim
 A patriot's or a martyr's name.—

[* See Note 5.

Led Bertram Risingham the hearts
 That countered there on adverse parts ;
 No superstitious fool had I
 Sought El Dorados in the sky !
 Chili had heard me through her states,
 And Lima oped her silver gates,
 Rich Mexico I had marched through,
 And sacked the splendours of Peru,
 Till sunk Pizarro's daring name,
 And, Cortez, thine, in Bertram's fame."—
 "Still from the purpose wilt thou stray !
 Good gentle friend, how went the day ?"—

XIII.

"Good am I deemed at trumpet-sound,
 And good where goblets dance the round,
 Though gentle ne'er was joined, till now,
 With rugged Bertram's breast and brow.
 But I resume :—The battle's rage
 Was like the strife which currents wage
 Where Orinoco, in his pride,
 Rolls to the main no tribute tide,
 But 'gainst broad ocean urges far
 A rival sea of roaring war ;
 While, in ten thousand eddies driven,
 The billows fling their foam to heaven,
 And the pale pilot seeks in vain
 Where rolls the river, where the main.
 Even thus, upon the bloody field,
 The eddying tides of conflict wheeled
 Ambiguous, till that heart of flame,
 Hot Rupert, on our squadrons came,
 Hurling against our spears a line
 Of gallants fiery as their wine ;
 Then ours, though stubborn in their zeal,
 In zeal's despite began to reel.
 What wouldst thou more ?—in tumult tossed,
 Our leaders fell, our ranks were lost.
 A thousand men, who drew the sword
 For both the Houses and the Word,

Preached forth from hamlet, grange, and down,
To curb the crosier and the crown,
Now, stark and stiff, lie stretched in gore,
And ne'er shall rail at mitre more.—
Thus fared it, when I left the fight,
With the good Cause and Commons' right.”—

XIV.

“Disastrous news!” dark Wycliffe said;
Assumed despondence bent his head,
While troubled joy was in his eye,
The well-feigned sorrow to belie.—
“Disastrous news!—when needed most,
Told ye not that your chiefs were lost?
Complete the woeful tale, and say,
Who fell upon that fatal day;
What leaders of repute and name
Bought by their death a deathless fame.
If such my direst foeman's doom,
My tears shall dew his honoured tomb.—
No answer?—Friend, of all our host,
Thou knowst whom I should hate the most;
Whom thou too, once, were wont to hate,
Yet leavest me doubtful of his fate.”
With look unmoved,—“Of friend or foe,
Aught,” answered Bertram, “wouldst thou know,
Demand in simple terms and plain,
A soldier's answer shalt thou gain;
For question dark, or riddle high,
I have nor judgment nor reply.”

XV.

The wrath his art and fear suppressed
Now blazed at once in Wycliffe's breast;
And brave, from man so meanly born,
Roused his hereditary scorn:
“Wretch! hast thou paid thy bloody debt?
PHILIP OF MORTHAM, lives he yet?
False to thy patron or thine oath,
Trait'rous or perjured, one or both,

Slave ! hast thou kept thy promise plight,
 To slay thy leader in the fight ?"—
 Then from his seat the soldier sprung,
 And Wycliffe's hand he strongly wrung ;
 His grasp, as hard as glove of mail,
 Forced the red blood-drop from the nail—
 "A health !" he cried ; and, ere he quaffed,
 Flung from him Wycliffe's hand, and laughed.
 "Now, Oswald Wycliffe, speaks thy heart !
 Now play'st thou well thy genuine part !
 Worthy, but for thy craven fear,
 Like me to roam a bucanier.
 What reck'st thou of the Cause divine,
 If Mortham's wealth and lands be thine ?
 What car'st thou for beleaguered York,
 If this good hand have done its work ?
 Or what, though Fairfax and his best
 Are reddening Marston's swarthy breast,
 If Philip Mortham with them lie,
 Lending his life-blood to the dye ?—
 Sit, then ! and as 'mid comrades free
 Carousing after victory,
 When tales are told of blood and fear,
 That boys and women shrink to hear,
 From point to point I frankly tell
 The deed of death as it befell.

XVI.

"When purposed vengeance I forego,
 Term me a wretch, nor deem me foe ;
 And when an insult I forgive,
 Then brand me as a slave, and live !—
 Philip of Mortham is with those Whom Bertram Risingham calls foes ;
 Or whom more sure revenge attends,
 If numbered with ungrateful friends.
 As was his wont, ere battle glowed,
 Along the marshalled ranks he rode,
 And wore his vizor up the while.
 I saw his melancholy smile,

When, full opposed in front, he knew '
Where ROKEBY's kindred banner flew.
'And thus,' he said, 'will friends divide!'—
I heard, and thought how, side by side,
We two had turned the battle's tide
In many a well-debated field,
Where Bertram's breast was Philip's shield.
I thought on Darien's deserts pale,
Where death bestrides the evening gale,
How o'er my friend my cloak I threw,
And fenceless faced the deadly dew ;
I thought on Quariana's cliff,
Where, rescued from our foundering skiff,
Through the white breakers' wrath I bore
Exhausted Mortham to the shore ;
And when his side an arrow found,
I sucked the Indian's venom'd wound.
These thoughts like torrents rushed along,
To sweep away my purpose strong.

XVII.

"Hearts are not flint, and flints are rent ;
Hearts are not steel, and steel is bent.
When Mortham bade me, as of yore,
Be near him in the battle's roar,
I scarcely saw the spears laid low,
I scarcely heard the trumpets blow ;
Lost was the war in inward strife,
Debating Mortham's death or life.
'Twas then I thought, how, lured to come,
As partner of his wealth and home,
Years of piratic wandering o'er,
With him I sought our native shore.
But Mortham's lord grew far estranged
From the bold heart with whom he ranged ;
Doubts, horrors, superstitious fears,
Saddened and dimmed descending years ;
The wily priests their victim sought,
And damned each freeborn deed and thought.

Then must I seek another home,
My license shook his sober dome ;
If gold he gave, in 'one wild day
I revelled thrice the sum away.
An idle outcast then I strayed,
Unfit for tillage or for trade,
Deemed, like the steel of rusted lance,
Useless and dangerous at once.
The women feared my hardy look ;
At my approach the peaceful shook ;
The merchant saw my glance of flame,
And locked his hoards when Bertram came ;
Each child of coward peace kept far
From the neglected son of war.

XVIII.

" But civil discord gave the call,
And made my trade the trade of all.
By Mortham urged, I came again
His vassals to the fight to train.
What guerdon waited on my care ?
I could not cant of creed or prayer ;
Sour fanatics each trust obtained,
And I, dishonoured and disdained,
Gained but the high and happy lot,
In these poor arms to front the shot !—
All this thou know'st, thy gestures tell ;
Yet hear it o'er, and mark it well.
'Tis honour bids me now relate
Each circumstance of Mortham's fate.

XIX.

" Thoughts, from the tongue that slowly part,
Glance quick as lightning through the heart.
As my spur pressed my courser's side,
Philip of Mortham's cause was tried,
And, ere the charging squadrons mixed,
His plea was cast, his doom was fixed.
I watched him through the doubtful fray,
That changed as March's moody day,

Till, like a stream that bursts its bank,
 Fierce Rupert thundered on our flank.
 'Twas then, 'midst tumult, smoke, and strife,
 Where each man fought for death or life—
 'Twas then I fired my petronel,
 And Mortham, steed and rider, fell.
 One dying look he upward cast
 Of wrath and anguish—'twas his last.
 Think not that there I stopped to view
 What of the battle should ensue ;
 But ere I cleared that bloody press,
 Our northern horse ran masterless ;
 Monckton and Mitton told the news,
 How troops of Roundheads choked the Ouse,
 And many a bonny Scot, aghast,
 Spurring his palfrey northward, passed,
 Cursing the day when zeal or meed
 First lured their Lesley o'er the Tweed.*
 Yet when I reached the banks of Swale,
 Had rumour learned another tale ;
 With his barbed horse, fresh tidings say,
 Stout Cromwell has redeemed the day : †
 But whether false the news, or true,
 Oswald, I reckon as light as you."

XX.

Not then by Wycliffe might be shown
 How his pride startled at the tone
 In which his complice, fierce and free,
 Asserted guilt's equality.
 In smoothest terms his speech he wove,
 Of endless friendship, faith, and love ;
 Promised and vowed in courteous sort,—
 But Bertram broke professions short :
 " Wycliffe, be sure not here I stay,
 No, scarcely till the rising day ;
 Warned by the legends of my youth,
 I trust not an associate's truth.

* See Note 6. † See Note 7.

Do not my native dales prolong
 Of Percy Rede the tragic song,
 Trained forward to his bloody fall
 By Girsonfield, that treacherous Hall? *
 Oft, by the Pringle's haunted side,
 The shepherd sees his spectre glide.
 And near the spot that gave me name,
 The moated mound of Risingham,
 Where Reed upon her margin sees
 Sweet Woodburne's cottages and trees,
 Some ancient sculptor's art has shown
 An outlaw's image on the stone ; †
 Unmatched in strength, a giant he,
 With quivered back and kirtled knee.
 Ask how he died, that hunter bold,
 That tameless monarch of the wold,
 And age and infancy can tell,
 By brother's treachery he fell.
 Thus warned by legends of my youth,
 I trust to no associate's truth.

XXI.

“ When last we reasoned of this deed,
 Nought, I bethink me, was agreed,
 Or by what rule, or when, or where,
 The wealth of Mortham we should share :
 Then list, while I the portion name,
 Our differing laws give each to claim.
 Thou, vassal sworn to England's throne,
 Her rules of heritage must own :
 They deal thee, as to nearest heir,
 Thy kinsman's lands and livings fair ;
 And these I yield :—do thou revere
 The statutes of the Bucanier. ‡
 Friend to the sea, and foeman sworn
 To all that on her waves are borne,
 When falls a mate in battle broil,
 His comrade heirs his portioned spoil ;

* See Note 8.

† See Note 9.

‡ See Note 10.

When dies in fight a daring foe,
He claims his wealth who struck the blow :
And either rule to me assigns
Those spoils of Indian seas and mines
Hoarded in Mortham's caverns dark—
Ingot of gold and diamond spark,
Chalice and plate from churches borne,
And gems from shrieking beauty torn,
Each string of pearl, each silver bar,
And all the wealth of western war.
I go to search, where, dark and deep,
Those Transatlantic treasures sleep.
Thou must along—for, lacking thee,
The heir will scarce find entrance free ;
And then farewell !—I haste to try
Each varied pleasure wealth can buy ;
When cloyed each wish, these wars afford
Fresh work for Bertram's restless sword."

XXII.

An undecided answer hung
On Oswald's hesitating tongue.
Despite his craft, he heard with awe
This ruffian stabber fix the law ;
While his own troubled passions veer
Through hatred, joy, regret, and fear :—
Joyed at the soul that Bertram flies,
He grudged the murderer's mighty prize ;
Hated his pride's presumptuous tone ;
And feared to wend with him alone.
At length, that middle course to steer,
To cowardice and craft so dear—
" His charge," he said, " would ill allow
His absence from the fortress now ;
WILFRID on Bertram should attend,
His son should journey with his friend."

XXIII.

Contempt kept Bertram's anger down,
And wreathed to savage smile his frown :

"Wilfrid, or thou—'tis one to me ;
 Whichever bears the golden key ;
 Yet think not but I mark, and smile
 To mark thy poor and selfish wile !
 If injury from me you fear,
 What, Oswald Wycliffe, shields thee here ?
 I've sprung from walls more high than ~~these, armed garrison~~
 I've swum through deeper streams than Tees.
 Might I not stab thee, ere one yell
 Could rouse ~~the~~ distant sentinel ?
 Start not—it is not my design,
 But, if it were, weak fence were thine ;
 And, trust me that, in time of need,
 This hand hath done more desperate deed.
 Go, haste and rouse thy slumbering son ;
 Time calls, and I must needs be gone."

XXIV.

Nought of his sire's ungenerous part
 Polluted Wilfrid's gentle heart—
 A heart too soft from early life
 To hold with fortune needful strife.
 His sire, while yet a hardier race
 Of numerous sons were Wycliffe's grace,
 On Wilfrid set contemptuous brand,
 For feeble heart and forceless hand ;
 But a fond mother's care and joy
 Were centred in her sickly boy.
 No touch of childhood's frolic mood
 Showed the elastic spring of blood ;
 Hour after hour he loved to pore
 On Shakespeare's rich and varied lore ;
 But turned from martial scenes and light,
 From Falstaff's feast and Percy's fight,
 To ponder Jaques's moral strain,
 And muse with Hamlet, wise in vain,
 And weep himself to soft repose
 O'er gentle Desdemona's woes.

XXV.

In youth he sought not pleasures found
 By youth in horse, and hawk, and hound ;
 But loved the quiet joys that wake
 By lonely stream and silent lake ;
 In Deepdale's solitude to lie,
 Where all is cliff, and copse, and sky ;
 To climb Catcastle's dizzy peak,
 Or lone Pendragon's mound to seek.
 Such was his wont ; and there his dream
 Soared on some wild fantastic theme
 Of faithful love, or ceaseless spring,
 Till Contemplation's wearied wing
 The enthusiast could no more sustain,
 And sad he sunk to earth again.

XXVI.

He loved—as many a lay can tell,
 Preserved in Stanmore's lonely dell ;
 For his was minstrel's skill, he caught
 The art unteachable, untaught :
 He loved—his soul did Nature frame
 For love, and fancy nursed the flame :
 Vainly he loved—for seldom swain
 Of such soft mould is loved again :
 Silent he loved—in every gaze
 Was passion, friendship in his phrase.
 So mused his life away—till died
 His brethren all, their father's pride.
 Wilfrid is now the only heir
 Of all his stratagems and care,
 And destined, darkling, to pursue
 Ambition's maze by Oswald's clue.

XXVII.

Wilfrid must love and woo the bright
 Matilda, heir of Rokeby's Knight.
 To love her was an easy hest,
 The secret empress of his breast ;

To woo her was a harder task
To one that durst not hope or ask.
Yet all Matilda could, she gave
In pity to her gentle slave—
Friendship, esteem, and fair regard,
And praise, the poet's best reward ;
She read the tales his taste approved,
And sung the lays he framed or loved.
Yet, loath to nurse the fatal flame
Of hopeless love in friendship's name,
In kind caprice she oft withdrew
The favouring glance to friendship due ;
Then grieved to see her victim's pain,
And gave the dangerous smiles again.

XXVIII.

So did the suit of Wilfrid stand,
When war's loud summons waked the land.
Three banners, floating o'er the Tees,
The woe-foreboding peasant sees.
In concert oft they braved of old
The bordering Scot's incursion bold :
Frowning defiance in their pride,
Their vassals now and lords divide.
From his fair hall on Greta banks
The Knight of Rokeby led his ranks,
To aid the valiant northern Earls
Who drew the sword for royal Charles.
Mortham, by marriage near allied,—
His sister had been Rokeby's bride,
Though long before the civil fray,
In peaceful grave the lady lay,—
Philip of Mortham raised his band,
And marched at Fairfax's command ;
While Wycliffe, bound by many a train
Of kindred art with wily Vane,
Less prompt to brave the bloody field,
Made Barnard's battlements his shield,
Secured them with his Lunedale powers,
And for the Commons held the towers.

XXIX.

The lovely heir of Rokeby's Knight
Waits in his halls the event of fight ;
For England's war revered the claim
Of every unprotected name,
And spared, amid its fiercest rage,
Childhood and womanhood and age.
But Wilfrid, son to Rokeby's foe,
Must the dear privilege forego,
By Greta's side, in evening grey,
To steal upon Matilda's way ;
Striving, with fond hypocrisy,
For careless step and vacant eye,
Calming each anxious look and glance,
To give the meeting all to chance,
Or framing, as a fair excuse,
The book, the pencil, or the muse—
Something to give, to sing, to say,
Some modern tale, some ancient lay.
Then, while the longed-for minutes last,—
Ah! minutes quickly overpast!—
Recording each expression free
Of kind or careless courtesy,
Each friendly look, each softer tone,
As food for fancy when alone.
All this is o'er—but still, unseen,
Wilfrid may lurk in Eastwood green,
To watch Matilda's wonted round,
While springs his heart at every sound.
She comes!—'tis but a passing sight,
Yet serves to cheat his weary night.
She comes not—he will wait the hour,
When her lamp lightens in the tower ;
'Tis something yet, if, as she passed,
Her shade is o'er the lattice cast.
“What is my life, my hope?” he said ;
“Alas! a transitory shade.”

XXX.

Thus wore his life, though Reason strove
For mastery in vain with Love,

Forcing upon his thoughts the sum
 Of present woe and ills to come,
 While still he turned impatient ear
 From Truth's intrusive voice severe ;
 Gentle, indifferent, and subdued,
 In all but this, unmoved he viewed
 Each outward change of ill and good.
 But Wilfrid, docile, soft, and mild,
 Was Fancy's spoiled and wayward child.
 In her bright car she bade him ride,
 With one fair form to grace his side ;
 Or, in some wild and lone retreat,
 Flung her high spells around his seat,
 Bathed in her dews his languid head,
 Her fairy mantle o'er him spread,
 For him her opiates gave to flow,
 Which he who tastes can ne'er forego,
 And placed him in her circle, free
 From every stern reality :
 Till, to the Visionary, seem
 Her day-dreams truth, and truth a dream.

xxxì.

Woe to the youth whom Fancy gains,
 Winning from Reason's hand the reins—
 Pity and woe ! for such a mind
 Is soft, contemplative, and kind.
 And woe to those who train such youth,
 And spare to press the rights of Truth,
 The mind to strengthen and anneal
 While on the stithy glows the steel !
 O teach him, while your lessons last,
 To judge the present by the past ;
 Remind him of each wish pursued—
 How rich it glowed with promised good ;
 Remind him of each wish enjoyed—
 How soon his hopes possession cloyed !
 Tell him we play unequal game,
 Whene'er we shoot by Fancy's aim ;

And, ere he strip him for her race,
Show the conditions of the chase.
Two sisters by the goal are set,
Cold Disappointment and Regret :
One disenchants the winner's eyes,
And strips of all its worth the prize ;
While one augments its gaudy show,
More to enhance the loser's woe.
The victor sees his fairy gold
Transformed, when won, to drossy mold,
But still the vanquished mourns his loss,
And rues, as gold, that glittering dross.

XXXII.

More wouldst thou know : yon tower survey,
Yon couch unpressed since parting day ;
Yon untrimmed lamp, whose yellow gleam
Is mingling with the cold moonbeam ;
And yon thin form !—the hectic red
On his pale cheek unequal spread,
The head reclined, the loosened hair,
The limbs relaxed, the mournful air.
See ! he looks up,—a woeful smile
Lightens his woeworn cheek a while !
'Tis Fancy wakes some idle thought,
To gild the ruin she has wrought ;
For, like the bat of Indian brakes,
Her pinions fan the wound she makes,
And soothing thus the dreamer's pain,
She drinks his life-blood from the vein.
Now to the lattice turn his eyes,
Vain hope ! to see the sun arise :
The moon with clouds is still o'ercast ;
Still howls by fits the stormy blast ;
Another hour must wear away
Ere the east kindle into day.
And hark ! to waste that weary hour,
He tries the minstrel's magic power.

XXXIII.

Song.

TO THE MOON.

Hail to thy cold and clouded beam,
 Pale pilgrim of the troubled sky !
 Hail, though the mists that o'er thee stream
 Lend to thy brow their sullen dye !
 How should thy pure and peaceful eye
 Untroubled view our scenes below,
 Or how a tearless beam supply
 To light a world of war and woe !

Fair Queen ! I will not blame thee now,
 As once by Greta's fairy side ;
 Each little cloud that dimmed thy brow
 Did then an angel's beauty hide.
 And of the shades I then could chide,
 Still are the thoughts to memory dear,
 For, while a softer strain I tried,
 They hid my blush, and calmed my fear.

Then did I swear thy ray serene
 Was formed to light some lonely dell,
 By two fond lovers only seen,
 Reflected from the crystal well,
 Or sleeping on their mossy cell,
 Or quivering on the lattice bright,
 Or glancing on their couch, to tell
 How swiftly wanes the summer night !

XXXIV.

He starts—a step at this lone hour !
 A voice !—his father seeks the tower,
 With haggard look and troubled sense,
 Fresh from his dreadful conference.
 “ Wilfrid !—what ! not to sleep addressed ?
 Thou hast no cares to chase thy rest.
 Mortham has fallen on Marston-moor ;
 Bertram brings warrant to secure

His treasures, bought by spoil and blood,
 For the State's use and public good.
 The menials will thy voice obey ;
 Let his commission have its way,
 In every point, in every word."
 Then, in a whisper,—“Take thy sword !
 Bertram is—what I must not tell.
 I hear his hasty step—farewell !”

I feel many a throb now

CANTO SECOND.

in ballad form.

FAR in the chambers of the west
 The gale had sighed itself to rest.
 The moon was cloudless now and clear,
 But pale, and soon to disappear.
 The thin grey clouds wax dimly light
 On Brusleton and Houghton height ;
 And the rich dale, that eastward lay,
 Waited the wakening touch of day,
 To give its woods and cultured plain,
 And towers and spires, to light again.
 But, westward, Stanmore's shapeless swell,
 And Lunedale wild, and Kelton-fell,
 And rock-begirdled Gilmanscar,
 And Arkingarth, lay dark afar ;
 While, as a livelier twilight falls,
 Emerge proud Barnard's bannered walls.
 High crowned he sits, in dawning pale,
 The sovereign of the lovely vale.

II.

What prospects, from his watch-tower high,
 Gleam gradual on the warder's eye !—
 Far sweeping to the east, he sees
 Down his deep woods the course of Tees,*
 And tracks his wanderings by the steam
 Of summer vapours from the stream ;

* See Note II.

And ere he paced his destined hour
 By Brackenbury's dungeon-tower,
 These silver mists shall melt away,
 And dew the woods with glittering spray.
 Then in broad lustre shall be shown
 That mighty trench of living stone,
 And each huge trunk that, from the side,
 Reclines him o'er the darksome tide,
 Where Tees, full many a fathom low,
 Wears with his rage no common foe ;
 For pebbly bank, nor sandbed here,
 Nor clay-mound, checks his fierce career—
 Condemned to mine a channelled way
 O'er solid sheets of marble grey.

III.

Nor Tees alone, in dawning bright,
 Shall rush upon the ravished sight ;
 But many a tributary stream
 Each from its own dark dell shall gleam :
 Staindrop, who, from her silvan bowers,
 Salutes proud Raby's battled towers ;
 The rural brook of Egliston,
 And Balder, named from Odin's son ;
 And Greta, to whose banks ere long
 We lead the lovers of the song ;
 And silver Lune, from Stanmore wild ;
 And fairy Thorsgill's murmuring child ;
 And last and least, but loveliest still,
 Romantic Deepdale's slender rill.
 Who in that dim-wood glen hath strayed,
 Yet longed for Roslin's magic glade ?
 Who, wandering there, hath sought to change
 Even for that vale so stein and strange,
 Where Cartland's Crag, fantastic rent,
 Through her green copse like spires are sent ?
 Yet, Albin, yet the praise be thine,
 Thy scenes and story to combine !
 Thou bidd'st him, who by Roslin strays,
 List to the deeds of other days ;

'Mid Cartland's Crag thou show'st the cave,
The refuge of thy champion brave ;
Giving each rock its storied tale,
Pouring a lay for every dale,
Knitting, as with a moral band,
Thy native legends with thy land,
To lend each scene the interest high
Which genius beams from Beauty's eye.

IV.

Bertram awaited not the sight
Which sunrise shows from Barnard's height,
But from the towers, preventing day,
With Wilfrid took his early way,
While misty dawn, and moonbeam pale,
Still mingled in the silent dale.
By Barnard's bridge of stately stone,
The southern bank of Tees they won ;
Their winding path then eastward cast,
And Egliston's grey ruins passed ; *
Each on his own deep visions bent,
Silent and sad they onward went.
Well may you think that Bertram's mood,
To Wilfrid, savage seemed and rude ;
Well may you think bold Risingham
Held Wilfrid trivial, poor, and tame ;
And small the intercourse, I ween,
Such uncongenial souls between.

V.

Stern Bertram shunned the nearer way
Through Rokeby's park and chase that lay,
And, skirting high the valley's ridge,
They crossed by Greta's ancient bridge,
Descending where her waters wind
Free for a space and unconfined,
As, 'scaped from Brignall's dark-wood glen,
She seeks wild Mortham's deeper den.

* See Note 12.

There, as his eye glanced o'er the mound
 Raised by that Legion long renowned,
 Whose votive shrine asserts their claim
 Of pious, faithful, conquering fame,*
 "Stern sons of war!" sad Wilfrid sighed,
 "Behold the boast of Roman pride!
 What now of all your toils are known?—
 A grassy trench, a broken stone!"
 This to himself, for moral strain
 To Bertram were addressed in vain.

VI.

Of different mood, a deeper sigh
 Awoke, when Rokeby's turrets high †
 Were northward in the dawning seen
 To rear them o'er the thicket green.
 O then, though Spenser's self had strayed
 Beside him through the lovely glade,
 Lending his rich luxuriant glow
 Of fancy, all its charms to show,
 Pointing the stream rejoicing free
 As captive set at liberty,
 Flashing her sparkling waves abroad,
 And clamouring joyful on her road;
 Pointing where, up the sunny banks,
 The trees retire in scattered ranks,
 Save where, advanced before the rest,
 On knoll or hillock rears his crest,
 Lonely and huge, the giant oak,—
 As champions, when their band is broke,
 Stand forth to guard the rearward post,
 The bulwark of the scattered host;—
 All this, and more, might Spenser say,
 Yet waste in vain his magic lay,
 While Wilfrid eyed the distant tower
 Whose lattice lights Matilda's bower.

VII.

The open vale is soon passed o'er,
 Rokeby, though nigh, is seen no more;

* See Note 13. † See Note 14.

Sinking 'mid Greta's thickets deep,
A wild and darker course they keep—
A stern and lone, yet lovely road,
As e'er the foot of minstrel trode ! *
Broad shadows o'er their passage fell ;
Deeper and narrower grew the dell ;
It seemed some mountain, rent and riven,
A channel for the stream had given,
So high the cliffs of limestone grey
Hung beetling o'er the torrent's way,
Yielding, along their rugged base,
A flinty footpath's niggard space ;
Where he, who winds 'twixt rock and wave,
May hear the headlong torrent rave,
And like a steed in frantic fit
That flings the froth from curb and bit,
May view her chafe her waves to spray
O'er every rock that bars her way,
Till foam-globes on her eddies ride,
Thick as the schemes of human pride
That down life's current drive amain,
As frail, as frothy, and as vain !

VIII.

The cliffs that rear their haughty head
High o'er the river's darksome bed
Were now all naked, wild, and grey ;
Now waving all with greenwood spray.
Here trees to every crevice clung,
And o'er the dell their branches hung ;
And there, all splintered and uneven,
The shivered rocks ascend to heaven.
Oft, too, the ivy swathed their breast,
And wreathed its garland round their crest ;
Or from the spires bade loosely flare
Its tendrils in the middle air.
As pennons wont to wave of old
O'er the high feast of baron bold,

* See Note 13.

When revelled loud the feudal rout,
And the arched halls returned their shout,
Such and more wild is Greta's roar,
And such the echoes from her shore,
And so the ivied banners gleam
Waved wildly o'er the brawling stream.

IX.

Now from the stream the rocks recede,
But leave between no sunny mead ;
No, nor the spot of pebbly sand,
Oft found by such a mountain strand,
Forming such warm and dry retreat,
As fancy deems the lonely seat,
Where hermit, wandering from his cell,
His rosary might love to tell.
But here, 'twixt rock and river, grew
A dismal grove of sable yew,
With whose sad tints were mingled seen
The blighted fir's sepulchral green.
Seemed that the trees their shadows cast
The earth that nourished them to blast ;
For never knew that swarthy grove
The verdant hue that fairies love,
Nor wilding green nor woodland flower
Arose within its baleful bower.
The dank and sable earth receives
Its only carpet from the leaves,
That, from the withering branches cast,
Bestrewed the ground with every blast.
Though now the sun was o'er the hill,
In this dark spot 'twas twilight still,
Save that on Greta's farther side
Some straggling beams through copsewood glide ;
And wild and savage contrast made
That dingle's deep and funeral shade,
With the bright tints of early day
Which, glimmering through the ivy spray,
On the opposing summit lay.

X.

The lated peasant shunned the dell ;
For superstition wont to tell
Of many a grisly sound and sight,
Scaring its path at dead of night.
When Christmas logs blaze high and wide,
Such wonders speed the festal tide,
While curiosity and fear,
Pleasure and pain, sit crouching near,
Till childhood's cheek no longer glows,
And village maidens lose the rose ;
The thrilling interest rises higher,
The circle closes nigh and nigher,
And shuddering glance is cast behind,
As louder moans the wintry wind.
Believe, that fitting scene was laid
For such wild tales in Mortham glade ;
For who had seen, on Greta's side,
By that dim light, fierce Bertram stride,
In such a spot, at such an hour,
If touched by superstition's power,
Might well have deemed that hell had given
A murderer's ghost to upper heaven,
While Wilfrid's form had seemed to glide
Like his pale victim by his side.

XI.

Nor think to village swains alone
Are these unearthly terrors known ;
For not to rank nor sex confined
Is this vain ague of the mind.
Hearts firm as steel, as marble hard,
'Gainst faith, and love, and pity barred,
Have quaked like aspen leaves in May
Beneath its universal sway.
Bertram had listed many a tale
Of wonder in his native dale,
That in his secret soul retained
The credence they in childhood gained.

Nor less his wild adventurous youth
Believed in every legend's truth ;
Learned when, beneath the tropic gale,
Full swelled the vessel's steady sail,
And the broad Indian moon her light
Poured on the watch of middle night,
When seamen love to hear and tell
Of portent, prodigy, and spell—
What gales are sold on Lapland's shore,
How whistle rash bids tempests roar,*
Of witch, of mermaid, and of sprite,
Of Erick's cap and Elmo's light ; †
Or of that Phantom Ship, whose form
Shoots like a meteor through the storm,
When the dark scud comes driving hard,
And lowered is every topsail yard,
And canvas, wove in earthly looms,
No more to brave the storm presumes !
Then, 'mid the war of sea and sky,
Top and top-gallant hoisted high,
Full-spread and crowded every sail,
The Demon Frigate braves the gale ; ‡
And well the doomed spectators know
The harbinger of wreck and woe.

XII.

Then, too, were told, in stifled tone,
Marvels and omens all their own :
How, by some desert isle or key, §
Where Spaniards wrought their cruelty,
Or where the savage pirate's mood
Repaid it home in deeds of blood,
Strange nightly sounds of woe and fear
Appalled the listening bucanier,
Whose light-armed shallop anchored lay
In ambush by the lonely bay.
The groan of grief, the shriek of pain,
Ring from the moonlit groves of cane ;

* See Note 16. † See Note 17. ‡ See Note 18. § See Note 19.

The fierce adventurer's heart they scare,
Who wearies memory for a prayer,
Curses the roadstead, and with gale
Of early morning lifts the sail,
To give, in thirst of blood and prey,
A legend for another bay.

XIII.

Thus, as a man, a youth, a child,
Trained in the mystic and the wild,
With this on Bertram's soul at times
Rushed a dark feeling of his crimes :
Such to his troubled soul their form,
As the pale Death-ship to the storm ;
And such their omen dim and dread,
As shrieks and voices of the dead.
That pang whose transitory force
Hovered 'twixt horror and remorse—
That pang, perchance, his bosom pressed,
As Wilfrid sudden he addressed :
“ Wilfrid, this glen is never trode
Until the sun rides high abroad,
Yet twice have I beheld to-day
A form that seemed to dog our way ;
Twice from my glance it seemed to flee,
And shroud itself by cliff or tree.
How think'st thou ?—is our path waylaid ?
Or hath thy sire my trust betrayed ?
If so— ” Ere, starting from his dream,
That turned upon a gentler theme,
Wilfrid had roused him to reply,
Bertram sprung forward, shouting high,
“ Whate'er thou art, thou now shalt stand ! ”
And forth he darted, sword in hand.

XIV.

As bursts the levin in its wrath,
He shot him down the sounding path ;
Rock, wood, and stream rang wildly out
To his loud step and savage shout.

Seems that the object of his race
Hath scaled the cliffs : his frantic chase
Sidelong he turns, and now 'tis bent
Right up the rock's tall battlement ;
Straining each sinew to ascend,
Foot, hand, and knee their aid must lend.
Wilfrid, all dizzy with dismay,
Views from beneath his dreadful way :
Now to the oak's warped roots he clings,
Now trusts his weight to ivy strings ;
Now, like the wild-goat, must he dare
An unsupported leap in air ;
Hid in the shrubby raincourse now,
You mark him by the crashing bough,
And by his corselet's sullen clank,
And by the stones spurned from the bank,
And by the hawk scared from her nest,
And ravens croaking o'er their guest,
Who deem his forfeit limbs shall pay
The tribute of his bold essay.

xv.

See, he emerges !—desperate now
All further course—yon beetling brow,
In craggy nakedness sublime,
What heart or foot shall dare to climb ?
It bears no tendril for his clasp,
Presents no angle to his grasp ;
Sole stay his foot may rest upon
Is yon earth-bedded jetting stone.
Balanced on such precarious prop,
He strains his grasp to reach the top.
Just as the dangerous stretch he makes,
By Heaven, his faithless footstool shakes !
Beneath his tottering bulk it bends,
It sways—it loosens—it descends !
And downward holds its headlong way,
Crashing o'er rock and copsewood spray.
Loud thunders shake the echoing dell !—
Fell it alone ?—alone it fell.

Just on the very verge of fate,
The hardy Bertram's falling weight
He trusted to his sinewy hands,
And on the top unharmed he stands !

XVI.

Wilfrid a safer path pursued,
At intervals where, roughly hewed,
Rude steps ascending from the dell
Rendered the cliffs accessible.
By circuit slow he thus attained
The height that Risingham had gained ;
And when he issued from the wood,
Before the gate of Mortham stood.*
'Twas a fair scene ! the sunbeam lay
On battled tower and portal grey ;
And from the grassy slope he sees
The Greta flow to meet the Tees,
Where, issuing from her darksome bed,
She caught the morning's eastern red,
And through the softening vale below
Rolled her bright waves in rosy glow,
All blushing to her bridal bed
Like some shy maid in convent bred,
While linnet, lark, and blackbird gay,
Sing forth her nuptial roundelay.

XVII.

'Twas sweetly sung that roundelay,
That summer morn shone blithe and gay ;
But morning beam, and wild-bird's call,
Awaked not Mortham's silent hall.
No porter, by the low-browed gate,
Took in the wonted niche his seat ;
To the paved court no peasant drew ;
Waked to their toil no menial crew ;
The maiden's carol was not heard,
As to her morning task she fared ;
In the void offices around
Rung not a hoof nor bayed a hound ;

* See Note 20.

Nor eager steed, with shrilling neigh,
 Accused the lagging groom's delay ;
 Untrimmed, undressed, neglected now
 Were alleys walk and orchard bough ;—
 All spoke the master's absent care,
 All spoke neglect and disrepair.
 South of the gate, an arrow-flight,
 Two mighty elms their limbs unite,
 As if a canopy to spread
 O'er the lone dwelling of the dead ;
 For their huge boughs in arches bent
 Above a massive monument,
 Carved o'er in ancient Gothic-wise,
 With many a scutcheon and device :
 There, spent with toil and sunk in gloom,
 Bertram stood pondering by the tomb.

XVIII.

"It vanished, like a flitting ghost !
 Behind this tomb," he said, "'twas lost—
 This tomb, where oft I deemed lies stored
 Of Mortham's Indian wealth the hoard.
 'Tis true, the aged servants said
 Here his lamented wife is laid ;
 But weightier reasons may be guessed
 For their lord's strict and stern behest,
 That none should on his steps intrude,
 Whene'er he sought this solitude.
 An ancient mariner I knew,
 What time I sailed with Morgan's crew,
 Who oft, 'mid our carousals, spake
 Of Raleigh, Frobisher, and Drake—
 Adventurous hearts ! who bartered bold
 Their English steel for Spanish gold—
 Trust not, would his experience say,
 Captain or comrade with your prey ;
 But seek some charnel, when, at full,
 The moon gilds skeleton and skull.
 There dig and tomb your precious heap,
 And bid the dead your treasure keep ; *

* See Note 21.

Sure stewards they, if fitting spell
 Their service to the task compel.
 Lacks there such charnel?—kill a slave,
 Or prisoner, on the treasure-grave,
 And bid his discontented ghost
 Stalk nightly on his lonely post.—
 Such was his tale ; its truth, I ween,
 Is in my morning vision seen."

XIX.

Wilfrid, who scorned the legend wild,
 In mingled mirth and pity smiled,
 Much marvelling that a breast so bold
 In such fond tale belief should hold ;
 But yet of Bertram sought to know
 The apparition's form and show.—
 The power within the guilty breast,
 Oft vanquished, never quite suppressed,
 That unsubdued and lurking lies
 To take the felon by surprise,
 And force him, as by magic spell,
 In his despite his guilt to tell,*—
 That power in Bertram's breast awoke ;
 Scarce conscious he was heard, he spoke :
 " 'Twas Mortham's form, from foot to head !
 His morion with the plume of red,
 His shape, his mien—'twas Mortham, right
 As when I slew him in the fight."—
 " Thou slay him?—thou? "—With conscious start
 He heard, then manned his haughty heart,—
 " I slew him?—I !—I had forgot,
 Thou, stripling, knew'st not of the plot.
 But it is spoken ; nor will I
 Deed done, or spoken word, deny.
 I slew him—I ! for thankless pride ;
 'Twas by this hand that Mortham died."

XX.

Wilfrid, of gentle hand and heart,
 Averse to every active part,

* See Note 22.

But most averse to martial broil,
From danger shrunk and turned from toil;
Yet the meek lover of the lyre
Nursed one brave spark of noble fire—
Against injustice, fraud, or wrong,
His blood beat high, his hand waxed strong.
Not his the nerves that could sustain,
Unshaken, danger, toil, and pain;
But when that spark blazed forth to flame,
He rose superior to his frame.
And now it came, that generous mood;
And, in full current of his blood,
On Bertram he laid desperate hand,
Placed firm his foot, and drew his brand:
“Should every fiend to whom thou’rt sold
Rise in thine aid, I keep my hold.—
Arouse there, ho! take spear and sword!
Attach the murderer of your lord!”

XXI.

A moment, fixed as by a spell,
Stood Bertram—it seemed miracle
That one so feeble, soft, and tame,
Set grasp on warlike Risingham.
But when he felt a feeble stroke,
The fiend within the ruffian woke.
To wrench the sword from Wilfrid’s hand,
To dash him headlong on the sand,
Was but one moment’s work—one more
Had drenched the blade in Wilfrid’s gore;
But, in the instant it arose,
To end his life, his love, his woes,
A warlike form, that marked the scene,
Presents his rapier sheathed between,
Parries the fast-descending blow,
And steps ’twixt Wilfrid and his foe.
Nor then unscabbarded his brand,
But, sternly pointing with his hand,
With monarch’s voice forbade the fight,
And motioned Bertram from his sight.

“Go, and repent,” he said, “while time
Is given thee ; add not crime to crime.”

XXII.

Mute, and uncertain, and amazed,
As on a vision Bertram gazed !
'Twas Mortham's bearing, bold and high,
His sinewy frame, his falcon eye,
His look and accent of command,
The martial gesture of his hand,
His stately form, spare-built and tall,
His war-bleached locks—'twas Mortham all.
Through Bertram's dizzy brain career
A thousand thoughts, and all of fear.
His wavering faith received not quite
The form he saw as Mortham's sprite ;
But more he feared it, if it stood
His lord, in living flesh and blood.—
What spectre can the charnel send,
So dreadful as an injured friend ?
Then, too, the habit of command,
Used by the leader of the band,
When Risingham, for many a day,
Had marched and fought beneath his sway,
Tamed him—and, with reverted face,
Backwards he bore his sullen pace ;
Oft stopped, and oft on Mortham stared,
And dark as rated mastiff glared ;
But when the tramp of steeds was heard,
Plunged in the glen, and disappeared.
Nor longer there the warrior stood,
Retiring eastward through the wood ;
But first to Wilfrid warning gives,
“Tell thou to none that Mortham lives.”

XXIII.

Still rung these words in Wilfrid's ear,
Hinting he knew not what of fear,
When nearer came the coursers' tread,
And, with his father at their head,

Of horsemen armed a gallant power
 Reined up their steeds before the tower.
 "Whence these pale looks, my son?" he said;
 "Where's Bertram?—why that naked blade?"
 Wilfrid ambiguously replied
 (For Mortham's charge his honour tied),
 "Bertram is gone. The villain's word
 Avouched him murderer of his lord!
 Even now we fought; but, when your tread
 Announced you nigh, the felon fled."
 In Wycliffe's conscious eye appear
 A guilty hope, a guilty fear;
 On his pale brow the dewdrop broke,
 And his lip quivered as he spoke:—

XXIV.

"A murderer!—Philip Mortham died
 Amid the battle's wildest tide.
 Wilfrid, or Bertram raves or you!
 Yet, grant such strange confession true,
 Pursuit were vain—let him fly far—
 Justice must sleep in civil war."
 A gallant youth rode near his side,
 Brave Rokeby's page, in battle tried;
 That morn, an embassy of weight
 He brought to Barnard's castle-gate,
 And followed now in Wycliffe's train,
 An answer for his lord to gain.
 His steed, whose arched and sable neck
 A hundred wreaths of foam bedeck,
 Chafed not against the curb more high
 Than he at Oswald's cold reply;
 He bit his lip, implored his saint,
 (His the old faith)—then burst restraint:—

XXV.

"Yes! I beheld his bloody fall
 By that base traitor's dastard ball,
 Just when I thought to measure sword,
 Presumptuous hope! with Mortham's lord.

And shall the murderer 'scape, who slew
His leader, generous, brave, and true?
Escape! while on the dew you trace
The marks of his gigantic pace?
No! ere the sun that dew shall dry,
False Risingham shall yield or die.—
Ring out the castle 'larum bell!
Arouse the peasants with the knell!
Meantime, disperse—ride, gallants, ride!
Beset the wood on every side.
But if among you one there be
That honours Mortham's memory,
Let him dismount and follow me!
Else on your crests sit fear and shame,
And foul suspicion dog your name!”

XXVI.

Instant to earth young REDMOND sprung;
Instant on earth the harness rung
Of twenty men of Wycliffe's band,
Who waited not their lord's command.
Redmond his spurs from buskins drew,
His mantle from his shoulders threw,
His pistols in his belt he placed,
The greenwood gained, the footsteps traced,
Shouted like huntsman to his hounds,
“To cover, hark!” and in he bounds.
Scarce heard was Oswald's anxious cry,
“Suspicion! yes—pursue him—fly!
But venture not, in useless strife,
On ruffian desperate of his life;
Whoever finds him, shoot him dead!
Five hundred nobles for his head!”

XXVII.

The horsemen galloped, to make good
Each pass that issued from the wood.
Loud from the thickets rung the shout
Of Redmond and his eager rout;

With them was Wilfrid, stung with ire,
And envying Redmond's martial fire,
And emulous of fame.—But where
Is Oswald, noble Mortham's heir?
He, bound by honour, law, and faith,
Avenger of his kinsman's death?—
Leaning against the elmen tree,
With drooping head and slackened knee,
And clenched teeth, and close-clasped hands,
In agony of soul he stands!
His downcast eye on earth is bent,
His soul to every sound is lent;
For in each shout that cleaves the air,
May ring discovery and despair.

XXVIII.

What 'vailed it him that brightly played
The morning sun on Mortham's glade?
All seems in giddy round to ride,
Like objects on a stormy tide,
Seen eddying by the moonlight dim,
Imperfectly to sink and swim.
What 'vailed it, that the fair domain,
Its battled mansion, hill, and plain,
On which the sun so brightly shone,
Envied so long, was now his own?
The lowest dungeon, in that hour,
Of Brackenbury's dismal tower,*
Had been his choice, could such a doom
Have opened Mortham's bloody tomb!
Forced, too, to turn unwilling ear
To each surmise of hope or fear
Murmured among the rustics round,
Who gathered at the 'larum sound,
He dared not turn his head away,
E'en to look up to heaven to pray,
Or call on hell, in bitter mood,
For one sharp death-shot from the wood!

* See Note 23.

XXIX.

At length, o'erpassed that dreadful space,
Back straggling came the scattered chase ;
Jaded and weary, horse and man,
Returned the troopers, one by one.
Wilfrid, the last, arrived to say,
All trace was lost of Bertram's way ;
Though Redmond still, up Brignall wood,
The hopeless quest in vain pursued.—
O fatal doom of human race !
What tyrant passions passions chase !
Remorse from Oswald's brow is gone,
Avarice and pride resume their throne ;
The pang of instant terror by,
They dictate thus their slave's reply .—

XXX.

“ Ay, let him range like hasty hound !
And if the grim wolf's lair be found,
Small is my care how goes the game
With Redmond or with Risingham.—
Nay, answer not, thou simple boy !
Thy fair Matilda, all so coy
To thee, is of another mood
To that bold youth of Erin's blood.
Thy ditties will she freely praise,
And pay thy pains with courtly phrase ;
In a rough path will oft command—
Accept at least—thy friendly hand :
His she avoids, or, urged and prayed,
Unwilling takes his proffered aid,
While conscious passion plainly speaks
In downcast look and blushing cheeks.
Whene'er he sings, will she glide nigh,
And all her soul is in her eye ;
Yet doubts she still to tender free
The wonted words of courtesy.
These are strong signs !—yet wherefore sigh,
And wipe, effeminate, thine eye ?

Thine shall she be, if thou attend
The counsels of thy sire and friend.

XXXI.

“Scarce wert thou gone, when peep of light
Brought genuine news of Marston’s fight.
Brave Cromwell turned the doubtful tide,
And conquest blessed the rightful side ;
Three thousand cavaliers lie dead,
Rupert and that bold Marquis fled ;
Nobles and knights, so proud of late,
Must fine for freedom and estate.
Of these, committed to my charge,
Is Rokeby, prisoner at large ;
Redmond, his page, arrived to say
He reaches Barnard’s towers to-day.
Right heavy shall his ransom be,
Unless that maid compound with thee ! *
Go to her now—be bold of cheer,
While her soul floats ’twixt hope and fear ;
It is the very change of tide,
When best the female heart is tried—
Pride, prejudice, and modesty,
Are in the current swept to sea ;
And the bold swain, who plies his oar,
May lightly row his bark to shore.”

CANTO THIRD.

I.

THE hunting tribes of air and earth
Respect the brethren of their birth ;
Nature, who loves the claim of kind,
Less cruel chase to each assigned.
The falcon, poised on soaring wing,
Watches the wild-duck by the spring ;
The slowhound wakes the fox’s lair ;
The greyhound presses on the hare ;

* See Note 24.

The eagle pounces on the lamb ;
 The wolf devours the fleecy dam ;
 Even tiger fell, and sullen bear,
 Their likeness and their lineage spare.
 Man, only, mars kind Nature's plan,
 And turns the fierce pursuit on man ;
 Plying war's desultory trade,
 Incursion, flight, and ambuscade,
 Since Nimrod, Cush's mighty son,
 At first the bloody game begun.

II.

The Indian, prowling for his prey,
 Who hears the settlers track his way,*
 And knows in distant forest far
 Camp his red brethren of the war—
 He, when each double and disguise
 To baffle the pursuit he tries,
 Low crouching now his head to hide,
 Where swampy streams through rushes glide,
 Now covering with the withered leaves
 The footprints that the dew receives—
 He, skilled in every silvan guile,
 Knows not, nor tries, such various wile
 As Risingham, when on the wind
 Arose the loud pursuit behind.
 In Redesdale his youth had heard
 Each art her wily dalesmen dared,
 When Rook-edge and Redswair high
 To bugle rung and bloodhound's cry,†
 Announcing Jedwood axe and spear,
 And Lid'sdale riders in the rear ;
 And well his venturous life had proved
 The lessons that his childhood loved.

III.

Oft had he shown, in climes afar,
 Each attribute of roving war ;

* See Note 25. † See Note 26.

The sharpened ear, the piercing eye,
The quick resolve in danger nigh ;
The speed that, in the flight or chase,
Outstripped the Charib's rapid race ;
The steady brain, the sinewy limb,
To leap, to climb, to dive, to swim ;
The iron frame, inured to bear
Each dire inclemency of air,
Nor less confirmed to undergo
Fatigue's faint chill and famine's throe.
These arts he proved, his life to save,
In peril oft by land and wave,
On Arawaca's desert shore,
Or where La Plata's billows roar,
When oft the sons of vengeful Spain
Tracked the marauder's steps in vain.
These arts, in Indian warfare tried,
Must save him now by Greta's side.

IV.

'Twas then, in hour of utmost need,
He proved his courage, art, and speed.
Now slow he stalked with stealthy pace,
Now started forth in rapid race ;
Oft doubling back in mazy train,
To blind the trace the dews retain ;
Now clomb the rocks projecting high
To baffle the pursuer's eye ;
Now sought the stream, whose brawling sound
The echo of his footsteps drowned.
But if the forest verge he nears,
There trample steeds and glimmer spears ;
If deeper down the copse he drew,
He heard the rangers' loud halloo,
Beating each cover while they came,
As if to start the silvan game.
'Twas then—like tiger close beset
At every pass with toil and net,
'Countered, where'er he turns his glare,
By clashing arms and torches' flare,

Who meditates, with furious bound,
 To burst on hunter, horse, and hound,—
 'Twas then that Bertram's soul arose,
 Prompting to rush upon his foes.
 But as that crouching tiger, cowed
 By brandished steel and shouting crowd,
 Retreats beneath the jungle's shroud,
 Bertram suspends his purpose stern,
 And couches in the brake and fern,
 Hiding his face, lest foemen spy
 The sparkle of his swarthy eye.*

ms. ed. Bertram's S. V.

Then Bertram might the bearing trace
 Of the bold youth who led the chase;
 Who paused to list for every sound,
 Climbed every height to look around;
 Then rushing on with naked sword,
 Each dingle's bosky depths explored.
 'Twas Redmond—by the azure eye;
 'Twas Redmond—by the locks that fly
 Disordered from his glowing cheek;—
 Mien, face, and form young Redmond speak.
 A form more active, light, and strong,
 Ne'er shot the ranks of war along;
 The modest, yet the manly mien,
 Might grace the court of maiden queen.
 A face more fair you well might find,
 For Redmond's knew the sun and wind,
 Nor boasted, from their tinge when free,
 The charm of regularity;
 But every feature had the power
 To aid the expression of the hour:
 Whether gay wit, and humour sly,
 Danced laughing in his light-blue eye;
 Or bended brow, and glance of fire,
 And kindling cheek, spoke Erin's ire;
 Or soft and saddened glances show
 Her ready sympathy with woe;

[* See Note 27. c.]

Or in that wayward mood of mind,
When various feelings are combined,
When joy and sorrow mingle near,
And hope's bright wings are checked by fear,
And rising doubts keep transport down,
And anger lends a short-lived frown ;
In that strange mood which maids approve,
Even when they dare not call it love :
With every change his features played,
As aspens show the light and shade.

VI.

Well Risingham young Redmond knew :
And much he marvelled that the crew,
Roused to revenge bold Mortham dead,
Were by that Mortham's foeman led ;
For never felt his soul the woe
That wails a generous foeman low,
Far less that sense of justice strong
That wrecks a generous foeman's wrong.
But small his leisure now to pause—
Redmond is first, whate'er the cause.
And twice that Redmond came so near
Where Bertram couched like hunted deer,
The very boughs his steps displace
Rustled against the ruffian's face,
Who, desperate, twice prepared to start,
And plunge his dagger in his heart !
But Redmond turned a different way,
And the bent boughs resumed their sway ;
And Bertram held it wise, unseen,
Deeper to plunge in coppice green.
Thus, circled in his coil, the snake,
When roving hunters beat the brake,
Watches with red and glistening eye,
Prepared, if heedless step draw nigh,
With forkèd tongue and venomèd fang
Instant to dart the deadly pang ;
But if the intruders turn aside,
Away his coils unfolded glide,

And through the deep savanna wind,
Some undisturbed retreat to find.

.VII.

But Bertram, as he backward drew,
And heard the loud pursuit renew,
And Redmond's hollo on the wind,
Oft muttered in his savage mind :
" Redmond O'Neale ! were thou and I
Alone this day's event to try,
With not a second here to see,
But the grey cliff and oaken tree,
That voice of thine, that shouts so loud,
Should ne'er repeat its summons proud !
No ! nor e'er try its melting power
Again in maiden's summer bower."
Eluded, now behind him die,
Faint and more faint, each hostile cry ;
He stands in Scargill wood alone,
Nor hears he now a harsher tone
Than the hoarse cushat's plaintive cry,
Or Greta's sound that murmurs by ;
And on the dale, so lone and wild,
The summer sun in quiet smiled.

VIII.

He listened long with anxious heart,
Ear bent to hear and foot to start,
And, while his stretched attention glows,
Refused his weary frame repose.
'Twas silence all—he laid him down,
Where purple heath profusely strown,
And throatwort with its azure bell,
And moss, and thyme his cushion swell.
There, spent with toil, he listless eyed
The course of Greta's playful tide ;
Beneath her banks now eddying dun,
Now brightly gleaming to the sun,
As, dancing over rock and stone,
In yellow light her current shone,

Matching in hue the favourite gem
 Of Albin's mountain-diadem.
 Then, tired to watch the current's play,
 He turned his weary eyes away
 To where the bank opposing showed
 Its huge, square cliffs through shaggy wood.
 One, prominent above the rest,
 Reared to the sun its pale grey breast.
 Around its broken summit grew
 The hazel rude and sable yew;
 A thousand varied lichens dyed
 Its waste and weather-beaten side,
 And round its rugged basis lay,
 By time or thunder rent away,
 Fragments, that, from its frontlet torn,
 Were mantled now by verdant thorn.
 Such was the scene's wild majesty,
 That filled stern Bertram's gazing eye.

IX.

In sullen mood he lay reclined,
 Revolving, in his stormy mind,
 The felon deed, the fruitless guilt,
 His patron's blood by treason spilt;
 A crime, it seemed, so dire and dread
 That it had power to wake the dead.
 Then, pondering on his life betrayed,
 By Oswald's art to Redmond's blade,
 In treacherous purpose to withhold,
 So seemed it, Mortham's promised gold,
 A deep and full revenge he vowed
 On Redmond, forward, fierce, and proud;
 Revenge on Wilfrid; on his sire
 Redoubled vengeance, swift and dire!—
 If, in such mood (as legends say,
 And well believed that simple day),
 The Enemy of man has power
 To profit by the evil hour,
 Here stood a wretch, prepared to change
 His soul's redemption for revenge!*

* See Note 28.

But though his vows, with such a fire
 Of earnest and intense desire
 For vengeance dark and fell, were made,
 As well might reach hell's lowest shade,
 No deeper clouds the grove embrowned,
 No nether thunders shook the ground ;—
 The demon knew his vassal's heart,
 And spared temptation's needless art.

X.

Oft, mingled with the direful theme,
 Came Mortham's form—was it a dream?
 Or had he seen, in vision true,
 That very Mortham whom he slew?
 Or had in living flesh appeared
 The only man on earth he feared?—
 To try the mystic cause intent,
 His eyes, that on the cliff were bent,
 'Countered at once a dazzling glance,
 Like sunbeam flashed from sword or lance.
 At once he started as for fight ;
 But not a foeman was in sight.
 He heard the cushat's murmur hoarse,
 He heard the river's sounding course ;
 The solitary woodlands lay,
 As slumbering in the summer ray.
 He gazed, like lion roused, around,
 Then sunk again upon the ground.
 'Twas but, he thought, some fitful beam
 Glanced sudden from the sparkling stream ;
 Then plunged him from his gloomy train
 Of ill-connected thoughts again,
 Until a voice behind him cried,
 " Bertram ! well met on Greta side."

XI.

Instant his sword was in his hand,
 As instant sunk the ready brand ;
 Yet, dubious still, opposed he stood
 To him that issued from the wood :—

- "Guy Denzil!—is it thou?" he said;
 "Do we two meet in Scargill shade?—
 Stand back a space!—thy purpose show,
 Whether thou com'st as friend or foe.
 Report hath said that Denzil's name
 From Rokeby's band was razed with shame."—
- "A shame I owe that hot O'Neale,
 Who told his knight, in peevish zeal,
 Of my marauding on the clowns
 Of Calverley and Bradford downs.*
 I reckon not. In a war to strive,
 Where, save the leaders, none can thrive,
 Suits ill my mood; and better game
 Awaits us both, if thou'rt the same
 Unscrupulous, bold Risingham
 Who watched with me in midnight dark,
 To snatch a deer from Rokeby Park.
 How think'st thou?"—"Speak thy purpose out;
 I love not mystery or doubt."—

XII.

- "Then list. Not far there lurk a crew
 Of trusty comrades, staunch and true,
 Gleaned from both factions—Roundheads, freed
 From cant of sermon and of creed;
 And Cavaliers, whose souls, like mine,
 Spurn at the bonds of discipline.
 Wiser, we judge, by dale and wold,
 A warfaré of our own to hold,
 Than breathe our last on battle-down,
 For cloak or surplice, mace or crown.
 Our schemes are laid, our purpose set,
 A chief and leader lack we yet.—
 Thou art a wanderer, it is said,
 For Mortham's death thy steps waylaid,
 Thy head at price—so say our spies,
 Who range the valley in disguise.
 Join then with us: though wild debate
 And wrangling rend our infant state,

* See Note 29.

Each to an equal loath to bow,
Will yield to chief renowned as thou."—

XIII.

"Even now," thought Bertram, "passion-stirred,
I called on hell, and hell has heard!
What lack I, vengeance to command,
But of staunch comrades such a band?
This Denzil, vowed to every evil,
Might read a lesson to the devil.
Well, be it so! each knave and fool
Shall serve as my revenge's tool."—
Aloud: "I take thy proffer, Guy;
But tell me where thy comrades lie?"—
"Not far from hence," Guy Denzil said;
"Descend, and cross the river's bed,
Where rises yonder cliff so grey."—
"Do thou," said Bertram, "lead the way."
Then muttered, "It is best make sure;
Guy Denzil's faith was never pure."
He followed down the steep descent,
Then through the Greta's streams they went;
And, when they reached the farther shore,
They stood the lonely cliff before.

XIV.

With wonder Bertram heard within
The flinty rock a murmured din;
But when Guy pulled the wilding spray,
And brambles, from its base away,
He saw, appearing to the air,
A little entrance, low and square,
Like opening cell of hermit lone,
Dark winding through the living stone.
Here entered Denzil, Bertram here;
And loud and louder on their ear,
As from the bowels of the earth,
Resounded shouts of boisterous mirth.
Of old, the cavern strait and rude
In slaty rock the peasant hewed;

And Brignall's woods, and Scargill's, wave
E'en now o'er many a sister cave,*
Where, far within the darksome rift,
The wedge and lever ply their thrift.
But war had silenced rural trade,
And the deserted mine was made
The banquet-hall, and fortress too,
Of Denzil and his desperate crew.
There Guilt his anxious revel kept ;
There, on his sordid pallet, slept
Guilt-born Excess, the goblet drained
Still in his slumbering grasp retained ;
Regret was there, his eye still cast
With vain repining on the past ;
Among the feasters waited near
Sorrow, and unrepentant Fear,
And Blasphemy, to frenzy driven,
With his own crimes reproaching Heaven ;
While Bertram showed, amid the crew,
The Master-Fiend that Milton drew.

xv.

Hark ! the loud revel wakes again,
To greet the leader of the train.
Behold the group by the pale lamp,
That struggles with the earthy damp.
By what strange features Vice hath known,
To single out and mark her own !
Yet some there are whose brows retain
Less deeply stamped her brand and stain.
See yon pale stripling ! when a boy,
A mother's pride, a father's joy !
Now, 'gainst the vault's rude walls reclined,
An early image fills his mind :
The cottage, once his sire's, he sees,
Embowered upon the banks of Tees ;
He views sweet Winston's woodland scene,
And shares the dance on Gainford-green.

* See Note 30.

A tear is springing—but the zest
Of some wild tale, or brutal jest,
Hath to loud laughter stirred the rest.
On him they call, the aptest mate
For jovial song and merry feat :
Fast flies his dream—with dauntless air,
As one victorious o'er despair,
He bids the ruddy cup go round,
Till sense and sorrow both are drowned ;
And soon, in merry wassail, he,
The life of all their revelry,
Peals his loud song !—The muse has found
Her blossoms on the wildest ground,
'Mid noxious weeds at random strewed,
Themselves all profitless and rude.—
With desperate merriment he sung ;
The cavern to the chorus rung ;
Yet mingled with his reckless glee
Remorse's bitter agony.

XVI.

Song.

O ! Brignall banks are wild and fair,
And Greta woods are green,
And you may gather garlands there,
Would grace a summer queen.
And as I rode by Dalton-hall,
Beneath the turrets high,
A Maiden on the castle wall
Was singing merrily,—

CHORUS.

“ O ! Brignall banks are fresh and fair,
And Greta woods are green ;
I'd rather rove with Edmund there,
Than reign our English queen.”—

“ If, Maiden, thou wouldst wend with me,
To leave both tower and town,

Thou first must guess what life lead we
That dwell by dale and down.
And if thou canst that riddle read,
As read full well you may,
Then to the greenwood shalt thou speed,
As blithe as Queen of May."

CHORUS.

Yet sung she, "Brignall banks are fair,
And Greta woods are green ;
I'd rather rove with Edmund there,
Than reign our English queen.

XVII.

"I read you, by your bugle-horn,
And by your palfrey good,
I read you for a ranger sworn,
To keep the king's greenwood."—
"A ranger, lady, winds his horn,
And 'tis at peep of light ;
His blast is heard at merry morn,
And mine at dead of night."

CHORUS.

Yet sung she, "Brignall banks are fair,
And Greta woods are gay ;
I would I were with Edmund there,
To reign his Queen of May !

"With burnished brand and musketoon,
So gallantly you come,
I read you for a bold dragoon,
That lists the tuck of drum."—
"I list no more the tuck of drum,
No more the trumpet hear ;
But when the beetle sounds his hum,
My comrades take the spear.

CHORUS.

“And O! though Brignall banks be fair,
And Greta woods be gay,
Yet mickle must the maiden dare
Would reign my Queen of May!

XVIII.

“Maiden! a nameless life I lead,
A nameless death I'll die;
The fiend, whose lantern lights the mead,
Were better mate than I!
And when I'm with my comrades met,
Beneath the greenwood bough,
What once we were we all forget,
Nor think what we are now.

CHORUS.

“Yet Brignall banks are fresh and fair,
And Greta woods are green,
And you may gather garlands there
Would grace a summer queen.”

When Edmund ceased his simple song,
Was silence on the sullen throng,
Till waked some ruder mate their glee
With note of coarser minstrelsy.
But, far apart, in dark divan,
Denzil and Bertram many a plan,
Of import foul and fierce, designed,
While still on Bertram's grasping mind
The wealth of murdered Mortham hung;
Though half he feared his daring tongue,
When it should give his wishes birth,
Might raise a spectre from the earth!

XIX.

At length his wondrous tale he told:
When scornful smiled his comrade bold;
For, trained in license of a court,
Religion's self was Denzil's sport,

Then judge in what contempt he held
 The visionary tales of eld !
 His awe for Bertram scarce repressed
 The unbeliever's sneering jest.
 " 'Twere hard," he said, " for sage or seer
 To spell the subject of your fear ;
 Nor do I boast the art renowned,
 Vision and omen to expound.
 Yet, faith if I must needs afford
 To spectre watching treasured hoard,
 As bandog keeps his master's roof,
 Bidding the plunderer stand aloof,
 This doubt remains—thy goblin gaunt
 Hath chosen ill his ghostly haunt ;
 For why his guard on Mortham hold,
 When Rokeby Castle hath the gold
 Thy patron won on Indian soil,
 By stealth, by piracy, and spoil ? "

XX.

At this he paused—for angry shame
 Lowered on the brow of Risingham.
 He blushed to think that he should seem
 Assertor of an airy dream,
 And gave his wrath another theme.
 " Denzil," he says, " though lowly laid,
 Wrong not the memory of the dead ;
 For, while he lived, at Mortham's look
 Thy very soul, Guy Denzil, shook !
 And when he taxed thy breach of word
 To yon fair Rose of Allenford,
 I saw thee crouch like chastened hound
 Whose back the huntsman's lash hath found.
 Nor dare to call his foreign wealth
 The spoil of piracy or stealth ;
 He won it bravely with his brand,
 When Spain waged warfare with our land.*
 Mark too—I brook no idle jeer,
 Nor couple Bertram's name with fear ;

* See Note 31.

Mine is but half the demon's lot,
For I believe, but tremble not:—
Enough of this.—Say, why this hoard
Thou deem'st at Rokeby Castle stored;
Or think'st that Mortham would bestow
His treasure with his faction's foe?"

XXI.

Soon quenched was Denzil's ill-timed mirth;
Rather he would have seen the earth
Give to ten thousand spectres birth,
Than ventured to awake to flame
The deadly wrath of Risingham.
Submiss he answered, "Mortham's mind,
Thou know'st, to joy was ill inclined.
In youth, 'tis said, a gallant free,
A lusty reveller was he;
But since returned from over sea,
A sullen and a silent mood
Hath numbed the current of his blood.
Hence he refused each kindly call
To Rokeby's hospitable hall,
And our stout Knight, at dawn of morn
Who loved to hear the bugle-horn,
Nor less, when eve his oaks embrowned,
To see the ruddy cup go round,
Took umbrage that a friend so near
Refused to share his chase and cheer;
Thus did the kindred baron's jar
Ere they divided in the war.
Yet, trust me, friend, Matilda fair
Of Mortham's wealth is destined heir."—

XXII.

"Destined to her! to yon slight maid!
The prize my life had well-nigh paid,
When 'gainst Laroche, by Cayo's wave,
I fought, my patron's wealth to save!—
Denzil, I knew him long, yet ne'er
Knew him that joyous cavalier

Whom youthful friends and early fame
Called soul of gallantry and game.
A moody man, he sought our crew,
Desperate and dark, whom no one knew ;
And rose, as men with us must rise,
By scorning life and all its ties.
On each adventure rash he roved,
As danger for itself he loved.
On his sad brow nor mirth nor wine
Could e'er one wrinkled knot untwine.
Ill was the omen if he smiled,
For 'twas in peril stern and wild ;
But when he laughed, each luckless mate
Might hold our fortune desperate.
Foremost he fought in every broil,
Then scornful turned him from the spoil ;
Nay, often strove to bar the way
Between his comrades and their prey ;
Preaching, even then, to such as we,
Hot with our dear-bought victory,
Of mercy and humanity !

XXIII.

“ I loved him well—his fearless part,
His gallant leading, won my heart.
And after each victorious fight
'Twas I that wrangled for his right,
Redeemed his portion of the prey
That greedier mates had torn away ;
In field and storm thrice saved his life,
And once amid our comrades' strife.*—
Yes, I have loved thee !—well hath proved
My toil, my danger, how I loved !—
Yet will I mourn no more thy fate,
Ingrate in life, in death ingrate.
Rise, if thou canst !”—he looked around,
And sternly stamped upon the ground—
“ Rise, with thy bearing proud and high,

* See Note 32.

Even as this morn it met mine eye,
And give me, if thou darest, the lie !"—
He paused ; then, calm and passion-freed,
Bade Denzil with his tale proceed.

XXIV.

" Bertram, to thee I need not tell
What thou hast cause to wot so well,
How Superstition's nets were twined
Around the Lord of Mortham's mind !
But since he drove thee from his tower,
A maid he found in Greta's bower,
Whose speech, like David's harp, had sway
To charm his evil fiend away.
I know not if her features moved
Remembrance of the wife he loved ;
But he would gaze upon her eye,
Till his mood softened to a sigh.
He, whom no living mortal sought
To question of his secret thought,
Now every thought and care confessed
To his fair niece's faithful breast ;
Nor was there aught of rich and rare,
In earth, in ocean, or in air,
But it must deck Matilda's hair.
Her love still bound him unto life ;
But then awoke the civil strife,
And menials bore, by his commands,
Three coffers with their iron bands
From Mortham's vault, at midnight deep,
To her lone bower in Rokeby Keep,
Ponderous with gold and plate of pride,—
His gift, if he in battle died."—

XXV.

" Then Denzil, as I guess, lays train,
These iron-banded chests to gain ;
Else wherefore should he hover here,
Where many a peril waits him near,

For all his feats of war and peace,
 For plundered boors and harts of greese? *
 Since through the hamlets as he fared,
 What hearth has Guy's marauding spared;
 Or where the chase that hath not rung
 With Denzil's bow, at midnight strung? "—
 "I hold my wont—my rangers go
 Even now to track a milk-white doe.
 By Rokeby Hall she takes her lair,
 In Greta wood she harbours fair;
 And when my huntsman marks her way,
 What think'st thou, Bertram, of the prey?
 Were Rokeby's daughter in our power,
 We rate her ransom at her dower."—

XXVI.

"'Tis well!—there's vengeance in the thought!
 Matilda is by Wilfrid sought;
 And hot-brained Redmond, too, 'tis said,
 Pays lover's homage to the maid.
 Bertram she scorned—if met by chance,
 She turned from me her shuddering glance,
 Like a nice dame that will not brook
 On what she hates and loathes to look;
 She told to Mortham she could ne'er
 Behold me without secret fear,
 Foreboding evil;—she may rue
 To find her prophecy fall true!—
 The war has weeded Rokeby's train,
 Few followers in his halls remain;
 If thy scheme miss, then, brief and bold,
 We are enow to storm the hold,
 Bear off the plunder and the dame,
 And leave the castle all in flame."—

XXVII.

"Still art thou Valour's venturous son!
 Yet ponder first the risk to run:

* Deer in season.

The menials of the castle, true,
 And stubborn to their charge, though few ;
 The wall to scale—the moat to cross—
 The wicket-grate—the inner fosse ”——
 “ Fool ! if we blench for toys like these,
 On what fair guerdon can we seize ?
 Our hardest venture, to explore
 Some wretched peasant’s fenceless door,
 And the best prize we bear away,
 The earnings of his sordid day.”——
 “ Awhile thy hasty taunt forbear :
 In sight of road more sure and fair,
 Thou wouldst not choose, in blindfold wrath,
 Or wantonness, a desperate path ?
 List then—for vantage or assault,
 From gilded vane to dungeon-vault,
 Each pass of Rokeby House I know.
 There is one postern, dark and low,
 That issues at a secret spot,
 By most neglected or forgot.
 Now, could a spial of our train
 On fair pretext admittance gain,
 That sally-port might be unbarred ;
 Then, vain were battlement and ward ! ”——

XXVIII.

“ Now speak’st thou well : to me the same,
 If force or art shall urge the game ;
 Indifferent if like fox I wind,
 Or spring like tiger on the hind.—
 But, hark ! our merry men so gay
 Troll forth another roundelay.”

Song.

“ A weary lot is thine, fair maid,
 A weary lot is thine !
 To pull the thorn thy brow to braid,
 And press the rue for wine !
 A lightsome eye, a soldier’s mien,
 A feather of the blue,

Song.

ALLEN-A-DALE.

Allen-a-Dale has no fagot for burning,
Allen-a-Dale has no furrow for turning,
Allen-a-Dale has no fleece for the spinning,
Yet Allen-a-Dale has red gold for the winning.
Come, read me my riddle! come, hearken my tale!
And tell me the craft of bold Allen-a-Dale.

The Baron of Ravensworth * prances in pride,
And he views his domains upon Arkendale side.
The mere for his net, and the land for his game,
The chase for the wild and the park for the tame;
Yet the fish of the lake, and the deer of the vale,
Are less free to Lord Dacre than Allen-a-Dale!

Allen-a-Dale was ne'er belted a knight,
Though his spur be as sharp and his blade be as bright.
Allen-a-Dale is no baron or lord,
Yet twenty tall yeomen will draw at his word;
And the best of our nobles his bonnet will vail,
Who at Rere-cross on Stanmore † meets Allen-a-Dale.

Allen-a-Dale to his wooing is come;
The mother, she asked of his household and home.
"Though the castle of Richmond stand fair on the hill,
My hall," quoth bold Allen, "shows gallanter still;
'Tis the blue vault of heaven, with its crescent so pale,
And with all its bright spangles!" said Allen-a-Dale.

The father was steel and the mother was stone;
They lifted the latch, and they bade him begone.
But loud, on the morrow, their wail and their cry!
He had laughed on the lass with his bonny black eye;
And she fled to the forest to hear a love-tale,
And the youth it was told by was Allen-a-Dale!

* See Note 34. † See Note 35.

XXXI.

- "Thou seest that, whether sad or gay,
 Love mingles ever in his lay.
 But when his boyish wayward fit
 Is o'er, he hath address and wit;
 O! 'tis a brain of fire, can ape
 Each dialect, each various shape."—
- "Nay, then, to aid thy project, Guy—
 Soft! who comes here?"—"My trusty spy.
 Speak, Hamlin! hast thou lodged our deer?"*—
- "I have; but two fair stags are near.
 I watched her as she slowly strayed
 From Egliston up Thorsgill glade;
 But Wilfrid Wycliffe sought her side,
 And then young Redmond in his pride
 Shot down to meet them on their way.
 Much, as it seemed, was theirs to say:
 There's time to pitch both toil and net,
 Before their path be homeward set."
 A hurried and a whispered speech
 Did Bertram's will to Denzil teach,
 Who, turning to the robber band,
 Bade four, the bravest, take the brand.

CANTO FOURTH.

I.

WHEN Denmark's Raven soared on high
 Triumphant through Northumbrian sky,
 Till, hovering near, her fatal croak
 Bade Reged's Britons dread the yoke,†
 And the broad shadow of her wing
 Blackened each cataract and spring,
 Where Tees in tumult leaves his source,
 Thundering o'er Caldron and High-Force;‡
 Beneath the shade the Northmen came,
 Fixed on each vale a Runic name,§

* See Note 36. † See Note 37. ‡ See Note 38. § See Note 39.

Reared high their altars' rugged stone,
And gave their gods the land they won.
Then, Balder, one bleak garth was thine,
And one sweet brooklet's silver line,
And Woden's Croft did title gain
From the stern Father of the Slain ;
But to the Monarch of the Mace,
That held in fight the foremost place,
To Odin's son, and Sifia's spouse,
Near Stratforth high they paid their vows,
Remembered Thor's victorious fame,
And gave the dell the Thunderer's name.

II.

Yet Scald or Kemper erred, I ween,
Who gave that soft and quiet scene,
With all its varied light and shade,
And every little sunny glade,
And the blithe brook that strolls along
Its pebbled bed with summer song,
To the grim god of blood and scar,
The grisly King of Northern War.
O ! better were its banks assigned
To spirits of a gentler kind ;
For where the thicket groups recede,
And the rath primrose decks the mead,
The velvet grass seems carpet meet
For the light fairies' lively feet.
Yon tufted knoll, with daisies strown,
Might make proud Oberon a throne,
While, hidden in the thicket nigh,
Puck should brood o'er his frolic sly ;
And where profuse the wood-vetch clings
Round ash and elm in verdant rings,
Its pale and azure-pencilled flower
Should canopy Titania's bower.

III.

Here rise no cliffs the vale to shade,
But, skirting every sunny glade,

In fair variety of green
 The woodland lends its silvan screen.
 Hoary, yet haughty, frowns the oak,
 Its boughs by weight of ages broke ;
 And towers erect, in sable spire,
 The pine-tree scathed by lightning fire ;
 The drooping ash and birch, between,
 Hang their fair tresses o'er the green ;
 And all beneath, at random grow
 Each coppice dwarf of varied show,
 Or, round the stems profusely twined,
 Fling summer odours on the wind.
 Such varied group Urbino's hand
 Round him of Tarsus nobly planned,
 What time he bade proud Athens own
 On Mars's Mount the God Unknown !
 Then grey Philosophy stood nigh,
 Though bent by age, in spirit high ;
 There rose the scar-seamed Veteran's spear.
 There Grecian Beauty bent to hear,
 While Childhood at her foot was placed,
 Or clung delighted to her waist.

IV.

"And rest we here," Matilda said,
 And sat her in the varying shade.
 "Chance-met, we well may steal an hour,
 To friendship due, from fortune's power.
 Thou, Wilfrid, ever kind, must lend
 Thy counsel to thy sister-friend ;
 And, Redmond, thou, at my behest,
 No further urge thy desperate 'quest.
 For to my care a charge is left,
 Dangerous to one of aid bereft,
 Well-nigh an orphan, and alone,
 Captive her sire, her house o'erthrown."
 Wilfrid, with wonted kindness graced,
 Beside her on the turf she placed ;
 Then paused, with downcast look and eye,
 Nor bade young Redmond seat him nigh.

Her conscious diffidence he saw,
Drew backward as in modest awe,
And sat a little space removed,
Unmarked to gaze on her he loved.

V.

Wreathed in its dark-brown rings, her hair
Half hid Matilda's forehead fair,
Half hid and half revealed to view
Her full dark eye of hazel hue.
The rose, with faint and feeble streak,
So slightly tinged the maiden's cheek
That you had said her hue was pale ;
But if she faced the summer gale,
Or spoke, or sung, or quicker moved,
Or heard the praise of those she loved,
Or when of interest was expressed
Aught that waked feeling in her breast,
The mantling blood in ready play
Rivalled the blush of rising day.
There was a soft and pensive grace,
A cast of thought, upon her face,
That suited well the forehead high,
The eyelash dark, and downcast eye ;
The mild expression spoke a mind
In duty firm, composed, resigned ;—
'Tis that which Roman art has given
To mark their maiden Queen of Heaven.
In hours of sport, that mood gave way
To Fancy's light and frolic play ;
And when the dance, or tale, or song,
In harmless mirth sped time along,
Full oft her doating sire would call
His Maud the merriest of them all.
But days of war, and civil crime,
Allowed but ill such festal time,
And her soft pensiveness of brow
Had deepened into sadness now.
In Marston field her father ta'en,
Her friends dispersed, brave Mortham slain ;

While every ill her soul foretold
 From Oswald's thirst of power and gold,
 And boding thoughts that she must part
 With a soft vision of her heart,—
 All lowered around the lovely maid,
 To darken her dejection's shade.

VI.

Who has not heard—while Erin yet
 Strove 'gainst the Saxon's iron bit—
 Who has not heard how brave O'Neale
 In English blood imbrued his steel,*
 Against St. George's Cross blazed high
 The banners of his Tanistry,
 To fiery Essex gave the foil,
 And reigned a prince on Ulster's soil?
 But chief arose his victor pride,
 When that brave Marshal fought and died,†
 And Avon-Duff to ocean bore
 His billows red with Saxon gore.
 'Twas first, in that disastrous fight,
 Rokeby and Mortham proved their might.
 There had they fallen 'mongst the rest,
 But pity touched a chieftain's breast;
 The Tanist he to great O'Neale,‡
 He checked his followers' bloody zeal,
 To quarter took the kinsmen bold,
 And bore them to his mountain-hold,
 Gave them each silvan joy to know,
 Slieve-Donard's cliffs and woods could show,
 Shared with them Erin's festal cheer,
 Showed them the chase of wolf and deer,
 And, when a fitting time was come,
 Safe and unransomed sent them home,
 Loaded with many a gift, to prove
 A generous foe's respect and love.

VII.

Years speed away. On Rokeby's head
 Some touch of early snow was shed;

* See Note 40.

† See Note 41.

‡ See Note 42.

Calm he enjoyed, by Greta's wave,
 The peace which James the Peaceful gave,
 While Mortham, far beyond the main,
 Waged his fierce wars on Indian Spain.—
 It chanced upon a wintry night,
 That whitened Stanmore's stormy height,
 The chase was o'er, the stag was killed,
 In Rokeby hall the cups were filled,
 And by the huge stone-chimney sate
 The Knight in hospitable state.
 Moonless the sky, the hour was late,
 When a loud summons shook the gate,
 And sore for entrance and for aid
 A voice of foreign accent prayed.
 The porter answered to the call,
 And instant rushed into the hall
 A Man, whose aspect and attire
 Startled the circle by the fire.

VIII.

His plaited hair in elf-locks spread *
 Around his bare and matted head;
 On leg and thigh, close stretched and trim,
 His vesture showed the sinewy limb;
 In saffron dyed, a linen vest
 Was frequent folded round his breast;
 A mantle long and loose he wore,
 Shaggy with ice and stained with gore.
 He clasped a burden to his heart,
 And, resting on a knotted dart,
 The snow from hair and beard he shook,
 And round him gazed with wildered look.
 Then up the hall, with staggering pace,
 He hastened by the blaze to place,
 Half lifeless from the bitter air,
 His load, a Boy of beauty rare.
 To Rokeby, next, he louted low,
 Then stood erect his tale to show,
 With wild majestic port and tone,
 Like envoy of some barbarous throne.†

* See Note 43.

† See Note 44.

"Sir Richard, Lord of Rokeby, hear!
Turlough O'Neale salutes thee dear;
He graces thee, and to thy care
Young Redmond gives, his grandson fair.
He bids thee breed him as thy son,
For Turlough's days of joy are done;
And other lords have seized his land,
And faint and feeble is his hand,
And all the glory of Tyrone
Is like a morning vapour flown.
To bind the duty on thy soul,
He bids thee think on Erin's bowl!
If any wrong the young O'Neale,
He bids thee think of Erin's steel!
To Mortham first this charge was due,
But, in his absence, honours you.—
Now is my master's message by,
And Ferraught will contented die."

IX.

His look grew fixed, his cheek grew pale,
He sunk when he had told his tale;
For, hid beneath his mantle wide,
A mortal wound was in his side.
Vain was all aid—in terror wild,
And sorrow, screamed the orphan Child.
Poor Ferraught raised his wistful eyes,
And faintly strove to soothe his cries;
All reckless of his dying pain,
He blest and blest him o'er again,
And kissed the little hands outspread,
And kissed and crossed the infant head,
And, in his native tongue and phrase,
Prayed to each saint to watch his days;
Then all his strength together drew,
The charge to Rokeby to renew.
When half was faltered from his breast,
And half by dying signs expressed,
"Bless the O'Neale!" he faintly said,
And thus the faithful spirit fled.

X.

'Twas long ere soothing might prevail
Upon the Child to end the tale ;
And then he said, that from his home
His grandsire had been forced to roam,
Which had not been if Redmond's hand
Had but had strength to draw the brand,
The brand of Lenaugh More the Red,
That hung beside the grey wolf's head.—
'Twas from his broken phrase descried
His foster-father was his guide,*
Who, in his charge, from Ulster bore
Letters and gifts a goodly store ;
But ruffians met them in the wood.
Ferraight in battle boldly stood,
Till wounded and o'erpowered at length,
And stripped of all, his failing strength
Just bore him here—and then the child
Renewed again his moaning wild.

XI.

The tear down childhood's cheek that flows
Is like the dewdrop on the rose ;
When next the summer breeze comes by,
And waves the bush, the flower is dry.
Won by their care, the orphan Child
Soon on his new protector smiled,
With dimpled cheek and eye so fair,
Through his thick curls of flaxen hair.
But blithest laughed that cheek and eye
When Rokeby's little Maid was nigh ;
'Twas his, with elder brother's pride,
Matilda's tottering steps to guide ;
His native lays in Irish tongue,
To soothe her infant ear he sung,
And primrose twined with daisy fair,
To form a chaplet for her hair.

* See Note 45.

By lawn, by grove, by brooklet's strand,
The children still were hand in hand,
And good Sir Richard smiling eyed
The early knot so kindly tied.

XII.

But summer months bring wilding shoot
From bud to bloom, from bloom to fruit;
And years draw on our human span
From child to boy, from boy to man,
And soon in Rokeby's woods is seen
A gallant boy in hunter's green.
He loves to wake the felon boar
In his dark haunt on Greta's shore,
And loves, against the deer so dun,
To draw the shaft or lift the gun;
Yet more he loves, in autumn prime,
The hazel's spreading boughs to climb,
And down its clustered stores to hail
Where young Matilda holds her veil.
And she, whose veil receives the shower,
Is altered too, and knows her power;
Assumes a monitress's pride,
Her Redmond's dangerous sports to chide:
Yet listens still to hear him tell
How the grim wild-boar fought and fell,
How at his fall the bugle rung
Till rock and greenwood answer flung;
Then blesses her, that man can find
A pastime of such savage kind!

XIII.

But Redmond knew to weave his tale
So well with praise of wood and dale,
And knew so well each point to trace
Gives living interest to the chase,
And knew so well o'er all to throw
His spirit's wild romantic glow,
That, while she blamed, and while she feared,
She loved each venturous tale she heard.

Oft, too, when drifted snow and rain
To bower and hall their steps restrain,
Together they explored the page
Of glowing bard or gifted sage ;
Oft, placed the evening fire beside,
The minstrel art alternate tried ;
While gladsome harp and lively lay
Bade winter night flit fast away :
Thus from their childhood blending still
Their sport, their study, and their skill,
A union of the soul they prove,
But must not think that it was love.
But though they dared not, envious Fame
Soon dared to give that union name ;
And when so often, side by side,
From year to year the pair she eyed,
She sometimes blamed the good old Knight
As dull of ear and dim of sight,
Sometimes his purpose would declare
That young O'Neale should wed his heir.

XIV.

The suit of Wilfrid rent disguise
And bandage from the lovers' eyes ;
'Twas plain that Oswald, for his son,
Had Rokeby's favour well-nigh won.
Now must they meet with change of cheer,
With mutual looks of shame and fear ;
Now must Matilda stray apart,
To school her disobedient heart ;
And Redmond now alone must rue
The love he never can subdue.
But factions rose, and Rokeby swore
No rebel's son should wed his heir ;
And Redmond, nurtured while a child,
In many a bard's traditions wild,
Now sought the lonely wood or stream,
To cherish there a happier dream,
Of maiden won by sword or lance,
As in the regions of romance ;

And count the heroes of his line,
 Great Nial of the Pledges Nine,*
 Shane-Dymas wild,† and Geraldine,‡
 And Connan-More, who vowed his race
 For ever to the fight and chase,
 And cursed him, of his lineage born,
 Should sheathe the sword to reap the corn,
 Or leave the mountain and the wold
 To shroud himself in castled hold.
 From such examples hope he drew,
 And brightened as the trumpet blew.

XV.

If brides were won by heart and blade,
 Redmond had both his cause to aid,
 And all besides of nurture rare
 That might beseem a baron's heir.
 Turlough O'Neale, in Erin's strife,
 On Rokeby's Lord bestowed his life;
 And well did Rokeby's generous Knight
 Young Redmond for the deed requite.
 Nor was his liberal care and cost
 Upon the gallant stripling lost :
 Seek the North Riding broad and wide,
 Like Redmond none could steed bestride ;
 From Tynemouth search to Cumberland,
 Like Redmond none could wield a brand ;
 And then, of humour kind and free,
 And bearing him to each degree
 With frank and fearless courtesy,
 There never youth was formed to steal
 Upon the heart like brave O'Neale.

XVI.

Sir Richard loved him as his son ;
 And when the days of peace were done,
 And to the gales of war he gave
 The banner of his sires to wave,

* See Note 46.

† See Note 47.

‡ See Note 48

Redmond, distinguished by his care,
He chose that honoured flag to bear,
And named his page, the next degree,
In that old time, to chivalry.*
In five pitched fields he well maintained
The honoured place his worth obtained,
And high was Redmond's youthful name
Blazed in the roll of martial fame.
Had fortune smiled on Marston fight,
The eve had seen him dubbed a knight.
Twice, 'mid the battle's doubtful strife,
Of Rokeby's Lord he saved the life;
But when he saw him prisoner made,
He kissed and then resigned his blade,
And yielded him an easy prey
To those who led the Knight away,
Resolved Matilda's sire should prove
In prison, as in fight, his love.

XVII.

When lovers meet in adverse hour,
'Tis like a sun-glimpse through a shower,
A wat'ry ray an instant seen
The darkly-closing clouds between.
As Redmond on the turf reclined,
The past and present filled his mind.
"It was not thus," Affection said,
"I dreamed of my return, dear maid!
Not thus, when, from thy trembling hand,
I took the banner and the brand,
When round me, as the bugles blew,
Their blades three hundred warriors drew,
And, while the standard I unrolled,
Clashed their bright arms with clamour bold.
Where is that banner now?—its pride
Lies 'whelmed in Ouse's sullen tide!
Where now these warriors?—in their gore,
They cumber Marston's dismal moor!

* See Note 49.

And what avails a useless brand
Held by a captive's shackled hand,
That only would his life retain
To aid thy sire to bear his chain !"—
Thus Redmond to himself apart.
Nor lighter was his rival's heart ;
For Wilfrid, while his generous soul
Disdained to profit by control,
By many a sign could mark too plain,
Save with such aid, his hopes were vain.
But now Matilda's accents stole
On the dark visions of their soul,
And bade their mournful musing fly
Like mist before the zephyr's sigh.

XVIII.

"I need not to my friends recall,
How Mortham shunned my father's hall ;
A man of silence and of woe,
Yet ever anxious to bestow
On my poor self whate'er could prove
A kinsman's confidence and love.
My feeble aid could sometimes chase
The clouds of sorrow for a space ;
But oftener, fixed beyond my power,
I marked his deep despondence lower.
One dismal cause, by all unguessed,
His fearful confidence confessed ;
And twice it was my hap to see
Examples of that agony
Which for a season can o'erstrain
And wreck the structure of the brain.
He had the awful power to know
The approaching mental overthrow,
And while his mind had courage yet
To struggle with the dreadful fit,
The victim writhed against its throes,
Like wretch beneath a murderer's blows :
This malady, I well could mark,
Sprung from some direful cause and dark.

But still he kept its source concealed,
 Till arming for the civil field;
 Then in my charge he bade me hold
 A treasure huge of gems and gold,
 With this disjointed dismal scroll
 That tells the secret of his soul,
 In such wild words as oft betray
 A mind by anguish forced astray."—

XIX.

Mortham's History.

"Matilda! thou hast seen me start,
 As if a dagger thrilled my heart,
 When it has happed some casual phrase
 Waked memory of my former days.
 Believe, that few can backward cast
 Their thoughts with pleasure on the past;
 But I!—my youth was rash and vain,
 And blood and rage my manhood stain,
 And my grey hairs must now descend
 To my cold grave without a friend!
 Even thou, Matilda, wilt disown
 Thy kinsman when his guilt is known.
 And must I lift the bloody veil
 That hides my dark and fatal tale?
 I must—I will—Pale Phantom, cease!
 Leave me one little hour in peace!
 Thus haunted, think'st thou I have skill
 Thine own commission to fulfil?
 Or, while thou point'st, with gesture fierce,
 Thy blighted cheek, thy bloody hearse,
 How can I paint thee as thou wert,
 So fair in face, so warm in heart!"—

XX.

"Yes, she was fair!—Matilda, thou
 Hast a soft sadness on thy brow;
 But hers was like the sunny glow
 That laughs on earth and all below!

We wedded secret—there was need,
 Differing in country and in creed ;
 And when to Mortham's tower she came,
 We mentioned not her race and name,
 Until thy sire, who fought afar,
 Should turn him home from foreign war,
 On whose kind influence we relied
 To soothe her father's ire and pride.
 Few months we lived retired, unknown
 To all but one dear friend alone,
 One darling friend—I spare his shame,
 I will not write the villain's name !
 My trespasses I might forget,
 And sue in vengeance for the debt
 Due by a brother worm to me,
 Ungrateful to God's clemency,
 That spared me penitential time,
 Nor cut me off amid my crime.

XXI.

“ A kindly smile to all she lent,
 But on her husband's friend 'twas bent
 So kind, that, from its harmless glee,
 The wretch misconstrued villany.
 Repulsed in his presumptuous love,
 A vengeful snare the traitor wove.
 Alone we sat—the flask had flowed,
 My blood with heat unwonted glowed,
 When through the alleyed walk we spied
 With hurried step my Edith glide,
 Cowering beneath the verdant screen,
 As one unwilling to be seen.
 Words cannot paint the fiendish smile
 That curled the traitor's cheek the while !
 Fiercely I questioned of the cause ;
 He made a cold and artful pause,
 Then prayed it might not chafe my mood—
 ‘ There was a gallant in the wood !’
 We had been shooting at the deer ;
 My crossbow (evil chance !) was near :

That ready weapon of my wrath
I caught, and, hasting up the path,
In the yew-grove my wife I found,
A stranger's arms her neck had bound !
I marked his heart—the bow I drew—
I loosed the shaft—'twas more than true !
I found my Edith's dying charms
Locked in her murdered brother's arms !
He came in secret to inquire
Her state, and reconcile her sire.

XXII.

“ All fled my rage. The villain first,
Whose craft my jealousy had nursed,
He sought in far and foreign clime
To 'scape the vengeance of his crime.
The manner of the slaughter done
Was known to few, my guilt to none ;
Some tale my faithful steward framed—
I know not what—of shaft mis-aimed ;
And even from those the act who knew,
He hid the hand from which it flew.
Untouched by human laws I stood,
But God had heard the cry of blood !
There is a blank upon my mind,
A fearful vision ill defined,
Of raving till my flesh was torn,
Of dungeon-bolts and fetters worn ;
And when I waked to woe more mild,
And questioned of my infant child—
(Have I not written that she bare
A boy, like summer morning fair ?)—
With looks confused my menials tell
That armed men in Mortham dell
Beset the nurse's evening way,
And bore her, with her charge, away.
My faithless friend, and none but he,
Could profit by this villany.
Him, then, I sought, with purpose dread
Of treble vengeance on his head !

He 'scaped me; but my bosom's wound
 Some faint relief from wandering found,
 And over distant land and sea
 I bore my load of misery.

XXIII.

" 'Twas then that fate my footsteps led
 Among a daring crew and dread,
 With whom full oft my hated life
 I ventured in such desperate strife,
 That even my fierce associates saw
 My frantic deeds with doubt and awe.
 Much then I learned, and much can show,
 Of human guilt and human woe,
 Yet ne'er have, in my wanderings, known
 A wretch whose sorrows matched my own!—
 It chanced that, after battle fray,
 Upon the bloody field we lay;
 The yellow moon her lustre shed
 Upon the wounded and the dead,
 While, sense in toil and wassail drowned,
 My ruffian comrades slept around.
 There came a voice—its silver tone
 Was soft, Matilda, as thine own—
 'Ah, wretch!' it said, 'what mak'st thou here,
 While unavenged my bloody bier,
 While unprotected lives mine heir,
 Without a father's name and care?'—

XXIV.

" I heard—obeyed—and homeward drew.
 The fiercest of our desperate crew
 I brought, at time of need to aid
 My purposed vengeance, long delayed.
 But, humble be my thanks to Heaven,
 That better hopes and thoughts has given,
 And by our Lord's dear prayer has taught,
 Mercy by mercy must be bought!—
 Let me in misery rejoice—
 I've seen his face—I've heard his voice—

I claimed of him my only child—
 As he disowned the theft, he smiled !
 That very calm and callous look,
 That fiendish sneer, his visage took,
 As when he said, in scornful mood,
 ‘ There is a gallant in the wood ! ’—
 I did not slay him as he stood—
 All praise be to my Maker given !
 Long-suff’rance is one path to heaven.”

XXV. about 511

Thus far the woeful tale was heard,
 When something in the thicket stirred.
 Up Redmond sprung ; the villain Guy
 (For he it was that lurked so nigh)
 Drew back—he durst not cross his steel
 A moment’s space with brave O’Neale,
 For all the treasured gold that rests
 In Mortham’s iron-banded chests.
 Redmond resumed his seat—he said
 Some roe was rustling in the shade.
 Bertram laughed grimly when he saw
 His timorous comrade backward draw :
 “ A trusty mate art thou, to fear
 A single arm, and aid so near !
 Yet have I seen thee mark a deer.
 Give me thy carabine ; I’ll show
 An art that thou wilt gladly know,
 How thou mayst safely quell a foe.”

XXVI.

On hands and knees fierce Bertram drew
 The spreading birch and hazels through,
 Till he had Redmond full in view.
 The gun he levelled—mark like this
 Was Bertram never known to miss,
 When fair opposed to aim there sate
 An object of his mortal hate.
 That day young Redmond’s death had seen,
 But twice Matilda came between to

The carabine and Redmond's breast,
Just ere the spring his finger pressed.
A deadly oath the ruffian swore,
But yet his fell design forbore.
"It ne'er," he muttered, "shall be said,
That thus I scathed thee, haughty maid!"
Then moved to seek more open aim,
When to his side Guy Denzil came:
"Bertram, forbear!—we are undone
For ever, if thou fire the gun.
By all the fiends, an armed force
Descends the dell, of foot and horse:
We perish if they hear a shot—
Madman! we have a safer plot—
Nay, friend, be ruled, and bear thee back!
Behold, down yonder hollow track,
The warlike leader of the band
Comes, with his broadsword in his hand."
Bertram looked up: he saw, he knew
That Denzil's fears had counselled true;
Then cursed his fortune and withdrew,
Threaded the woodlands undescried,
And gained the cave on Greta side.

XXVII.

They whom dark Bertram, in his wrath,
Doomed to captivity or death,
Their thoughts to one sad subject lent,
Saw not nor heard the ambushment.
Heedless and unconcerned they sate,
While on the very verge of fate;
Heedless and unconcerned remained,
When Heaven the murderer's arm restrained:
As ships drift darkling down the tide,
Nor see the shelves o'er which they glide.
Uninterrupted thus they heard
What Mortham's closing tale declared.
He spoke of wealth as of a load
By Fortune on a wretch bestowed,

In bitter mockery of hate,
His cureless woes to aggravate ;
But yet he prayed Matilda's care
Might save that treasure for his heir—
His Edith's son—for still he raved
As confident his life was saved.
In frequent vision, he averred,
He saw his face, his voice he heard ;
Then argued calm—had murder been,
The blood, the corpses, had been seen ;
Some had pretended, too, to mark
On Windermere a stranger bark,
Whose crew, with jealous care, yet mild,
Guarded a female and a child.
While these faint proofs he told and pressed,
Hope seemed to kindle in his breast ;
Though inconsistent, vague, and vain,
It warped his judgment and his brain.

XXVIII.

These solemn words his story close :—
“Heaven witness for me, that I chose
My part in this sad civil fight,
Moved by no cause but England's right.
My country's groans have bid me draw
My sword for gospel and for law ;—
These righted, I fling arms aside,
And seek my son through Europe wide.
My wealth, on which a kinsman nigh
Already casts a grasping eye,
With thee may unsuspected lie.
When of my death Matilda hears,
Let her retain her trust three years ;
If none, from me, the treasure claim,
Perished is Mortham's race and name.
Then let it leave her generous hand,
And flow in bounty o'er the land,
Soften the wounded prisoner's lot,
Rebuild the peasant's ruined cot :

So spoils, acquired by fight afar,
Shall mitigate domestic war."

XXIX.

The generous youths, who well had known
Of Mortham's mind the powerful tone,
To that high mind, by sorrow swerved,
Gave sympathy his woes deserved ;
But Wilfrid chief, who saw revealed
Why Mortham wished his life concealed,
In secret, doubtless, to pursue
The schemes his wildered fancy drew.
Thoughtful he heard Matilda tell
That she would share her father's cell,
His partner of captivity,
Where'er his prison-house should be ;
Yet grieved to think that Rokeby Hall,
Dismantled, and forsook by all,
Open to rapine and to stealth,
Had now no safeguard for the wealth
Entrusted by her kinsman kind,
And for such noble use designed.
" Was Barnard Castle then her choice,"
Wilfrid inquired with hasty voice,
" Since there the victor's laws ordain
Her father must a space remain ?"
A fluttered hope his accents shook,
A fluttered joy was in his look.
Matilda hastened to reply,
For anger flashed in Redmond's eye :
" Duty," she said, with gentle grace,
" Kind Wilfrid, has no choice of place ;
Else had I for my sire assigned
Prison less galling to his mind,
Than that his wild-wood haunts which sees
And hears the murmur of the Tees,
Recalling thus, with every glance,
What captive's sorrow can enhance ;
But where those woes are highest, there
Needs Rokeby most his daughter's care."

xxx.

- He felt the kindly check she gave,
And stood abashed ; then answered grave :—
“ I sought thy purpose, noble maid,
Thy doubts to clear, thy schemes to aid.
I have beneath mine own command,
So wills my sire, a gallant band,
And well could send some horsemen wight
To bear the treasure forth by night,
And so bestow it as you deem
In these ill days may safest seem.”—
“ Thanks, gentle Wilfrid, thanks,” she said ;
“ Oh, be it not one day delayed !
And, more, thy sister-friend to aid,
Be thou thyself content to hold,
In thine own keeping, Mortham’s gold,
Safest with thee.”—While thus she spoke,
Armed soldiers on their converse broke,
The same of whose approach afraid
The ruffians left their ambuscade.
Their chief to Wilfrid bended low,
Then looked around as for a foe.
“ What mean’st thou, friend,” young Wycliffe said,
“ Why thus in arms beset the glade ? ”—
“ That would I gladly learn from you ;
For up my squadron as I drew,
To exercise our martial game
Upon the moor of Barningham,
A stranger told you were waylaid,
Surrounded, and to death betrayed.
He had a leader’s voice, I ween,
A falcon glance, a warrior’s mien.
He bade me bring you instant aid ;
I doubted not, and I obeyed.”

xxxI.

Wilfrid changed colour, and, amazed,
Turned short, and on the speaker gazed ;
While Redmond every thicket round
Tracked earnest as a questing hound,

And Denzil's carabine he found—
Sure evidence, by which they knew
The warning was as kind as true.
Wisest it seemed, with cautious speed
To leave the dell. It was agreed
That Redmond, with Matilda fair,
And fitting guard, should home repair;
At nightfall Wilfrid should attend,
With a strong band, his sister-friend,
To bear with her from Rokeby's bowers
To Barnard Castle's lofty towers,
Secret and safe, the banded chests
In which the wealth of Mortham rests.
This hasty purpose fixed, they part,
Each with a grieved and anxious heart.

CANTO FIFTH.

L

THE sultry summer day is done,
The western hills have hid the sun,
But mountain peak and village spire
Retain reflection of his fire.
Old Barnard's towers are purple still
To those that gaze from Toller Hill;
Distant and high, the tower of Bowes
Like steel upon the anvil glows;
And Stanmore's ridge, behind that lay,
Rich with the spoils of parting day,
In crimson and in gold arrayed,
Streaks yet awhile the closing shade,
Then slow resigns to darkening heaven
The tints which brighter hours had given.
Thus aged men full loath and slow
The vanities of life forego,
And count their youthful follies o'er,
Till Memory lends her light no more.

II.

The eve, that slow on upland fades,
 Has darker closed on Rokeby's glades,
 Where, sunk within their banks profound,
 Her guardian streams to meeting wound.
 The stately oaks, whose sombre frown
 Of noontide made a twilight brown,
 Impervious now to fainter light,
 Of twilight make an early night.
 Hoarse into middle air arose
 The vespers of the roosting crows,
 And with congenial murmurs seem
 To wake the Genii of the stream ;
 For louder clamoured Greta's tide,
 And Tees in deeper voice replied.
 And fitful waked the evening wind,
 Fitful in sighs its breath resigned.
 Wilfrid, whose fancy-nurtured soul
 Felt in the scene a soft control,
 With lighter footstep pressed the ground,
 And often paused to look around ;
 And, though his path was to his love,
 Could not but linger in the grove,
 To drink the thrilling interest dear
 Of awful pleasure checked by fear.
 Such inconsistent moods have we,
 Even when our passions strike the key.

III.

Now through the wood's dark mazes past,
 The opening lawn he reached at last,
 Where, silvered by the moonlight ray,
 The ancient Hall before him lay.
 Those martial terrors long were fled
 That frowned of old around its head :
 The battlements, the turrets grey,
 Seemed half abandoned to decay ;*

* See Note 50.

On barbican and keep of stone
Stern Time the foeman's work had done ;
Where banners the invader braved,
The harebell now and wallflower waved ;
In the rude guard-room, where of yore
Their weary hours the warders wore,
Now, while the cheerful fagots blaze,
On the paved floor the spindle plays ;
The flanking guns dismounted lie ;
The moat is ruinous and dry ;
The grim portcullis gone—and all
The fortress turned to peaceful Hall.

IV.

But yet precautions, lately ta'en,
Showed danger's day revived again ;
The courtyard walls showed marks of care
The fall'n defences to repair,
Lending such strength as might withstand
The insult of marauding band.
The beams once more were taught to bear
The trembling drawbridge into air,
And not, till questioned o'er and o'er,
For Wilfrid oped the jealous door ;
And when he entered, bolt and bar
Resumed their place with sullen jar.
Then, as he crossed the vaulted porch,
The old grey porter raised his torch,
And viewed him o'er, from foot to head,
Ere to the hall his steps he led.
That huge old hall, of knightly state,
Dismantled seemed and desolate ;
The moon, through transom-shafts of stone
Which crossed the latticed oriels, shone,
And by the mournful light she gave,
The Gothic vault seemed funeral cave.
Pennon and banner waved no more
O'er beams of stag and tusks of boar,
Nor glimmering arms were marshalled seen
To glance those silvan spoils between.

Those arms, those ensigns, borne away,
 Accomplished Rokeby's brave array;
 But all were lost on Marston's day!
 Yet here and there the moonbeams fall
 Where armour yet adorns the wall,
 Cumbrous of size, uncouth to sight,
 And useless in the modern fight;
 Like veteran relic of the wars,
 Known only by neglected scars.

V.

Matilda soon to greet him came,
 And bade them light the evening flame;
 Said, all for parting was prepared,
 And tarried but for Wilfrid's guard.
 But then, reluctant to unfold
 His father's avarice of gold,
 He hinted that, lest jealous eye
 Should on their precious burden pry,
 He judged it best the castle gate
 To enter when the night wore late;
 And therefore he had left command
 With those he trusted of his band,
 That they should be at Rokeby met
 What time the midnight watch was set.
 Now Redmond came, whose anxious care
 Till then was busied to prepare
 All needful, meetly to arrange
 The mansion for its mournful change.
 With Wilfrid's care and kindness pleased,
 His cold unready hand he seized,
 And pressed it till his kindly strain
 The gentle youth returned again:
 Seemed as between them this was said,
 "Awhile let jealousy be dead;
 And let our contest be, whose care
 Shall best assist this helpless fair."

VI. WOOD TOWNHILL

There was no speech the truce to bind,
 It was a compact of the mind,—

A generous thought at once impressed
 On either rival's generous breast.
 Matilda well the secret took
 From sudden change of mien and look,
 And—for not small had been her fear
 Of jealous ire and danger near—
 Felt, even in her dejected state,
 A joy beyond the reach of fate.
 They closed beside the chimney's blaze,
 And talked and hoped for happier days,
 And lent their spirits' rising glow
 Awhile to gild impending woe ;—
 High privilege of youthful time,
 Worth all the pleasures of our prime !
 The bickering fagot sparkled bright,
 And gave the scene of love to sight ;
 Bade Wilfrid's cheek more lively glow ;
 Played on Matilda's neck of snow,
 Her nut-brown curls, and forehead high ;
 And laughed in Redmond's azure eye.
 Two lovers by the maiden sate,
 Without a glance of jealous hate ;
 The maid her lovers sate between,
 With open brow and equal mien ;—
 It is a sight but rarely spied,
 Thanks to man's wrath and woman's pride.

VII.

While thus in peaceful guise they sate,
 A knock alarmed the outer gate,
 And, ere the tardy porter stirred,
 The tinkling of a harp was heard ;
 A manly voice, of mellow swell,
 Bore burden to the music well :—

Song.

“ Summer eve is gone and past,
 Summer dew is falling fast ;
 I have wandered all the day,
 Do not bid me farther stray !

Gentle hearts of gentle kin,
Take the wandering Harper in !”

But the stern porter answer gave,
With “Get thee hence, thou strolling knave !
The king wants soldiers ; war, I trow,
Were meeter trade for such as thou.”
At this unkind reproof, again
Answered the ready Minstrel’s strain :—

Song resumed.

“ Bid not me, in battlefield,
Buckler lift or broadsword wield !
All my strength and all my art
Is to touch the gentle heart,
With the wizard notes that ring
From the peaceful minstrel-string.”

The porter, all unmoved, replied,—
“ Depart in peace, with Heaven to guide ;
If longer by the gate thou dwell,
Trust me, thou shalt not part so well.”

VIII.

With somewhat of appealing look,
The Harper’s part young Wilfrid took :
“ These notes so wild and ready thrill,
They show no vulgar minstrel’s skill.
Hard were his task to seek a home
More distant, since the night is come ;
And for his faith I dare engage.
Your Harpool’s blood is soured by age ;
His gate, once readily displayed,
To greet the friend, the poor to aid,
Now even to me, though known of old,
Did but reluctantly unfold.”—
“ O blame not, as poor Harpool’s crime,
An evil of this evil time. aglad wro
He deems dependent on his care
The safety of his patron’s heir,

Nor judges meet to ope the tower
 To guest unknown at parting hour,
 Urging his duty to excess
 Of rough and stubborn faithfulness.
 For this poor Harper, I would fain
 He may relax:—hark to his strain!

CHORUS IX.

Song resumed.

“I have song of war for knight,
 Lay of love for lady bright,
 Fairy tale to lull the heir,
 Goblin grim the maids to scare:
 Dark the night, and long till day,
 Do not bid me farther stray!

“Rokeby’s lords of martial fame,
 I can count them name by name;
 Legends of their line there be,
 Known to few, but known to me;
 If you honour Rokeby’s kin,
 Take the wandering Harper in!

“Rokeby’s lords had fair regard
 For the harp, and for the bard.
 Baron’s race throve never well
 Where the curse of minstrel fell:
 If you love that noble kin,
 Take the weary Harper in!”—

“Hark! Harpool parleys—there is hope,”
 Said Redmond, “that the gate will ope.”—
 “For all thy brag and boast, I trow,
 Nought know’st thou of the Felon Sow,”*
 Quoth Harpool; “nor how Greta side
 She roamed, and Rokeby forest wide;
 Nor how Ralph Rokeby gave the beast
 To Richmond’s friars to make a feast.

* See Note 51.

Of Gilbert Griffinson the tale
 Goes ; and of gallant Peter Dale,
 That well could strike with sword amain ;
 And of the valiant son of Spain,
 Friar Middleton, and blithe Sir Ralph—
 There were a jest to make us laugh !
 If thou canst tell it, in yon shed
 Thou'st won thy supper and thy bed."

X. and others found out

Matilda smiled : "Cold hope," said she,
 "From Harpool's love of minstrelsy !
 But, for this Harper, may we dare,
 Redmond, to mend his couch and fare?"—
 "O ! ask me not : at minstrel-string
 My heart from infancy would spring ;
 Nor can I hear its simplest strain,
 But it brings Erin's dream again,
 When placed by Owen Lysagh's knee
 (The Filea of O'Neale was he,*
 A blind and bearded man, whose eld
 Was sacred as a prophet's held).
 I've seen a ring of rugged kerne,
 With aspects shaggy, wild, and stern,
 Enchanted by the master's lay,
 Linger around the livelong day,
 Shift from wild rage to wilder glee,
 To love, to grief, to ecstasy,
 And feel each varied change of soul
 Obedient to the bard's control.—
 Ah, Clamdeboy ! thy friendly floor
 Slieve-Donard's oak shall light no more ; †
 Nor Owen's harp, beside the blaze,
 Tell maiden's love or hero's praise !
 The mantling brambles hide thy hearth,
 Centre of hospitable mirth ;
 All undistinguished in the glade,
 My sires' glad home is prostrate laid,

* See Note 52. † See Note 53.

Their vassals wander wide and far,
 Serve foreign lords in distant war,
 And now the stranger's sons enjoy
 The lovely woods of Clandeboy!"
 He spoke, and proudly turned aside,
 The starting tear to dry and hide.

XI.

Matilda's dark and softened eye
 Was glistening ere O'Neale's was dry.
 Her hand upon his arm she laid,—
 "It is the will of Heaven," she said.
 "And think'st thou, Redmond, I can part
 From this loved home with lightsome heart,
 Leaving to wild neglect whate'er
 Even from my infancy was dear?
 For in this calm domestic bound
 Were all Matilda's pleasures found.
 That hearth, my sire was wont to grace,
 Full soon may be a stranger's place.
 This hall, in which a child I played,
 Like thine, dear Redmond, lowly laid,
 The bramble and the thorn may braid;
 Or, passed for aye from me and mine,
 It ne'er may shelter Rokeby's line.
 Yet is this consolation given,
 My Redmond,—'tis the will of Heaven."
 Her word, her action, and her phrase
 Were kindly, as in early days;
 For cold reserve had lost its power
 In sorrow's sympathetic hour.
 Young Redmond dared not trust his voice;
 But rather had it been his choice
 To share that melancholy hour,
 Than, armed with all a chieftain's power,
 In full possession to enjoy
 Slieve-Donard wide, and Clandeboy.

XII.

The blood left Wilfrid's ashen cheek;
 Matilda sees, and hastes to speak

“ Happy in friendship’s ready aid,
Let all my murmurs here be staid !
And Rokeby’s Maiden will not part
From Rokeby’s Hall with moody heart.
This night, at least, for Rokeby’s fame,
The hospitable hearth shall flame,
And, ere its native heir retire,
Find for the wanderer rest and fire,
While this poor Harper, by the blaze,
Recounts the tale of other days.
Bid Harpool ope the door with speed,
Admit him, and relieve each need.—
Meantime, kind Wycliffe, wilt thou try
Thy minstrel skill?—Nay, no reply—
And look not sad !—I guess thy thought :
Thy verse with laurels would be bought ;
And poor Matilda, landless now,
Has not a garland for thy brow.
True, I must leave sweet Rokeby’s glades,
Nor wander more in Greta’s shades ;
But sure, no rigid jailer, thou
Wilt a short prison-walk allow,
Where summer flowers grow wild at will,
On Marwood Chase and Toller Hill ;*
Then holly green and lily gay
Shall twine in guerdon of thy lay.”
The mournful youth, a space aside,
To tune Matilda’s harp applied ;
And then a low sad descant rung,
As prelude to the lay he sung.

XIII.

The Cypress Wreath.

O Lady, twine no wreath for me,
Or twine it of the cypress-tree !
Too lively glow the lilies light,
The varnished holly’s all too bright,

* See Note 54.

The May-flower and the eglantine
 May shade a brow less sad than mine;
 But, Lady, weave no wreath for me,
 Or weave it of the cypress-tree!

Let dimpled Mirth his temples twine
 With tendrils of the laughing vine;
 The manly oak, the pensive yew,
 To patriot and to sage be due;
 The myrtle bough bids lovers live,
 But that Matilda will not give;
 Then, Lady, twine no wreath for me,
 Or twine it of the cypress-tree!

Let merry England proudly rear
 Her blended roses, bought so dear;
 Let Albin bind her bonnet blue
 With heath and harebell dipped in dew;
 On favoured Erin's crest be seen
 The flower she loves of emerald green;
 But, Lady, twine no wreath for me,
 Or twine it of the cypress-tree!

Strike the wild harp, while maids prepare
 The ivy meet for minstrel's hair;
 And, while his crown of laurel leaves
 With bloody hand the victor weaves,
 Let the loud trump his triumph tell:
 But when you hear the passing-bell,
 Then, Lady, twine a wreath for me,
 And twine it of the cypress-tree!

Yes! twine for me the cypress bough;
 But, O Matilda, twine not now!
 Stay till a few brief months are past,
 And I have looked and loved my last!
 When villagers my shroud bestrew
 With pansies, rosemary, and rue,—
 Then, Lady, weave a wreath for me,
 And weave it of the cypress-tree!

your door. XIV. your door takes her leave;

O'Neale observed the starting tear,
And spoke with kind and blithesome cheer :
"No, noble Wilfrid ! ere the day
When mourns the land thy silent lay,
Shall many a wreath be freely wove
By hand of friendship and of love.
I would not wish that rigid Fate
Had doomed thee to a captive's state,
Whose hands are bound by honour's law,
Who wears a sword he must not draw ;
But were it so, in minstrel pride
The land together would we ride,
On prancing steeds, like Harpers old,
Bound for the halls of barons bold.
Each lover of the lyre we'd seek,
From Michael's Mount to Skiddaw's Peak,
Survey wild Albin's mountain strand,
And roam green Erin's lovely land ;
While thou the gentler souls should move
With lay of pity and of love,
And I, thy mate, in rougher strain,
Would sing of war and warriors slain.
Old England's bards were vanquished then,
And Scotland's vaunted Hawthornden,
And, silenced on Iernian shore,
M'Curtin's harp should charm no more !" *
In lively mood he spoke, to wile
From Wilfrid's woe-worn cheek a smile.

*Blod has XV. *your door takes her leave;

"But," said Matilda, "ere thy name,
Good Redmond, gain its destined fame;
Say, wilt thou kindly deign to call
Thy brother minstrel to the hall ?
Bid all the household, too, attend,
Each in his rank a humble friend.

* See Note 55.

I know their faithful hearts will grieve
When their poor Mistress takes her leave ;
So let the horn and beaker flow
To mitigate their parting woe.”
The Harper came :—in youth’s first prime
Himself ; in mode of olden time
His garb was fashioned, to express
The ancient English minstrel’s dress,*
A seemly gown of Kendal green,
With gorget closed of silver sheen ;
His harp in silken scarf was slung,
And by his side an anlace hung.
It seemed some masquer’s quaint array,
For revel or for holiday.

XVI.

He made obeisance, with a free
Yet studied air of courtesy.
Each look and accent, framed to please,
Seemed to affect a playful ease ;
His face was of that doubtful kind
That wins the eye, but not the mind ;
Yet harsh it seemed to deem amiss
Of brow so young and smooth as this.
His was the subtle look and sly,
That, spying all, seems nought to spy ;
Round all the group his glances stole,
Unmarked themselves, to mark the whole,
Yet sunk beneath Matilda’s look,
Nor could the eye of Redmond brook.
To the suspicious, or the old,
Subtle and dangerous and bold
Had seemed this self-invited guest ;
But young our lovers,—and the rest,
Wrapt in their sorrow and their fear
At parting of their Mistress dear,
Tear-blinded to the Castle hall
Came as to bear her funeral pall.

* See Note 56.

XVII.

All that expression base was gone
 When waked the guest his minstrel tone ;
 It fled at inspiration's call,
 As erst the demon fled from Saul.
 More noble glance he cast around,
 More free-drawn breath inspired the sound,
 His pulse beat bolder and more high,
 In all the pride of minstrelsy.
 Alas ! too soon that pride was o'er,
 Sunk with the lay that bade it soar !
 His soul resumed, with habit's chain,
 Its vices wild and follies vain,
 And gave the talent, with him born,
 To be a common curse and scorn.
 Such was the youth whom Rokeby's Maid,
 With condescending kindness, prayed
 Here to renew the strains she loved,
 At distance heard and well approved.

XVIII.

Song.

THE HARP.

I was a wild and wayward boy,
 My childhood scorned each childish toy ;
 Retired from all, reserved and coy,

To musing prone,

I wooed my solitary joy,

My Harp alone !

My youth, with bold Ambition's mood,
 Despised the humble stream and wood
 Where my poor father's cottage stood,

To fame unknown ;

What should my soaring views make good ?

My Harp alone !

Love came with all his frantic fire
 And wild romance of vain desire :

The baron's daughter heard my lyre,
 And praised the tone ;—
 What could presumptuous hope inspire?
 My Harp alone !

At manhood's touch the bubble burst,
 And manhood's pride the vision curst,
 And all that had my folly nursed
 Love's sway to own ;
 Yet spared the spell that lulled me first,
 My Harp alone !

Woe came with war, and want with woe ;
 And it was mine to undergo
 Each outrage of the rebel foe :—
 Can aught atone
 My fields laid waste, my cot laid low ?
 My Harp alone !

Ambition's dreams I've seen depart,
 Have rued of penury the smart,
 Have felt of love the venom'd dart
 When hope was flown ;
 Yet rests one solace to my heart,—
 My Harp alone !

Then, over mountain, moor, and hill,
 My faithful Harp, I'll bear thee still ;
 And when this life of want and ill
 Is well-nigh gone,
 Thy strings mine elegy shall thrill,
 My Harp alone !

XIX.

"A pleasing lay !" Matilda said ;
 But Harpool shook his old grey head,
 And took his baton and his torch,
 To seek his guard-room in the porch.
 Edmund observed : with sudden change,
 Among the strings his fingers range,

Until they waked a bolder glee
Of military melody ;
Then paused amid the martial sound,
And looked with well-feigned fear around.
“None to this noble house belong,”
He said, “that would a Minstrel wrong,
Whose fate has been, through good and ill,
To love his Royal Master still,
And, with your honoured leave, would fain
Rejoice you with a loyal strain.”
Then, as assured by sign and look,
The warlike tone again he took ;
And Harpool stopped, and turned to hear
A ditty of the Cavalier.

XX.

Song.

THE CAVALIER.

While the dawn on the mountain was misty and grey,
My true love has mounted his steed and away
Over hill, over valley, o'er dale, and o'er down,—
Heaven shield the brave Gallant that fights for the Crown !

He has doffed the silk doublet the breastplate to bear,
He has placed the steel-cap o'er his long flowing hair,
From his belt to his stirrup his broadsword hangs down,—
Heaven shield the brave Gallant that fights for the Crown !

For the rights of fair England that broadsword he draws,
Her King is his leader, her Church is his cause ;
His watchword is honour, his pay is renown,—
God strike with the Gallant that strikes for the Crown !

They may boast of their Fairfax, their Waller, and all
The roundheaded rebels of Westminster Hall ;
But tell those bold traitors of London's proud town
That the spears of the North have encircled the Crown.

There's Derby and Cavendish, dread of their foes ;
There's Erin's high Ormond, and Scotland's Montrose !

Would you match the base Skippon, and Massey, and Brown,
With the Barons of England that fight for the Crown?

Now joy to the crest of the brave Cavalier!
Be his banner unconquered, resistless his spear,
Till in peace and in triumph his toils he may drown
In a pledge to fair England, her Church, and her Crown!

XXI.

"Alas!" Matilda said, "that strain,
Good Harper, now is heard in vain!
The time has been, at such a sound,
When Rokeby's vassals gathered round,
A hundred manly hearts would bound;
But now the stirring verse we hear,
Like trump in dying soldier's ear!
Listless and sad the notes we own,
The power to answer them is flown.
Yet not without his meet applause
Be he that sings the rightful cause,
Even when the crisis of its fate
To human eye seems desperate.
While Rokeby's heir such power retains,
Let this slight guerdon pay thy pains.
And, lend thy harp; I fain would try,
If my poor skill can aught supply,
Ere yet I leave my father's hall,
To mourn the cause in which we fall."

XXII.

The Harper, with a downcast look
And trembling hand, her bounty took.
As yet, the conscious pride of art
Had steeled him in his treacherous part—
A powerful spring, of force unguessed,
That hath each gentler mood suppressed,
And reigned in many a human breast,
From his that plans the red campaign,
To his that wastes the woodland reign.
The failing wing, the bloodshot eye,
The sportsman marks with apathy,

Each feeling of his victim's ill
 Drowned in his own successful skill.
 The veteran, too, who now no more
 Aspires to head the battle's roar,
 Loves still the triumph of his art,
 And traces on the pencilled chart
 Some stern invader's destined way,
 Through blood and ruin, to his prey ;
 Patriots to death, and towns to flame,
 He dooms, to raise another's name,
 And shares the guilt though not the fame.
 What pays him for his span of time
 Spent in premeditating crime ?
 What against pity arms his heart ?—
 It is the conscious pride of art.

XXIII.

But principles in Edmund's mind
 Were baseless, vague, and undefined.
 His soul, like bark with rudder lost,
 On Passion's changeful tide was tost ;
 Nor Vice nor Virtue had the power
 Beyond the impression of the hour ;
 And O ! when passion rules, how rare
 The hours that fall to Virtue's share !
 Yet now she roused her—for the pride,
 That lack of sterner guilt supplied,
 Could scarce support him when arose
 The lay that mourned Matilda's woes.

Song.

THE FAREWELL.

The sound of Rokeby's woods I hear,
 They mingle with the song ;
 Dark Greta's voice is in mine ear,—
 I must not hear them long.
 From every loved and native haunt
 The native Heir must stray,
 And, like a ghost whom sunbeams daunt,
 Must part before the day.

Soon from the halls my fathers reared
 Their scutcheons may descend ;
 A line so long beloved and feared
 May soon obscurely end,
 No longer here Matilda's tone
 Shall bid these echoes swell ;
 Yet shall they hear her proudly own
 The cause in which we fell.

The Lady paused, and then again
 Resumed the lay in loftier strain :—

XXIV.

Let our halls and towers decay,
 Be our name and line forgot,
 Lands and manors pass away—
 We but share our Monarch's lot.
 If no more our annals show^{!!!}
 Battles won and banners taken,
 Still in death, defeat, and woe,
 Ours be loyalty unshaken !

Constant still in danger's hour,
 Princes owned our fathers' aid ;
 Lands and honours, wealth and power,
 Well their loyalty repaid.
 Perish wealth, and power, and pride !
 Mortal boons by mortals given ;
 But let Constancy abide,[—]
 Constancy's the gift of Heaven.

XXV.

While thus Matilda's lay was heard,
 A thousand thoughts in Edmund stirred.
 In peasant life he might have known
 As fair a face, as sweet a tone ;
 But village notes could ne'er supply
 That rich and varied melody,
 And ne'er in cottage maid was seen
 The easy dignity of mien,

Claiming respect, yet waving state,
That marks the daughters of the great.
Yet not, perchance, had these alone
His scheme of purposed guilt o'erthrown ;
But while her energy of mind
Superior rose to griefs combined,
Lending its kindling to her eye,
Giving her form new majesty,—
To Edmund's thought Matilda seemed
The very object he had dreamed ;
When, long ere guilt his soul had known,
In Winston bowers he mused alone,
Taxing his fancy to combine
The face, the air, the voice divine,
Of princess fair, by cruel fate
Reft of her honours, power, and state,
Till to her rightful realm restored
By destined hero's conquering sword.

XXVI.

“Such was my vision !” Edmund thought.
“And have I, then, the ruin wrought
Of such a maid, that fancy ne'er
In fairest vision formed her peer ?
Was it my hand that could uncloset
The postern to her ruthless foes ?
Foes, lost to honour, law, and faith,—
Their kindest mercy sudden death !
Have I done this ? I ! who have sworn
That if the globe such angel bore,
I would have traced its circle broad
To kiss the ground on which she trod !—
And now—O ! would that earth would rive
And close upon me while alive !—
Is there no hope ?—is all then lost ?—
Bertram's already on his post !
E'en now, beside the Hall's arched door,
I saw his shadow cross the floor !
He was to wait my signal strain—
A little respite thus we gain.

By what I heard the menials say,
 Young Wycliffe's troop are on their way—
 Alarm precipitates the crime!
 My harp must wear away the time."
 And then, in accents faint and low,
 He faltered forth a tale of woe.

XXVII.

Ballad.

"And whither would you lead me then?"
 Quoth the Friar of orders grey;
 And the ruffians twain replied again,
 "By a dying woman to pray."—

"I see," he said, "a lovely sight,
 A sight bodes little harm,
 A lady as a lily bright,
 With an infant on her arm."—

"Then do thine office, Friar grey,
 And see thou shrive her free!
 Else shall the sprite, that parts to-night,
 Fling all its guilt on thee.

"Let mass be said, and trentals read,
 When thou'rt to convent gone,
 And bid the bell of St. Benedict
 Toll out its deepest tone."—

The shrift is done, the Friar is gone,
 Blindfolded as he came—
 Next morning, all in Littlecot Hall
 Were weeping for their dame.

Wild Darrell is an altered man,
 The village crones can tell;
 He looks pale as clay, and strives to pray,
 If he hears the convent bell.

If prince or peer cross Darrell's way,
He'll beard him in his pride;
If he meet a Friar of orders grey,
He droops and turns aside.

BOOK XXVIII.

"Harper! methinks thy magic lays,"
Matilda said, "can goblins raise!
Well-nigh my fancy can discern,
Near the dark porch, a visage stern;
E'en now, in yonder shadowy nook
I see it!—Redmond, Wilfrid, look!—
A human form distinct and clear—
God, for Thy mercy!—It draws near!"
She saw too true. Stride after stride,
The centre of that chamber wide
Fierce Bertram gained; then made a stand,
And, proudly waving with his hand,
Thundered—"Be still, upon your lives!
He bleeds who speaks, he dies who strives."
Behind their chief, the robber crew
Forth from the darkened portal drew,
In silence—save that echo dread
Returned their heavy measured tread.
The lamp's uncertain lustre gave
Their arms to gleam, their plumes to wave;
File after file in order pass,
Like forms on Banquo's mystic glass.
Then, halting at their leader's sign,
At once they formed and curved their line,
Hemming within its crescent drear
Their victims, like a herd of deer.
Another sign, and to the aim
Levelled at once their muskets came,
As waiting but their chieftain's word
To make their fatal volley heard.

XXIX.

Back in a heap the menials drew;
Yet, even in mortal terror, true,

Their pale and startled group oppose
Between Matilda and the foes.
“O haste thee, Wilfrid!” Redmond cried;
“Undo that wicket by thy side!
Bear hence Matilda—gain the wood—
The pass may be a while made good—
Thy band, ere this, must sure be nigh—
O speak not—dally not—but fly!”
While yet the crowd their motions hide,
Through the low wicket-door they glide.
Through vaulted passages they wind,
In Gothic intricacy twined;
Wilfrid half led, and half he bore,
Matilda to the postern door,
And safe beneath the forest tree
The Lady stands at liberty.
The moonbeams, the fresh gale’s caress,
Renewed suspended consciousness.
“Where’s Redmond?” eagerly she cries:
“Thou answer’st not—he dies! he dies!
And thou hast left him, all bereft
Of mortal aid—with murderers left!—
I know it well—he would not yield
His sword to man—his doom is sealed!
For my scorned life, which thou hast bought
At price of his, I thank thee not.”

xxx.

The unjust reproach, the angry look,
The heart of Wilfrid could not brook.
“Lady,” he said, “my band so near,
In safety thou mayst rest thee here.
For Redmond’s death thou shalt not mourn,
If mine can buy his safe return.”
He turned away—his heart throbbed high,
The tear was bursting from his eye;
The sense of her injustice pressed
Upon the maid’s distracted breast,—
“Stay, Wilfrid, stay! all aid is vain!”
He heard, but turned him not again;

He reaches now the postern door,
Now enters—and is seen no more.

XXXI.

With all the agony that e'er
Was gendered 'twixt suspense and fear,
She watched the line of windows tall
Whose Gothic lattice lights the hall,
Distinguished by the paly red
The lamps in dim reflection shed ;
While all beside in wan moonlight
Each grated casement glimmered white.
No sight of harm, no sound of ill,
It is a deep and midnight still :
Who looked upon the scene had guessed
All in the Castle were at rest.
When sudden on the windows shone
A lightning flash, just seen and gone !
A shot is heard ! Again the flame
Flashed thick and fast—a volley came !
Then echoed wildly, from within,
Of shout and scream the mingled din,
And weapon-clash, and maddening cry
Of those who kill, and those who die !
As filled the hall with sulphurous smoke,
More red, more dark the death-flash broke ;
And forms were on the lattice cast,
That struck, or struggled, as they passed.

XXXII.

What sounds upon the midnight wind
Approach so rapidly behind ?
It is, it is the tramp of steeds !
Matilda hears the sound, she speeds,
Seizes upon the leader's rein—
" O haste to aid, ere aid be vain !
Fly to the postern—gain the hall !"—
From saddle spring the troopers all ;
Their gallant steeds, at liberty;
Run wild along the moonlit lea.

But ere they burst upon the scene,
 Full stubborn had the conflict been.
 When Bertram marked Matilda's flight,
 It gave the signal for the fight ;
 And Rokeby's veterans, seamed with scars
 Of Scotland's and of Erin's wars,
 Their momentary panic o'er,
 Stood to the arms which then they bore
 (For they were weaponed, and prepared
 Their Mistress on her way to guard).
 Then cheered them to the fight O'Neale ;
 Then pealed the shot and clashed the steel ;
 The war-smoke soon with sable breath
 Darkened the scene of blood and death ;
 While on the few defenders close
 The Bandits with redoubled blows,
 And, twice driven back, yet fierce and fell
 Renew the charge with frantic yell.

XXXIII.

Wilfrid has fallen ; but o'er him stood
 Young Redmond, soiled with smoke and blood.
 Cheering his mates, with heart and hand,
 Still to make good their desperate stand.
 "Up, comrades, up ! in Rokeby halls
 Ne'er be it said our courage falls.
 What ! faint ye for their savage cry,
 Or do the smoke-wreaths daunt your eye ?
 These rafters have returned a shout
 As loud at Rokeby's wassail rout ;
 As thick a smoke these hearths have given
 At Hallowtide or Christmas even.*
 Stand to it yet ! renew the fight,
 For Rokeby's and Matilda's right !
 These slaves ! they dare not, hand to hand,
 Bide buffet from a true man's brand."
 Impetuous, active, fierce, and young,
 Upon the advancing foes he sprung.

* See Note 57.

Woe to the wretch at whom is bent
His brandished falchion's sheer descent !
Backward they scattered as he came,
Like wolves before the levin flame,
When, 'mid their howling conclave driven,
Hath glanced the thunderbolt of heaven.
Bertram rushed on ; but Harpool clasped
His knees, although in death he gasped,
His falling corpse before him flung,
And round the trammelled ruffian clung.
Just then the soldiers filled the dome,
And, shouting, charged the felons home
So fiercely, that, in panic dread,
They broke, they yielded, fell, or fled.
Bertram's stern voice they heed no more,
Though heard above the battle's roar,
While, trampling down the dying man,
He strove, with volley'd threat and ban,
In scorn of odds, in fate's despite,
To rally up the desperate fight.

XXXIV.

Soon murkier clouds the hall enfold
Than e'er from battle-thunders rolled ;
So dense, the combatants scarce know
To aim or to avoid the blow.
Smothering and blindfold grows the fight—
But soon shall dawn a dismal light !
'Mid cries, and clashing arms, there came
The hollow sound of rushing flame ;
New horrors on the tumult dire
Arise—the Castle is on fire !
Doubtful, if chance had cast the brand,
Or frantic Bertram's desperate hand.
Matilda saw ; for frequent broke
From the dim casements gusts of smoke.
Yon tower, which late so clear defined
On the fair hemisphere reclined
That, pencilled on its azure pure,
The eye could count each embrasure,

Now, swathed within the sweeping cloud,
Seems giant-spectre in his shroud ;
Till, from each loophole flashing light,
A spout of fire shines ruddy bright,
And, gathering to united glare,
Streams high into the midnight air :
A dismal beacon, far and wide
That wakened Greta's slumbering side.
Soon all beneath, through gallery long
And pendent arch, the fire flashed strong,
Snatching whatever could maintain,
Raise, or extend its furious reign ;
Startling, with closer cause of dread,
The females who the conflict fled,
And now rushed forth upon the plain,
Filling the air with clamours vain.

XXXV.

But ceased not yet, the hall within,
The shriek, the shout, the carnage din,
Till bursting lattices give proof
The flames have caught the raftered roof.
What ! wait they till its beams amain
Crash on the slayers and the slain ?
The alarm is caught—the drawbridge falls,
The warriors hurry from the walls ;
But, by the conflagration's light,
Upon the lawn renew the fight.
Each struggling felon down was hewed,
Not one could gain the sheltering wood ;
But forth the affrighted Harper sprung,
And to Matilda's robe he clung.
Her shriek, entreaty, and command
Stopped the pursuer's lifted hand.
Denzil and he alive were ta'en ;
The rest, save Bertram, all are slain.

XXXVI.

And where is Bertram ?—Soaring high,
The general flame ascends the sky ;

In gathered group the soldiers gaze
Upon the broad and roaring blaze ;
When, like infernal demon, sent
Red from his penal element,
To plague and to pollute the air,
His face all gore, on fire his hair,
Forth from the central mass of smoke
The giant form of Bertram broke !
His brandished sword on high he rears,
Then plunged among opposing spears ;
Round his left arm his mantle trussed,
Received and foiled three lances' thrust ;
Nor these his headlong course withstood—
Like reeds he snapped the tough ash wood.
In vain his foes around him clung ;
With matchless force aside he flung
Their boldest—as the bull, at bay,
Tosses the bandogs from his way—
Through forty foes his path he made,
And safely gained the forest glade.

XXXVII.

Scarce was this final conflict o'er,
When from the postern Redmond bore
Wilfrid, who, as of life bereft,
Had in the fatal hall been left,
Deserted there by all his train ;
But Redmond saw, and turned again.
Beneath an oak he laid him down,
That in the blaze gleamed ruddy brown,
And then his mantle's clasp undid ;
Matilda held his drooping head,
Till, given to breathe the freer air,
Returning life repaid their care.
He gazed on them with heavy sigh,
" I could have wished even thus to die !"
No more he said, for now with speed
Each trooper had regained his steed ;
The ready palfreys stood arrayed,
For Redmond and for Rokeby's Maid ;

Two Wilfrid on his horse sustain,
One leads his charger by the rein.
But oft Matilda looked behind,
As up the Vale of Tees they wind,
Where far the mansion of her sires
Beaconed the dale with midnight fires.
In gloomy arch above them spread,
The clouded heaven lowered bloody red ;
Beneath, in sombre light, the flood
Appeared to roll in waves of blood.
Then, one by one, was heard to fall
The tower, the donjon-keep, the hall.
Each rushing down with thunder sound,
A space the conflagration drowned ;
Till, gathering strength, again it rose,
Announced its triumph in its close,
Shook wide its light the landscape o'er,
'Then sunk—and Rokeby was no more !

CANTO SIXTH.

I.

THE summer sun, whose early power
Was wont to gild Matilda's bower,
And rouse her with his matin ray
Her duteous orisons to pay,
That morning sun has three times seen
The flowers unfold on Rokeby green,
But sees no more the slumbers fly
From fair Matilda's hazel eye ;
That morning sun has three times broke
On Rokeby's glades of elm and oak,
But, rising from their silvan screen,
Marks no grey turrets glance between.
A shapeless mass lie keep and tower,
That, hissing to the morning shower,
Can but with smouldering vapour pay
The early smile of summer day.
The peasant, to his labour bound,
Pauses to view the blackened mound,

Striving, amid the ruined space,
Each well-remembered spot to trace.
That length of frail and fire-scorched wall
Once screened the hospitable hall ;
When yonder broken arch was whole,
"Twas there was dealt the weekly dole ;
And where yon tottering columns nod,
The chapel sent the hymn to God.
So flits the world's uncertain span !
Nor zeal for God, nor love for man,
Gives mortal monuments a date
Beyond the power of Time and Fate ;
The towers must share the builder's doom—
Ruin is theirs, and his a tomb.
But better boon benignant Heaven
To Faith and Charity has given,
And bids the Christian hope sublime
Transcend the bounds of Fate and Time.

II.

Now the third night of summer came,
Since that which witnessed Rokeby's flame.
On Brignall cliffs and Scargill brake
The owlet's homilies awake ;
The bittern screamed from rush and flag ;
The raven slumbered on his crag ;
Forth from his den the otter drew—
Grayling and trout their tyrant knew,
As between reed and sedge he peers
With fierce round snout and sharpened ears,
Or, prowling by the moonbeam cool,
Watches the stream or swims the pool.
Perched on his wonted eyrie high,
Sleep sealed the tercelet's wearied eye,
That all the day had watched so well
The cushat dart across the dell.
In dubious beam reflected shone
That lofty cli^{ce} of pale grey stone,
Beside nose base the secret cave
To apine late a refuge gave.

The crag's wild crest of copse and yew
On Greta's breast dark shadows threw—
Shadows that met or shunned the sight,
With every change of fitful light ;
As hope and fear alternate chase
Our course through life's uncertain race.

III.

Gliding by crag and copsewood green,
A solitary Form was seen
To trace with stealthy pace the wold,
Like fox that seeks the midnight fold,
And pauses oft, and cowers dismayed,
At every breath that stirs the shade.
He passes now the ivy bush,—
The owl has seen him and is hush ;
He passes now the doddered oak,—
Ye heard the startled raven croak ;
Lower and lower he descends,
Rustle the leaves, the brushwood bends ;
The otter hears him tread the shore,
And dives, and is beheld no more ;
And by the cliff of pale grey stone
The midnight wanderer stands alone.
Methinks that by the moon we trace
A well-remembered form and face !
That stripling shape, that cheek so pale,
Combine to tell a rueful tale,
Of powers misused, of passion's force,
Of guilt, of grief, and of remorse !
'Tis Edmund's eye at every sound
That flings that guilty glance around ;
'Tis Edmund's trembling haste divides
The brushwood that the cavern hides ;
And, when its narrow porch lies bare,
'Tis Edmund's form that enters there.

IV.

His flint and steel have sparkled bright,
A lamp hath lent the cavern light.

Fearful and quick his eye surveys
Each angle of the gloomy maze.
Since last he left that stern abode,
It seemed as none its floor had trode ;
Untouched appeared the various spoil,
The purchase of his comrades' toil ;
Masks and disguises grimed with mud,
Arms broken and defiled with blood,
And all the nameless tools that aid
Night-felons in their lawless trade,
Upon the gloomy walls were hung,
Or lay in nooks obscurely flung.
Still on the sordid board appear
The relics of the noontide cheer ;
Flagons and emptied flasks were there,
And bench o'erthrown, and shattered chair ;
And all around the semblance showed,
As when the final revel glowed,
When the red sun was setting fast,
And parting pledge Guy Denzil passed.
"To Rokeby treasure-vaults !" they quaffed,
And shouted loud and wildly laughed,
Poured maddening from the rocky door,
And parted—to return no more !
They found in Rokeby vaults their doom—
A bloody death, a burning tomb.

V.

There his own peasant dress he spies,
Doffed to assume that quaint disguise,
And, shuddering, thought upon his glee,
When pranked in garb of minstrelsy.
"Oh be the fatal art accurst,"
He cried, "that moved my folly first ;
Till, bribed by bandits' base applause,
I burst through God's and Nature's laws !
Three summer days are scanty past
Since I have trod this cavern last,
A thoughtless wretch, and prompt to err—
But, oh, as yet no murderer !

Even now I list my comrades' cheer,
 That general laugh is in mine ear,
 Which raised my pulse and steeled my heart,
 As I rehearsed my treacherous part—
 And would that all since then could seem
 The phantom of a fever's dream !
 But fatal Memory notes too well
 The horrors of the dying yell
 From my despairing mates that broke
 When flashed the fire and rolled the smoke,
 When the avengers shouting came,
 And hemmed us 'twixt the sword and flame !
 My frantic flight—the lifted brand—
 That angel's interposing hand !——
 If, for my life from slaughter freed,
 I yet could pay some grateful meed !
 Perchance this object of my quest
 May aid"—he turned, nor spoke the rest.

VI.

Due northward from the rugged hearth,
 With paces five he metes the earth,
 Then toiled with mattock to explore
 The entrails of the cavern floor,
 Nor paused till, deep beneath the ground,
 His search a small steel casket found.
 Just as he stooped to loose its hasp,
 His shoulder felt a giant grasp ;
 He started, and looked up aghast.
 Then shrieked—"twas Bertram held him fast !
 "Fear not !" he said ; but who could hear
 That deep stern voice, and cease to fear ?
 "Fear not !—by Heaven, he shakes as much
 As partridge in the falcon's clutch !"——
 He raised him, and unloosed his hold,
 While from the opening casket rolled
 A chain and reliquaire of gold.
 Bertram beheld it with surprise,
 Gazed on its fashion and device ;

Then, cheering Edmund as he could,
Somewhat he smoothed his rugged mood
For still the youth's half-lifted eye
Quivered with terror's agony,
And sidelong glanced, as to explore,
In meditated flight, the door.
"Sit," Bertram said, "from danger free :
Thou canst not, and thou shalt not, flee.
Chance brings me hither ; hill and plain
I've sought for refuge-place in vain.
And tell me now, thou aguish boy,
What mak'st thou here ? what means this toy ?
Denzil and thou, I marked, were ta'en ;
What lucky chance unbound your chain ?
I deemed, long since on Baliol's tower
Your heads were warped with sun and shower.
Tell me the whole—and, mark ! nought e'er
Chafes me like falsehood, or like fear."—
Gathering his courage to his aid,
But trembling still, the youth obeyed :—

VII.

"Denzil and I two nights passed o'er
In fetters on the dungeon floor.
A guest the third sad morrow brought—
Our hold dark Oswald Wycliffe sought,
And eyed my comrade long askance
With fixed and penetrating glance.
'Guy Denzil art thou called ?'—'The same.'—
'At court who served wild Buckinghame ;
Thence banished, won a keeper's place,
So Villiers willed, in Marwood-chase ;
That lost—I need not tell thee why—
Thou madest thy wit thy wants supply,
Then fought for Rokeby :—Have I guessed
My prisoner right ?'—'At thy behest.'—
He paused a while, and then went on
With low and confidential tone :
Me, as I judge, not then he saw,
Close nestled in my couch of straw.—

'List to me, Guy. Thou know'st the great
Have frequent need of what they hate;
Hence, in their favour oft we see
Unscrupled, useful men like thee.
Were I disposed to bid thee live,
What pledge of faith hast thou to give?'

VIII.

"The ready Fiend, who never yet
Hath failed to sharpen Denzil's wit,
Prompted his lie—'His only child
Should rest his pledge.'—The Baron smiled,
And turned to me—'Thou art his son?'
I bowed—our fetters were undone,
And we were led to hear apart
A dreadful lesson of his art.
Wilfrid, he said, his heir and son,
Had fair Matilda's favour won;
And long since had their union been,
But for her father's bigot spleen,
Whose brute and blindfold party-rage
Would, force per forcè, her hand engage
To a base kern of Irish earth;
Unknown his lineage and his birth,
Save that a dying ruffian bore
The infant brat to Rokeby door.
Gentle restraint, he said, would lead
Old Rokeby to enlarge his creed;
But fair occasion he must find
For such restraint well-meant and kind,
The Knight being rendered to his charge
But as a prisoner at large.

IX.

"He schooled us in a well-forged tale
Of scheme the Castle walls to scale,
To which was leagued each Cavalier
That dwells upon the Tyne and Wear;

That Rokeby, his parole forgot,
Had dealt with us to aid the plot.
Such was the charge, which Denzil's zeal
Of hate to Rokeby and O'Neale
Proffered, as witness, to make good,
Even though the forfeit were their blood.
I scrupled; until o'er and o'er
His prisoners' safety Wycliffe swore;
And then—alas! what needs there more?
I knew I should not live to say
The proffer I refused that day;
Ashamed to live, yet loath to die,
I soiled me with their infamy!"

"Poor youth," said Bertram, "wavering still,
Unfit alike for good or ill!
But what fell next?"—"Soon as at large
Was scrolled and signed our fatal charge,
There never yet, on tragic stage,
Was seen so well a painted rage
As Oswald's showed! With loud alarm
He called his garrison to arm;
From tower to tower, from post to post,
He hurried as if all were lost;
Consigned to dungeon and to chain
The good old Knight and all his train,
Warned each suspected Cavalier,
Within his limits, to appear
To-morrow, at the hour of noon,
In the high church of Egliston."--

X.

"Of Egliston!—even now I passed,"
Said Bertram, "as the night closed fast;
Torches and cressets gleamed around,
I heard the saw and hammer sound,
And I could mark they toiled to raise
A scaffold, hung with sable baize,
Which the grim headsman's scene displayed,
Block, axe, and sawdust ready laid.

Some evil deed will there be done,
 Unless Matilda wed his son ;—
 She loves him not—'tis shrewdly guessed
 That Redmond rules the damsel's breast.
 This is a turn of Oswald's skill ;
 But I may meet and foil him still !—
 How cam'st thou to thy freedom ?"—“ There
 Lies mystery more dark and rare.
 In midst of Wycliffe's well-feigned rage
 A scroll was offered by a page,
 Who told, a muffled horseman late
 Had left it at the Castle gate.
 He broke the seal—his cheek showed change
 Sudden, portentous, wild, and strange ;
 The mimic passion of his eye
 Was turned to actual agony,
 His hand like summer sapling shook,
 Terror and guilt were in his look.
 Denzil he judged, in time of need,
 Fit counsellor for evil deed,
 And thus apart his counsel broke,
 While with a ghastly smile he spoke :—

XI.

“ As in the pageants of the stage,
 The dead awake in this wild age,
 Mortham—whom all men deemed decreed
 In his own deadly snare to bleed,
 Slain by a bravo, whom, o'er sea,
 He trained to aid in murdering me,—
 Mortham has 'scaped ! the coward shot
 The steed, but harmed the rider not.' ”—
 Here, with an execration fell,
 Bertram leaped up and paced the cell :—
 “ Thine own grey head, or bosom dark,”
 He muttered, “ may be surer mark ! ”—
 Then sat, and signed to Edmund, pale
 With terror, to resume his tale.
 “ Wycliffe went on :—‘ Mark with what flights
 Of wildered reverie he writes :—

The Letter.

“ ‘ Ruler of Mortham’s destiny !
 Though dead, thy victim lives to thee.
 Once had he all that binds to life
 A lovely child; a lovelier wife ;
 Wealth, fame, and friendship were his own—
 Thou gav’st the word, and they are flown !
 Mark how he pays thee :—To thy hand
 He yields his honours and his land,
 One boon premised—restore his child !
 And, from his native land exiled,
 Mortham no more returns to claim
 His lands, his honours, or his name.
 Refuse him this, and from the slain
 Thou shalt see Mortham rise again.’ ”—

XII.

“ This billet while the Baron read,
 His faltering accents showed his dread ;
 He pressed his forehead with his palm,
 Then took a scornful tone and calm :
 ‘ Wild as the winds, as billows wild !
 What wot I of his spouse or child ?
 Hither he brought a joyous dame,
 Unknown her lineage or her name :
 Her, in some frantic fit, he slew ;
 The nurse and child in fear withdrew.
 Heaven be my witness ! wist I where
 To find this youth, my kinsman’s heir—
 Unguerdoned, I would give with joy
 The father’s arms to fold his boy,
 And Mortham’s lands and towers resign
 To the just heir of Mortham’s line.’—
 Thou know’st that scarcely e’en his fear
 Suppresses Denzil’s cynic sneer :—
 ‘ Then happy is thy vassal’s part,’
 He said, ‘ to ease his patron’s heart !
 In thine own jailer’s watchful care
 Lies Mortham’s just and rightful heir ;

Thy generous wish is fully won,—
Redmond O'Neale is Mortham's son.'

XIII.

"Up starting with a frenzied look,
His clenched hand the Baron shook :—
'Is hell at work? or dost thou rave,
Or dar'st thou palter with me, slave?
Perchance thou wot'st not, Barnard's towers
Have racks of strange and ghastly powers.'
Denzil, who well his safety knew,
Firmly rejoined: 'I tell thee true.
Thy racks could give thee but to know
The proofs, which I, untortured, show.—
It chanced upon a winter night,
When early snow made Stanmore white,
That very night, when first of all
Redmond O'Neale saw Rokeby Hall,
It was my goodly lot to gain
A reliquary and a chain,
Twisted and chased of massive gold.—
Demand not how the prize I hold!
It was not given, nor lent, nor sold.—
Gilt tablets to the chain were hung,
With letters in the Irish tongue.
I hid my spoil, for there was need
That I should leave the land with speed;
Nor then I deemed it safe to bear
On mine own person gems so rare.
Small heed I of the tablets took,
But since have spelled them by the book,
When some sojourn in Erin's land
Of their wild speech had given command.
But darkling was the sense; the phrase
And language those of other days,
Involved of purpose, as to foil
An interloper's prying toil.
The words, but not the sense, I knew,
Till fortune gave the guiding clue.

XIV.

“ ‘ Three days since was that clue revealed,
In Thorsgill as I lay concealed,
And heard at full when Rokeby's Maid
Her uncle's history displayed ;
And now I can interpret well
Each syllable the tablets tell.
Mark then :—Fair Edith was the joy
Of old O'Neale of Clandeboy,
But from her sire and country fled
In secret Mortham's Lord to wed.
O'Neale, his first resentment o'er,
Dispatched his son to Greta's shore,
Enjoining he should make him known
(Until his further will were shown),
To Edith, but to her alone.
What of their ill-starred meeting fell,
Lord Wycliffe knows, and none so well.

XV.

“ ‘ O'Neale it was who, in despair,
Robbed Mortham of his infant heir ;
He bred him in their nurture wild,
And called him murdered Connel's child.
Soon died the nurse ; the clan believed
What from their chieftain they received.
His purpose was, that ne'er again
The boy should cross the Irish main,
But, like his mountain sires, enjoy
The woods and wastes of Clandeboy.
Then on the land wild troubles came,
And stronger chieftains urged a claim,
And wrested from the old man's hands
His native towers, his fathers' lands.
Unable then, amid the strife,
To guard young Redmond's rights or life,
Late and reluctant he restores
The infant to his native shores,
With goodly gifts and letters stored

With many a deep conjuring word,
 To Mortham and to Rokeby's Lord.
 Nought knew the clod of Irish earth,
 Who was the guide, of Redmond's birth,
 But deemed his Chief's commands were laid
 On both, by both to be obeyed.
 How he was wounded by the way,
 I need not, and I list not say.'—

XVI.

“ ‘A wondrous tale! and grant it true,
 What,’ Wycliffe answered, ‘might I do?
 Heaven knows, as willingly as now
 I raise the bonnet from my brow,
 Would I my kinsman’s manors fair
 Restore to Mortham, or his heir.
 But Mortham is distraught; O’Neale
 Has drawn for tyranny his steel,
 Malignant to our rightful Cause,
 And trained in Rome’s delusive laws.
 Hark thee apart!’—They whispered long,
 Till Denzil’s voice grew bold and strong:—
 ‘My proofs! I never will,’ he said,
 ‘Show mortal man where they are laid.
 Nor hope discovery to foreclose,
 By giving me to feed the crows;
 For I have mates at large, who know
 Where I am wont such toys to stow.
 Free me from peril and from band,
 These tablets are at thy command;
 Nor were it hard to form some train
 To wile old Mortham o’er the main.
 Then lunatic’s nor papist’s hand
 Should wrest from thine the goodly land.’—
 ‘I like thy wit,’ said Wycliffe, ‘well;
 But here in hostage shalt thou dwell.
 Thy son, unless my purpose err,
 May prove the trustier messenger;
 A scroll to Mortham shall he bear
 From me, and fetch these tokens rare.

Gold shalt thou have, and that good store,
And freedom, his commission o'er ;
But if his faith should chance to fail,
The gibbet frees thee from the jail.'

XVII.

" Meshed in the net himself had twined,
What subterfuge could Denzil find ?
He told me, with reluctant sigh,
That hidden here the tokens lie ;
Conjured my swift return and aid
By all he scoffed and disobeyed,
And looked as if the noose were tied,
And I the priest who left his side.
This scroll for Mortham, Wycliffe gave,
Whom I must seek by Greta's wave,
Or in the hut where chief he hides,
Where Thorsgill's forester resides.
(Thence chanced it, wandering in the glade,
That he descried our ambuscade.)
I was dismissed as evening fell,
And reached but now this rocky cell."—
" Give Oswald's letter."—Bertram read,
And tore it fiercely, shred by shred :—
" All lies and villainy ! to blind
His noble kinsman's generous mind,
And train him on from day to day,
Till he can take his life away.—
And now, declare thy purpose, youth,
Nor dare to answer, save the truth ;
If aught I mark of Denzil's art,
I'll tear the secret from thy heart !"—

XVIII.

" It needs not. I renounce," he said,
" My tutor and his deadly trade.
Fixed was my purpose to declare
To Mortham, Redmond is his heir ;
To tell him in what risk he stands,
And yield these tokens to his hands.

Fixed was my purpose to atone,
Far as I may, the evil done ;
And fixed it rests—if I survive
This night, and leave this cave alive.”—
“And Denzil?”—“Let them ply the rack,
Even till his joints and sinews crack !
If Oswald tear him limb from limb,
What ruth can Denzil claim from him
Whose thoughtless youth he led astray,
And damned to this unhallowed way?
He schooled me faith and vows were vain ,
Now let my master reap his gain.”—
“True,” answered Bertram, “’tis his meed ;
There’s retribution in the deed.
But thou—thou art not for our course—
Hast fear, hast pity, hast remorse ;
And he, with us the gale who braves,
Must heave such cargo to the waves,
Or lag with overloaded prore,
While barks unburdened reach the shore.”

XIX.

He paused, and, stretching him at length,
Seemed to repose his bulky strength.
Communing with his secret mind,
As half he sat, and half reclined,
One ample hand his forehead pressed,
And one was dropped across his breast.
The shaggy eyebrows deeper came
Above his eyes of swarthy flame ;
His lip of pride awhile forbore
The haughty curve till then it wore ;
The unaltered fierceness of his look
A shade of darkened sadness took,—
For dark and sad a presage pressed
Resistlessly on Bertram’s breast ;—
And when he spoke, his wonted tone,
So fierce, abrupt, and brief, was gone.
His voice was steady, low, and deep,
Like distant waves when breezes sleep ;

And sorrow mixed with Edmund's fear,
Its low unbroken depth to hear :—

XX.

“ Edmund, in thy sad tale I find
The woe that warped my patron's mind ;
'Twould wake the fountains of the eye
In other men, but mine are dry.
Mortham must never see the fool
That sold himself base Wycliffe's tool ;
Yet less from thirst of sordid gain,
Than to avenge supposed disdain.
Say, Bertram rues his fault—a word,
Till now, from Bertram never heard ;
Say, too, that Mortham's Lord he prays
To think but on their former days—
On Quariana's beach and rock,
On Cayo's bursting battle-shock,
On Darien's sands and deadly dew,
And on the dart Tlatzeca threw ;—
Perchance my patron yet may hear
More that may grace his comrade's bier.
My soul hath felt a secret weight,
A warning of approaching fate :
A priest had said, ‘ Return, repent !’
As well to bid that rock be rent.
Firm as that flint I face mine end ;
My heart may burst, but cannot bend.

XXI.

“ The dawning of my youth, with awe
And prophecy, the Dalesmen saw ;
For over Redesdale it came,
As bodeful as their beacon-flame.
Edmund, thy years were scarcely mine,
When, challenging the clans of Tyne
To bring their best my brand to prove,
O'er Hexham's altar hung my glove ;*
But Tynedale, nor in tower nor town,
Held champion meet to take it down.

* See Note 58.

My noontide, India may declare ;
 Like her fierce sun, I fired the air !
 Like him, to wood and cave bade fly
 Her natives, from mine angry eye.
 Panama's maids shall long look pale
 When Risingham inspires the tale ;
 Chili's dark matrons long shall tame
 The froward child with Bertram's name.
 And now, my race of terror run,
 Mine be the eve of tropic sun !
 No pale gradations quench his ray,
 No twilight dews his wrath allay ;
 With disc like battle-target red,
 He rushes to his burning bed,
 Dyes the wide wave with bloody light,
 Then sinks at once—and all is night.

XXII.

“ Now to thy mission, Edmund. Fly,
 Seek Mortham out, and bid him hie
 To Richmond, where his troops are laid,
 And lead his force to Redmond's aid.
 Say, till he reaches Egliston,
 A friend will watch to guard his son.
 Now, fare thee well ; for night draws on,
 And I would rest me here alone.”
 Despite his ill-dissembled fear,
 There swam in Edmund's eye a tear,
 A tribute to the courage high
 Which stooped not in extremity,
 But strove, irregularly great,
 To triumph o'er approaching fate !
 Bertram beheld the dewdrop start,
 It almost touched his iron heart.
 “ I did not think there lived,” he said,
 “ One who would tear for Bertram shed.”
 He loosened then his baldric's hold,
 A buckle broad of massive gold :—
 “ Of all the spoil that paid his pains,
 But this with Risingham remains ;

And this, dear Edmund, thou shalt take,
And wear it long for Bertram's sake.
Once more—to Mortham speed amain :
Farewell ! and turn thee not again."

XXIII.

The night has yielded to the morn,
And far the hours of prime are worn.
Oswald, who, since the dawn of day,
Had cursed his messenger's delay,
Impatient questioned now his train,
"Was Denzil's son returned again?"
It chanced there answered of the crew,
A menial, who young Edmund knew ;
"No son of Denzil this," he said ;
"A peasant boy from Winston glade,
For song and minstrelsy renowned,
And knavish pranks, the hamlets round."—
"Not Denzil's son?—from Winston vale?—
Then it was false that specious tale ;
Or, worse—he hath dispatched the youth
To show to Mortham's Lord its truth.
Fool that I was !—but 'tis too late ;
This is the very turn of fate !—
The tale, or true or false, relies
On Denzil's evidence :—he dies !—
Ho ! Provost Marshal, instantly
Lead Denzil to the gallows-tree !
Allow him not a parting word ;
Short be the shrift and sure the cord !
Then let his gory head appal
Marauders from the Castle wall.
Lead forth thy guard, that duty done,
With best dispatch to Egliston.—
Basil, tell Wilfrid he must straight
Attend me at the Castle gate."—

XXIV.

"Alas !" the old domestic said,
And shook his venerable head,

- “Alas, my lord ! full ill to-day
 May my young master brook the way !
 The leech has spoke with grave alarm
 Of unseen hurt, of secret harm,
 Of sorrow lurking at the heart,
 That mars and lets his healing art.”—
- “Tush, tell not me!—Romantic boys
 Pine themselves sick for airy toys.
 I will find cure for Wilfrid soon ;
 Bid him for Egliston be boune,
 And quick—I hear the dull death-drum
 Tell Denzil’s hour of fate is come.”
 He paused with scornful smile, and then
 Resumed his train of thought agen :—
- “Now comes my fortune’s crisis near !
 Entreaty boots not—instant fear,
 Nought else, can bend Matilda’s pride,
 Or win her to be Wilfrid’s bride.
 But when she sees the scaffold placed,
 With axe and block and headsman graced,
 And when she deems that to deny
 Dooms Redmond and her sire to die,
 She must give way.—Then, were the line
 Of Rokeby once combined with mine,
 I gain the weather-gage of fate !
 If Mortham come, he comes too late ;
 While I, allied thus and prepared,
 Bid him defiance to his beard ;—
 If she prove stubborn, shall I dare
 To drop the axe ?—soft ! pause we there.
 Mortham still lives—yon youth may tell
 His tale—and Fairfax loves him well ;—
 Else, wherefore should I now delay
 To sweep this Redmond from my way ?—
 But she to piety perforce
 Must yield.—Without there ! sound to horse.”

XXV.

- ’Twas bustle in the court below,++
 “Mount, and march forward !”—Forth they go ;

Steeds neigh and trample all around,
Steel rings, spears glimmer, trumpets sound.—
Just then was sung his parting hymn ;
And Denzil turned his eyeballs dim,
And, scarcely conscious what he sees,
Follows the horsemen down the Tees,
And scarcely conscious what he hears,
The trumpets tingle in his ears.
O'er the long bridge they're sweeping now,
The van is hid by greenwood bough ;
But ere the rearward had passed o'er,
Guy Denzil heard and saw no more !
One stroke, upon the Castle bell,
To Oswald rung his dying knell.

XXVI.

Oh for that pencil, erst profuse
Of chivalry's emblazoned hues,
That traced of old, in Woodstock bower,
The pageant of the Leaf and Flower,
And bodied forth the tourney high
Held for the hand of Emily !
Then might I paint the tumult broad
That to the crowded abbey flowed,
And poured, as with an ocean's sound,
Into the church's ample bound !
Then might I show each varying mien,
Exulting, woeful, or serene ;
Indifference, with his idiot stare,
And Sympathy, with anxious air ;
Paint the dejected Cavalier,^{vv}
Doubtful, disarmed, and sad of cheer ;
And his proud foe, whose formal eye
Claimed conquest now and mastery ;
And the brute crowd, whose envious zeal
Huzzas each turn of Fortune's wheel,
And loudest shouts when lowest lie
Exalted worth and station high.
Yet what may such a wish avail ?
'Tis mine to tell an onward tale,

Hurrying, as best I can, along
The hearers and the hasty song ;—
Like traveller when approaching home,
Who sees the shades of evening come,
And must not now his course delay,
Or choose the fair but winding way ;
Nay, scarcely may his pace suspend,
Where o'er his head the wildings bend,
To bless the breeze that cools his brow,
Or snatch a blossom from the bough.

XXVII.

The reverend pile lay wild and waste,
Profaned, dishonoured, and defaced.
Through storied lattices no more
In softened light the sunbeams pour,
Gilding the Gothic sculpture rich
Of shrine, and monument, and niche.
The Civil fury of the time
Made sport of sacrilegious crime ;
For dark Fanaticism rent
Altar, and screen, and ornament,
And peasant hands the tombs o'erthrew
Of Bowes, of Rokeby, and Fitz-Hugh.
And now was seen, unwonted sight,
In holy walls a scaffold dight !
Where once the priest, of grace divine
Dealt to his flock the mystic sign,
There stood the block displayed, and there
The headsman grim his hatchet bare ;
And for the word of Hope and Faith,
Resounded loud a doom of death.
Thrice the fierce trumpet's breath was heard,
And echoed thrice the herald's word,
Dooming, for breach of martial laws,
And treason to the Commons' cause,
The Knight of Rokeby and O'Neale
To stoop their heads to block and steel.
The trumpets flourished high and shrill,
Then was a silence dead and still ;

And silent prayers to Heaven were cast,
And stifled sobs were bursting fast,
Till from the crowd began to rise
Murmurs of sorrow or surprise,
And from the distant aisles there came
Deep-muttered threats, with Wycliffe's name.

XXVIII. Wycliffe's speech

But Oswald, guarded by his band,
Powerful in evil, waved his hand,
And bade Sedition's voice be dead,
On peril of the murmurer's head.
Then first his glance sought Rokeby's Knight,
Who gazed on the tremendous sight
As calm as if he came a guest
To kindred Baron's feudal feast—
As calm as if that trumpet-call
Were summons to the bannered hall;
Firm in his loyalty he stood,
And prompt to seal it with his blood.
With downcast look drew Oswald nigh,—
He durst not cope with Rokeby's eye!—
And said, with low and faltering breath,
"Thou know'st the terms of life and death."—
The Knight then turned, and sternly smiled:
"The maiden is mine only child,
Yet shall my blessing leave her head
If with a traitor's son she wed."
Then Redmond spoke: "The life of one
Might thy malignity atone,
On me be flung a double guilt!
Spare Rokeby's blood, let mine be spilt!"—
Wycliffe had listened to his suit,
But dread prevailed, and he was mute.

XXIX. Wycliffe's speech

And now he pours his choice of fear
In secret on Matilda's ear:—
"A union formed with me and mine,
Ensures the faith of Rokeby's line.

Consent, and all this dread array,
Like morning dream, shall pass away ;
Refuse, and, by my duty pressed,
I give the word—thou know'st the rest.”
Matilda, still and motionless,
With terror heard the dread address,
Pale as the sheeted maid who dies
To hopeless love a sacrifice ;
Then wrung her hands in agony,
And round her cast bewildered eye—
Now on the scaffold glanced, and now
On Wycliffe's unrelenting brow.
She veiled her face, and, with a voice
Scarce audible,—“ I make my choice !
Spare but their lives !—for aught beside,
Let Wilfrid's doom my fate decide.
He once was generous !”—As she spoke,
Dark Wycliffe's joy in triumph broke :—
“ Wilfrid, where loitered ye so late ?—
Why upon Basil rest thy weight ?—
Art spell-bound by enchanter's wand ?—
Kneel, kneel, and take her yielded hand ;
Thank her with raptures, simple boy !
Should tears and trembling speak thy joy ?”—
“ O hush, my sire ! To prayer and tear
Of mine thou hast refused thine ear ;
But now the awful hour draws on
When truth must speak in loftier tone.”

xxx.

He took Matilda's hand :—“ Dear maid !
Couldst thou so injure me,” he said,
“ Of thy poor friend so basely deem,
As blend him with this barbarous scheme ?
Alas ! my efforts, made in vain,
Might well have saved this added pain.
But now, bear witness, earth and heaven,
That ne'er was hope to mortal given,
So twisted with the strings of life,
As this—to call Matilda wife !

I bid it now for ever part,
And with the effort bursts my heart."
His feeble frame was worn so low,
With wounds, with watching, and with woe,
That nature could no more sustain
The agony of mental pain.
He knecled—his lip her hand had pressed,—
Just then he felt the stern arrest !
Lower and lower sunk his head,—
They raised him—but the life was fled !
Then, first alarmed, his sire and train
Tried every aid, but tried in vain.
The soul, too soft its ills to bear,
Had left our mortal hemisphere,
And sought in better world the meed,
To blameless life by Heaven decreed.

XXXI.

The wretched sire beheld, aghast,
With Wilfrid all his projects past ;
All turned and centred on his son,
On Wilfrid all—and he was gone !
" And I am childless now," he said,
" Childless, through that relentless maid !
A lifetime's arts, in vain essayed,
Are bursting on their artist's head !—
Here lies my Wilfrid dead—and there
Comes hated Mortham for his heir,
Eager to knit in happy band
With Rokeby's heiress Redmond's hand.
And shall their triumph soar o'er all
The schemes deep-laid to work their fall ?
No !—deeds which prudence might not dare
Appal not vengeance and despair.
The murd'ress weeps upon his bier—
I'll change to real that feignèd tear !
They all shall share destruction's shock ;—
Ho ! lead the captives to the block !"
But ill his Provost could divine
His feelings, and forbore the sign.

"Slave! to the block!—or I, or they,
Shall face the judgment-seat this day!"

XXXII.

The outmost crowd have heard a sound
Like horse's hoof on hardened ground;
Nearer it came, and yet more near—
The very death's-men paused to hear.
'Tis in the churchyard now—the tread
Hath waked the dwelling of the dead!
Fresh sod and old sepulchral stone
Return the tramp in varied tone.
All eyes upon the gateway hung,
When through the Gothic arch there sprung
A horseman armed, at headlong speed—*
Sable his cloak, his plume, his steed.
Fire from the flinty floor was spurned,
The vaults unwonted clang returned!—
One instant's glance around he threw,
From saddle-bow his pistol drew.
Grimly determined was his look!
His charger with the spurs he strook—
All scattered backward as he came,
For all knew Bertram Risinghame?
Three bounds that noble courser gave:
The first has reached the central nave,
The second cleared the chancel wide,
The third—he was at Wycliffe's side.
Full levelled at the Baron's head,
Rung the report—the bullet sped—
And to his long account, and last,
Without a groan dark Oswald passed!
All was so quick, that it might seem
A flash of lightning, or a dream.

XXXIII.

While yet the smoke the deed conceals,
Bertram his ready charger wheels;
But floundered on the pavement floor
The steed, and down the rider bore,

See Note. 59.

And, bursting in the headlong sway,
The faithless saddle-girths gave way.
'Twas while he toiled him to be freed,
And with the rein to raise the steed,
That from amazement's iron trance
All Wycliffe's soldiers waked at once.
Sword, halberd, musket-butt, their blows
Hailed upon Bertram as he rose ;
A score of pikes, with each a wound,
Bore down and pinned him to the ground ;
But still his struggling force he rears
'Gainst hacking brands and stabbing spears ;
Thrice from assailants shook him free,
Once gained his feet, and twice his knee.
By tenfold odds oppressed at length,
Despite his struggles and his strength,
He took a hundred mortal wounds
As mute as fox 'mongst mangling hounds ;
And when he died, his parting groan
Had more of laughter than of moan !—
They gazed, as when a lion dies,
And hunters scarcely trust their eyes,
But bend their weapons on the slain,
Lest the grim king should rouse again !
Then blow and insult some renewed,
And from the trunk the head had hewed,
But Basil's voice the deed forbade ;
A mantle o'er the corse he laid :—
“ Fell as he was in act and mind,
He left no bolder heart behind ;
Then give him, for a soldier meet,
A soldier's cloak for winding sheet.”

XXXIV.

No more of death and dying pang,
No more of trump and bugle clang,
Though through the sounding woods there come
Banner and bugle, trump and drum.
Armed with such powers as well had freed
Young Redmond at his utmost need,

And backed with such a band of horse
As might less ample powers enforce ;
Possessed of every proof and sign
That gave an heir to Mortham's line,
And yielded to a father's arms
An image of his Edith's charms,—
Mortham is come, to hear and see
Of this strange morn the history.
What saw he?—not the church's floor,
Cumbered with dead and stained with gore ;
What heard he?—not the clamorous crowd,
That shout their gratulations loud :
Redmond he saw and heard alone,
Clasped him, and sobbed, " My son, my son ! "

XXXV.

This chanced upon a summer morn,
When yellow waved the heavy corn ;
But when brown August o'er the land
Called forth the reapers' busy band,
A gladsome sight the silvan road
From Egliston to Mortham showed.
Awhile the hardy rustic leaves
The task to bind and pile the sheaves,
And maids their sickles fling aside
To gaze on bridegroom and on bride,
And childhood's wondering group draws near,
And from the gleaner's hands the ear
Drops, while she folds them for a prayer
And blessing on the lovely pair.
'Twas then the Maid of Rokeby gave
Her plighted troth to Redmond brave ;
And Teesdale can remember yet
How Fate to Virtue paid her debt,
And, for their troubles, bade them prove
A lengthened life of peace and love.

Time and Tide had thus their sway,
Yielding, like an April day,
Smiling noon for sullen morrow,
Years of joy for hours of sorrow !

THE BRIDAL OF TRIERMAIN;

OR,

THE VALE OF ST. JOHN.

A LOVER'S TALE.

PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION.

IN the "Edinburgh Annual Register," for the year 1809, Three Fragments were inserted, written in imitation of living poets. It must have been apparent that, by these prolusions, nothing burlesque or disrespectful to the authors was intended, but that they were offered to the public as serious, though certainly very imperfect, imitations of that style of composition by which each of the writers is supposed to be distinguished. As these exercises attracted a greater degree of attention than the author anticipated, he has been induced to complete one of them, and present it as a separate publication.

It is not in this place that an examination of the works of the master whom he has here adopted as his model can, with propriety, be introduced, since his general acquiescence in the favourable suffrage of the public must necessarily be inferred from the attempt he has now made. He is induced, by the nature of his subject, to offer a few remarks on what has been called ROMANTIC POETRY—the popularity of which has been revived in the present day, under the auspices, and by the unparalleled success, of one individual.

The original purpose of poetry is either religious or historical, or, as must frequently happen, a mixture of both. To modern readers, the poems of Homer have many of the features of pure romance; but in the estimation of his contemporaries, they probably derived their chief value from their supposed historical authenticity. The same may be generally said of the poetry of all early ages. The marvels and miracles which the poet blends with his song do not exceed in number or extravagance the figments of the historians of the same period of society ; and, indeed, the difference betwixt poetry and prose, as the vehicles of historical truth, is always of late introduction. Poets, under various denominations of Bards, Scalds, Chroniclers, and so forth, are the first historians of all nations. Their intention is to relate the events they have witnessed, or the traditions that have reached them ; and they clothe the relation in rhyme, merely as the means of rendering it more solemn in the narrative or more easily committed to memory. But as the poetical historian improves in the art of conveying information, the authenticity of his narrative unavoidably declines. He is tempted to dilate and dwell upon the events that are interesting to his imagination, and, conscious how indifferent his audience is to the naked truth of his poem, his history gradually becomes a romance.

It is in this situation that those epics are found which have been generally regarded as the standards of poetry ; and it has happened somewhat strangely, that the moderns have pointed out as the characteristics and peculiar excellences of narrative poetry, the very circumstances which the authors themselves adopted, only because their art involved the duties of the historian as well as of the poet. It cannot be believed, for example, that Homer selected the siege of Troy as the most appropriate subject for poetry ; his purpose was to write the early history of his country. The event he has chosen, though not very fruitful in varied incident, nor perfectly well adapted for poetry, was nevertheless combined with traditionary and genealogical anecdotes extremely interesting to those who were to listen to him ; and this he has adorned by the exertions of a genius which, if it has been equalled, has certainly been never surpassed. It was not till comparatively a late period that the general accuracy of his narrative, or his purpose in composing it, was brought into question. Δοκεῖ πρῶτος [ὁ Ἀναξαγόρας] (καθὰ φησι Φαβορίνος ἐν παντοδαπῇ Ἱστορίᾳ) τὴν Ὀμήρου ποιήσιν ἀποφήνασθαι εἶναι περὶ ἀρετῆς καὶ δικαιοσύνης.* But whatever theories might be framed by speculative men, his work was of an historical, not of an allegorical, nature. Πραυτίλλετο μετὰ τοῦ Μέντεω καὶ ὅπου ἐκάστοτε ἀφίκοιτο, πάντα τὰ ἐπιχώρια διερωτᾶτο, καὶ ἱστορέων ἐπυνθάνετο· εἰκὸς δέ μιν ἦν καὶ μνημοσύνα πάντων γράφεσθαι.† Instead of recommending the choice of a subject similar to that of Homer, it was to be expected that critics should have exhorted the poets of these latter days to adopt or invent a narrative in itself more susceptible of poetical ornament, and to avail themselves of that advantage in order to compensate, in some degree, the inferiority of genius. The contrary course has been inculcated by almost all the writers upon the Εποποιία; with what success, the fate of Homer's numerous imitators may best show. The ultimum supplicium of criticism was inflicted on the author if he did not choose a subject which at once deprived him of all claim to originality, and placed him, if not in actual contest, at least in fatal comparison, with those giants in the land whom it was most his interest to avoid. The celebrated receipt for writing an epic poem, which appeared in the Guardian, was the first instance in which common sense was applied to this department of poetry; and, indeed, if the question be considered on its own merits, we must be satisfied that narrative poetry, if strictly confined to the great occurrences of history, would be deprived of the individual interest which it is so well calculated to excite.

Modern poets may therefore be pardoned in seeking simpler subjects of verse, more interesting in proportion to their simplicity. Two or three figures, well grouped, suit the artist better than a crowd, for whatever purpose assembled. For the same reason a scene immediately presented to the imagination, and directly brought home to the feelings, though involving the fate of but one or two persons, is more favourable for poetry than the political struggles and convulsions which influence the fate of kingdoms. The former are within the reach and comprehension of all, and, if depicted with vigour, seldom fail to fix attention; the other, if more sublime, are more vague and distant, less capable of being distinctly understood, and infinitely less capable of exciting those sentiments which it is the very purpose of poetry to inspire. To generalize is always to destroy effect. We would, for example, be more interested in the fate of an individual soldier in combat, than in the grand event of a general action; with the happiness of two lovers raised from misery and anxiety to peace and union, than with the successful exertions of a whole nation. From what causes this may originate is a separate and obviously an immaterial consideration. Before ascribing this peculiarity to causes decidedly and odiously selfish, it is proper to recollect that while men see only a limited space, and while their affections and conduct are regulated, not by aspiring to an universal good, but by exerting their power of making themselves and others happy within the limited scale allotted to each individual, so long will individual history and individual virtue be the readier and more accessible road to general interest and attention; and, perhaps, we may add, that it is the more useful, as well as the more accessible, inasmuch as it affords an example capable of being easily imitated.

According to the author's idea of Romantic Poetry, as distinguished from Epic, the former comprehends a fictitious narrative, framed and combined at the pleasure of the writer ; beginning and ending as he may judge best ; which neither exacts nor refuses the use of supernatural machinery ; which is free from the technical rules of the Épée, and is subject only to those which good sense, good taste, and good morals apply to every species of poetry without exception. The date may be in a remote age, or in the present ; the story may detail the adventures of a prince or of a peasant. In a word, the author is absolute master of his country and its inhabitants, and everything is permitted to him, excepting to be heavy or prosaic, for which, free and unembarrassed as he is, he has no manner of apology. Those, it is probable, will be found the peculiarities of this species of composition ; and before joining the outcry against the vitiated taste that fosters and encourages it, the justice and grounds of it ought to be made perfectly apparent. If the want of sieges, and battles, and great military evolutions, in our poetry, is complained of, let us reflect that the campaigns and heroes of our days are perpetuated in a record that neither requires nor admits of the aid of fiction ; and if the complaint refers to the inferiority of our bards, let us pay a just tribute to their modesty, limiting them, as it does, to subjects which, however indifferently treated, have still the interest and charm of novelty, and which thus prevents them from adding insipidity to their other more insuperable defects.

THE BRIDAL OF TRIERMAIN.

INTRODUCTION.

I.

COME, Lucy! while 'tis morning hour,
The woodland brook we needs must pass;
So, ere the sun assume his power,
We shelter in our poplar bower,
Where dew lies long upon the flower,
Though vanished from the velvet grass.
Curbing the stream, this stony ridge
May serve us for a silvan bridge;
For here compelled to disunite,
Round petty isles the runnels glide,
And chafing off their puny spite,
The shallow murmurers waste their might,
Yielding to footstep free and light
A dryshod pass from side to side.

II.

Nay, why this hesitating pause?
And, Lucy, as thy step withdraws,
Why sidelong eye the streamlet's brim?
Titania's foot without a slip,
Like thine, though timid, light, and slim,
From stone to stone might safely trip,
Nor risk the glow-worm clasp to dip
That binds her slipper's silken rim.

Or trust thy lover's strength ; nor fear
 That this same stalwart arm of mine,
 Which could yon oak's prone trunk uprear,
 Shall shrink beneath the burden dear
 Of form so slender, light, and fine—
 So, now the danger dared at last,
 Look back, and smile at perils past !

III.

And now we reach the favourite glade,
 Paled in by copsewood, cliff, and stone,
 Where, never harsher sounds invade,
 To break affection's whispering tone,
 Than the deep breeze that waves the shade,
 Than the small brooklet's feeble moan.
 Come ! rest thee on thy wonted seat ;
 Moss'd is the stone, the turf is green,
 A place where lovers best may meet,
 Who would that not their love be seen.
 The boughs, that dim the summer sky,
 Shall hide us from each lurking spy,
 That fain would spread the invidious tale
 How Lucy of the lofty eye,
 Noble in birth, in fortunes high,
 She for whom lords and barons sigh,
 Meets her poor Arthur in the dale.

IV.

How deep that blush ! how deep that sigh !
 And why does Lucy shun mine eye ?
 Is it because that crimson draws
 Its colour from some secret cause,
 Some hidden movement of the breast,
 She would not that her Arthur guessed ?
 O ! quicker far is lover's ken
 Than the dull glance of common men,
 And, by strange sympathy, can spell
 The thoughts the loved one will not tell !
 And mine, in Lucy's blush, saw met
 The hues of pleasure and regret ;

Pride mingled in the sigh her voice,
And shared with Love the crimson glow ;
Well pleased that thou art Arthur's choice,
Yet shamed thine own is placed so low :
Thou turn'st thy self-confessing cheek,
As if to meet the breeze's cooling ;
Then, Lucy, hear thy tutor speak,
For Love, too, has his hours of schooling.

V.

Too oft my anxious eye has spied
That secret grief thou fain wouldst hide,
The passing pang of humbled pride ;
Too oft, when through the splendid hall,
The loadstar of each heart and eye,
My fair one leads the glittering ball,
Will her stol'n glance on Arthur fall,
With such a blush and such a sigh !
Thou wouldst not yield, for wealth or rank,
The heart thy worth and beauty won,
Nor leave me on this mossy bank,
To meet a rival on a throne :
Why, then, should vain repinings rise,
That to thy lover fate denies
A nobler name, a wide domain,
A baron's birth, a menial train,
Since Heaven assigned him, for his part,
A lyre, a falchion, and a heart ?

VI.

My sword—its master must be dumb ;
But, when a soldier names my name,
Approach, my Lucy ! fearless come,
Nor dread to hear of Arthur's shame.
My heart—'mid all yon courtly crew,
Of lordly rank and lofty line,
Is there to love and honour true
That boasts a pulse so warm as mine ?
They praised thy diamonds' lustre rare—
Matched with thine eyes, I thought it faded ;

They praised the pearls that bound thy hair—
 I only saw the locks they braided ;
 They talked of wealthy dower and land,
 And titles of high birth the token—
 I thought of Lucy's heart and hand,
 Nor knew the sense of what was spoken.
 And yet, if ranked in Fortune's roll,
 I might have learned their choice unwise,
 Who rate the dower above the soul,
 And Lucy's diamonds o'er her eyes.

VII.

My lyre—it is an idle toy
 That borrows accents not its own,
 Like warbler of Colombian sky,
 That sings but in a mimic tone.*
 Ne'er did it sound o'er sainted well,
 Nor boasts it aught of Border spell ;
 Its strings no feudal slogan pour,
 Its heroes draw no broad claymore ;
 No shouting clans applauses raise,
 Because it sung their father's praise ;
 On Scottish moor, or English down,
 It ne'er was graced by fair renown ;
 Nor won—best meed to minstrel true—
 One favouring smile from fair BUCCLEUCH !
 By one poor streamlet sounds its tone,
 And heard by one dear maid alone.

VIII.

But, if thou bidd'st, these tones shall tell
 Of errant knight and damoselle ;
 Of the dread knot a Wizard tied,
 In punishment of maiden's pride,
 In notes of marvel and of fear,
 That best may charm romantic ear.
 For Lucy loves,—like COLLINS, ill-starred name !
 Whose lay's requital was that tardy fame,

* The mocking bird.

Who bound no laurel round his living head,
Should hang it o'er his monument when dead,—
For Lucy loves to tread enchanted strand,
And thread, like him, the maze of fairy land ;
Of golden battlements to view the gleam,
And slumber soft by some Elysian stream ;
Such lays she loves,—and, such my Lucy's choice,
What other song can claim her Poet's voice ?

CANTO FIRST.

I.

WHERE is the Maiden of mortal strain
That may match with the Baron of Triermain ? *
She must be lovely, and constant, and kind,
Holy and pure, and humble of mind,
Blithe of cheer, and gentle of mood,
Courteous, and generous, and noble of blood—
Lovely as the sun's first ray
When it breaks the clouds of an April day ;
Constant and true as the widowed dove,
Kind as a minstrel that sings of love ;
Pure as the fountain in rocky cave,
Where never sunbeam kissed the wave ;
Humble as maiden that loves in vain ;
Holy as hermit's vesper strain ;
Gentle as breeze that but whispers and dies,
Yet blithe as the light leaves that dance in its sighs ;
Courteous as monarch the morn he is crowned,
Generous as spring-dews that bless the glad ground ;
Noble her blood as the currents that met
In the veins of the noblest Plantagenet—
Such must her form be, her mood, and her strain,
That shall match with Sir Roland of Triermain.

II.

Sir Roland de Vaux he hath laid him to sleep ;
His blood it was fevered, his breathing was deep.

* See Note I.

He had been pricking against the Scot,
 The foray was long and the skirmish hot ;
 His dinted helm and his buckler's plight
 Bore token of a stubborn fight.

All in the castle must hold them still,
 Harpers must lull him to his rest,
 With the slow soft tunes he loves the best,
 Till sleep sink down upon his breast,
 Like the dew on a summer hill.

III.

It was the dawn of an autumn day ;
 The sun was struggling with frost-fog grey,
 That like a silvery crape was spread
 Round Skiddaw's dim and distant head,
 And faintly gleamed each painted pane
 Of the lordly halls of Triermain,

When that Baron bold awoke.
 Starting he woke, and loudly did call,
 Rousing his menials in bower and hall,
 While hastily he spoke :—

IV.

“Hearken, my minstrels ! Which of ye all
 Touched his harp with that dying fall,
 So sweet, so soft, so faint,
 It seemed an angel's whispered call
 To an expiring saint ?
 And hearken, my merry-men ! What time or where Did she pass, that maid with her heavenly brow,
 With her look so sweet and her eyes so fair,
 And her graceful step and her angel air,
 And the eagle plume in her dark-brown hair,
 That passed from my bower e'en now ?”

V.

Answered him Richard de Bretville ; he
 Was chief of the Baron's minstrelsy, —
 “Silent, noble chieftain, we
 Have sat since midnight close,

When such lulling sounds as the brooklet sings
Murmured from our melting strings,
And hushed you to repose.
Had a harp-note sounded here,
It had caught my watchful ear,
Although it fell as faint and shy
As bashful maiden's half-formed sigh,
When she thinks her lover near."—
Answered Philip of Fastwaite tall,
He kept guard in the outer hall,—
"Since at eve our watch took post,
Not a foot has thy portal crossed ;
Else had I heard the steps, though low
And light they fell, as when earth receives,
In morn of frost, the withered leaves,
That drop when no winds blow."—

VI.

"Then come thou hither, Henry, my page,
Whom I saved from the sack of Hermitage,
When that dark castle, tower, and spire,
Rose to the skies a pile of fire,
And reddened all the Nine-stane Hill,
And the shrieks of death that wildly broke
Through devouring flame and smothering smoke,
Made the warrior's heart-blood chill.
The trustiest thou of all my train,
My fleetest courser thou must rein,
And ride to Lyulph's tower,
And from the Baron of Triermain
Greet well that sage of power.
He is sprung from Druid sires,
And British bards that tuned their lyres
To Arthur's and Pendragon's praise,
And his who sleeps at Dunmailraise.*
Gifted like his gifted race,
He the characters can trace,

* Dunmailraise is one of the grand passes from Cumberland into Westmorland. It takes its name from a cairn, or pile of stones, erected, it is said, to the memory of Dunmail, the last King of Cumberland.

Graven deep in elder time
 Upon Helvellyn's cliffs sublime ;
 Sign and sigil well doth he know
 And can bode of weal and woe,
 Of kingdoms' fall, and fate of wars,
 From mystic dreams and course of stars.
 He shall tell if middle earth
 To that enchanting shape gave birth,
 Or if 'twas but an airy thing,
 Such as fantastic slumbers bring,
 Framed from the rainbow's varying dyes,
 Or fading tints of western skies.
 For, by the Blessed Rood I swear,
 If that fair form breathe vital air,
 No other maiden by my side
 Shall ever rest De Vaux's bride !”

VII.

The faithful Page he mounts his steed,
 And soon he crossed green Irthing's mead,
 Dashed o'er Kirkoswald's verdant plain,
 And Eden barred his course in vain.
 He passed red Penrith's Table Round,*
 For feats of chivalry renowned,
 Left Mayburgh's mound † and stones of power,
 By Druids raised in magic hour,
 And traced the Eamont's winding way,
 Till Ulfo's lake ‡ beneath him lay.

VIII.

Onward he rode, the pathway still
 Winding betwixt the lake and hill ;
 Till, on the fragment of a rock,
 Struck from its base by lightning shock,
 He saw the hoary Sage :
 The silver moss and lichen twined,
 With fern and deer-hair checked and lined,
 A cushion fit for age ;

* See Note 2.

† See Note 3.

‡ Ullswater.

And o'er him shook the aspen-tree,
 A restless rustling canopy.
 Then sprung young Henry from his selle,
 And greeted Lyulph grave,
 And then his master's tale did tell,
 And then for counsel crave.
 The Man of Years mused long and deep,
 Of time's lost treasures taking keep,
 And then, as rousing from a sleep,
 His solemn answer gave :—

IX.

"That maid is born of middle earth,
 And may of man be won,
 Though there have glided since her birth
 Five hundred years and one.
 But where's the knight in all the north
 That dare the adventure follow forth,
 So perilous to knightly worth,
 In the valley of St. John?
 Listen, youth, to what I tell,
 And bind it on thy memory well ;
 Nor muse that I commence the rhyme
 Far distant 'mid the wrecks of time.
 The mystic tale, by bard and sage,
 Is handed down from Merlin's age.

X. Lyulph's Tale.Lyulph's Tale.

"King Arthur has ridden from merry Carlisle
 When Pentecost was o'er ;
 He journeyed like errant-knight the while,
 And sweetly the summer sun did smile
 On mountain, moss, and moor.
 Above his solitary track
 Rose Glaramara's ridgy back,
 Amid whose yawning gulfs the sun
 Cast umbered radiance red and dun,
 Though never sunbeam could discern
 The surface of that sable tarn,

In whose black mirror you may spy
 The stars, while noontide lights the sky.*
 The gallant King he skirted still
 The margin of that mighty hill ;
 Rock upon rocks incumbent hung,
 And torrents, down the gullies flung,
 Joined the rude river that brawled on,
 Recoiling now from crag and stone,
 Now diving deep from human ken,
 And raving down its darksome glen.
 The Monarch judged this desert wild,
 With such romantic ruin piled,
 Was theatre by Nature's hand
 For feat of high achievement planned.

XI.

“ Oh, rather he chose, that Monarch bold,
 On vent'rous quest to ride,
 In plate and mail, by wood and wold,
 Than, with ermine trapped and cloth of gold,
 In princely bower to bide ;
 The bursting crash of a foeman's spear
 As it shivered against his mail,
 Was merrier music to his ear
 Than courtier's whispered tale ;
 And the clash of Caliburn † more dear,
 When on the hostile casque it rung,
 Than all the lays
 To their monarch's praise
 That the harpers of Reged sung.
 He loved better to rest by wood or river,
 Than in bower of his bride, Dame Guenever,
 For he left that lady, so lovely of cheer,
 To follow adventures of danger and fear ;

* The small lake called Scales-tarn lies so deeply embosomed in the recesses of the huge mountain called Saddleback, more poetically Glaramara, is of such great depth, and so completely hidden by the sun, that it is said its beams never reach it, and that the reflection of the stars may be seen at midday.

† King Arthur's sword, sometimes called Excalibur.

And the frank-hearted Monarch full little did wot
That she smiled, in his absence, on brave Lancelot.

XII.

“ He rode, till over down and dell
The shade more broad and deeper fell ;
And though around the mountain’s head
Flowed streams of purple, and gold, and red,
Dark at the base, unblest by beam,
Frowned the black rocks, and roared the stream
With toil the King his way pursued
By lonely Threlkeld’s waste and wood,
Till on his course obliquely shone
The narrow valley of SAINT JOHN,
Down sloping to the western sky,
Where lingering sunbeams love to lie.
Right glad to feel those beams again,
The King drew up his charger’s rein ;
With gauntlet raised he screened his sight,
As dazzled with the level light,
And, from beneath his glove of mail,
Scanned at his ease the lovely vale,
While ’gainst the sun his armour bright
Gleamed ruddy like the beacon’s light.

XIII.

“ Paled in by many a lofty hill,
The narrow dale lay smooth and still,
And, down its verdant bosom led,
A winding brooklet found its bed.
But, midmost of the vale, a mound
Arose with airy turrets crowned,
Buttress, and rampire’s circling bound,
And mighty keep and tower ;
Seemed some primeval giant’s hand,
The castle’s massive walls had planned,
A ponderous bulwark to withstand
Ambitious Nimrod’s power.
Above the moated entrance slung,
The balanced drawbridge trembling hung,

As jealous of a foe;
 Wicket of oak as iron hard,
 With iron studded, clinched, and barred,
 And pronged portcullis, joined to guard
 The gloomy pass below.
 But the grey walls no banners crowned,
 Upon the watch-tower's airy round
 No warder stood his horn to sound,
 No guard beside the bridge was found,
 And where the Gothic gateway frowned,
 Glanced neither bill nor bow.

XIV.

"Beneath the castle's gloomy pride
 In ample round did Arthur ride
 Three times; nor living thing he spied,
 Nor heard a living sound,
 Save that, awakening from her dream,
 The owlet now began to scream,
 In concert with the rushing stream
 That washed the battled mound.
 He lighted from his goodly steed,
 And he left him to graze on bank and mead;
 And slowly he climbed the narrow way
 That reached the entrance grim and grey,
 And he stood the outward arch below,
 And his bugle-horn prepared to blow
 In summons blithe and bold,
 Deeming to rouse from iron sleep
 The guardian of this dismal Keep,
 Which well he guessed the hold
 Of wizard stern, or goblin grim,
 Or pagan of gigantic limb,
 The tyrant of the wold.

XV.

"The ivory bugle's golden tip
 Twice touched the Monarch's manly lip,
 And twice his hand withdrew.—"

Think not but Arthur's heart was good !
His shield was crossed by the blessed rood,
Had a pagan host before him stood,
 He had charged them through and through ;
Yet the silence of that ancient place
Sunk on his heart, and he paused a space
 Ere yet his horn he blew.
But, instant as its 'larum rung,
The castle gate was open flung,
Portcullis rose with crashing groan
Full harshly up its groove of stone ;
The balance-beams obeyed the blast,
And down the trembling drawbridge cast ;
The vaulted arch before him lay,
With nought to bar the gloomy way,
And onward Arthur paced, with hand
On Caliburn's resistless brand.

XVI.

" A hundred torches, flashing bright,
Dispelled at once the gloomy night
 That loured along the walls,
And showed the King's astonished sight
 The inmates of the halls.
Nor wizard stern, nor goblin grim,
Nor giant huge of form and limb,
 Nor heathen knight, was there ;
But the cressets, which odours flung aloft,
Showed by their yellow light and soft,
 A band of damsels fair.
Onward they came, like summer wave
 That dances to the shore ;
A hundred voices welcome gave,
 And welcome o'er and o'er !
A hundred lovely hands assail
The bucklers of the Monarch's mail,
And busy laboured to unhasp
Rivet of steel and iron clasp.
One wrapped him in a mantle fair,
And one flung odours on his hair ;

His short curled ringlets one smoothed down,
One wreathed them with a myrtle crown :
A bride upon her wedding-day
Was tended ne'er by troop so gay.

XVII.

" Loud laughed they all,—the King, in vain,
With questions tasked the giddy train ;
Let him entreat, or crave, or call,
'Twas one reply—loud laughed they all.
Then o'er him mimic chains they fling,
Framed of the fairest flowers of spring.
While some their gentle force unite,
Onward to drag the wondering knight,
Some, bolder, urge his pace with blows
Dealt with the lily or the rose.
Behind him were in triumph borne
The warlike arms he late had worn.
Four of the train combined to rear
The terrors of Tintadgel's spear ; *
Two, laughing at their lack of strength,
Dragged Caliburn in cumbrous length ;
One, while she aped a martial stride,
Placed on her brows the helmet's pride ;
Then screamed, 'twixt laughter and surprise
To feel its depth o'erwhelm her eyes.
With revel-shout, and triumph-song,
Thus gaily marched the giddy throng.

XVIII.

" Through many a gallery and hall
They led, I ween, their royal thrall ;
At length, beneath a fair arcade
Their march and song at once they stayed.
The eldest maiden of the band
(The lovely maid was scarce eighteen)
Raised, with imposing air, her hand,
And reverent silence did command,
On entrance of their Queen,

* Tintadgel Castle, in Cornwall, is reported to have been the birth-place of King Arthur.

And they were mute.—But as a glance
They steal on Arthur's countenance
 Bewildered with surprise,
Their smothered mirth again 'gan speak,
In archly dimpled chin and cheek,
 And laughter-lighted eyes.

XIX.

"The attributes of those high days
Now only live in minstrel-lays ;
For Nature, now exhausted, still
Was then profuse of good and ill.
Strength was gigantic, valour high,
And wisdom soared beyond the sky,
And beauty had such matchless beam
As lights not now a lover's dream.
Yet, e'en in that romantic age,
 Ne'er were such charms by mortal seen
As Arthur's dazzled eyes engage,
When forth on that enchanted stage,
With glittering train of maid and page,
 Advanced the castle's Queen !
While up the hall she slowly passed,
Her dark eye on the King she cast,
 That flashed expression strong ;
The longer dwelt that lingering look,
Her cheek the livelier colour took,
And scarce the shamefaced King could brook
 The gaze that lasted long.
A sage, who had that look espied,
Where kindling passion strove with pride,
Had whispered, ' Prince, beware !
From the chafed tiger rend the prey,
Rush on the lion when at bay,
Bar the fell dragon's blighted way,
 But shun that lovely snare !'

XX.

"At once that inward strife suppressed,
The dame approached her warlike guest,

With greeting in that fair degree,
 Where female pride and courtesy
 Are blended with such passing art
 As awes at once and charms the heart.
 A courtly welcome first she gave,
 Then of his goodness 'gan to crave
 Construction fair and true
 Of her light maidens' idle mirth,
 Who drew from lonely glens their birth,
 Nor knew to pay to stranger worth
 And dignity their due;
 And then she prayed that he would rest
 That night her castle's honoured guest.
 The Monarch meetly thanks expressed:
 The banquet rose at her behest;
 With lay and tale, and laugh and jest,
 Apace the evening flew.

XXI.

“The Lady sat the Monarch by,
 Now in her turn abashed and shy,
 And with indifference seemed to hear
 The toys he whispered in her ear.
 Her bearing modest was and fair,
 Yet shadows of constraint were there,
 That showed an over-cautious care
 Some inward thought to hide;
 Oft did she pause in full reply,
 And oft cast down her large dark eye,
 Oft checked the soft voluptuous sigh
 That heaved her bosom's pride.
 Slight symptoms these, but shepherds know
 How hot the midday sun shall glow,
 From the mist of morning sky;
 And so the wily Monarch guessed,
 That this assumed restraint expressed
 More ardent passions in the breast
 Than ventured to the eye.
 Closer he pressed, while beakers rang,
 While maidens laughed and minstrels sang,

Still closer to her ear ;—
But why pursue the common tale ?
Or wherefore show how knights prevail
When ladies dare to hear ?
Or wherefore trace from what slight cause
Its source one tyrant passion draws,
Till, mastering all within,
Where lives the man that has not tried,
How mirth can into folly glide,
And folly into sin ? ”

CANTO SECOND.

I.

Ulf's Tale, continued.

‘ ANOTHER day, another day,
And yet another, glides away !
The Saxon stern, the pagan Dane,
Maraud on Britain's shores again.
Arthur, of Christendom the flower,
Lies loitering in a lady's bower ;
The horn, that foemen wont to fear,
Sounds but to wake the Cumbrian deer,
And Caliburn, the British pride,
Hangs useless by a lover's side.

II.

“ Another day, another day,
And yet another, glides away !
Heroic plans in pleasure drowned,
He thinks not of the Table Round ;
In lawless love dissolved his life,
He thinks not of his beauteous wife :
Better he loves to snatch a flower
From bosom of his paramour,
Than from a Saxon knight to wrest
The honours of his heathen crest !

Better to wreathe, 'mid tresses brown,
The heron's plume her hawk struck down,
Than o'er the altar give to flow
The banners of a Paynim foe.
Thus, week by week, and day by day,
His life inglorious glides away ;
But she, that soothes his dream, with fear
Beholds his hour of waking near !

III.

“ Much force have mortal charms to stay
Our peace in Virtue's toilsome way ;
But Guendolen's might far outshine
Each maid of merely mortal line.
Her mother was of human birth,
Her sire a Genie of the earth,
In days of old deemed to preside
O'er lovers' wiles and beauty's pride,
By youths and virgins worshipped long
With festive dance and choral song,
Till, when the Cross to Britain came,
On heathen altars died the flame.
Now, deep in Wastdale solitude,
The downfall of his rights he rued ;
And, born of his resentment heir,
He trained to guile that lady fair,
To sink in slothful sin and shame
The champions of the Christian name.
Well skilled to keep vain thoughts alive,
And all to promise, nought to give,—
The timid youth had hope in store,
The bold and pressing gained no more.
As wildered children leave their home,
After the rainbow's arch to roam,
Her lovers bartered fair esteem,
Faith, fame, and honour, for a dream.

IV.

“ Her sire's soft arts the soul to tame
She practised thus—till Arthur came.

Then, frail humanity had part,
And all the mother claimed her heart.
Forgot each rule her father gave,
Sunk from a princess to a slave,
Too late must Guendolen deplore,
He, that has all, can hope no more !
Now must she see her lover strain
At every turn her feeble chain ;
Watch to new-bind each knot, and shrink
To view each fast-decaying link.
Art she invokes to Nature's aid,
Her vest to zone, her locks to braid ;
Each varied pleasure heard her call,
The feast, the tourney, and the ball.
Her storied lore she next applies,
Taxing her mind to aid her eyes ;
Now more than mortal wise, and then
In female softness sunk again ;
Now, raptured, with each wish complying,
With feigned reluctance now denying ;
Each charm she varied, to retain
A varying heart—and all in vain !

v.

“ Thus in the garden's narrow bound,
Flanked by some castle's Gothic round,
Fain would the artist's skill provide
The limits of his realms to hide.
The walks in labyrinths he twines,
Shade after shade with skill combines,
With many a varied flowery knot,
And copse, and arbour, decks the spot,
Tempting the hasty foot to stay,
And linger on the lovely way——
Vain art ! vain hope ! 'tis fruitless all !
At length we reach the bounding wall,
And, sick of flower and trim-dressed tree,
Long for rough glades and forest free.

VL

“ Three summer months had scantily flown,
When Arthur, in embarrassed tone,
Spoke of his liegemen and his throne ;
Said all too long had been his stay,
And duties, which a Monarch sway,
Duties unknown to humbler men,
Must tear her knight from Guendolen.—
She listened silently the while,
Her mood expressed in bitter smile ;
Beneath her eye must Arthur quail,
And oft resume the unfinished tale,
Confessing, by his downcast eye,
The wrong he sought to justify.
He ceased. A moment mute she gazed,
And then her looks to heaven she raised ;
One palm her temples veiled, to hide
The tear that sprung in spite of pride !
The other for an instant pressed
The foldings of her silken vest !

VII.

“ At her reproachful sign and look,
The hint the Monarch’s conscience took.
Eager he spoke—‘ No, lady, no !
Deem not of British Arthur so,
Nor think he can deserter prove
To the dear pledge of mutual love.
I swear by sceptre and by sword,
As belted knight and Britain’s lord,
That if a boy shall claim my care,
That boy is born a kingdom’s heir ;
But, if a maiden Fate allows,
To choose that maid a fitting spouse,
A summer-day in lists shall strive
My knights—the bravest knights alive—
And he, the best and bravest tried,
Shall Arthur’s daughter claim for bride.’
He spoke, with voice resolved and high ;
The lady deigned him not reply.

VIII.

“At dawn of morn, ere on the brake
His matins did a warbler make,
Or stirred his wing to brush away
A single dewdrop from the spray,
Ere yet a sunbeam through the mist,
The castle-battlements had kissed,
The gates revolve, the drawbridge falls,
And Arthur sallies from the walls.
Doffed his soft garb of Persia’s loom,
And steel from spur to helmet-plume;
His Libyan steed full proudly trode,
And joyful neighed beneath his load.
The Monarch gave a passing sigh
To penitence and pleasures by,
When, lo! to his astonished ken,
Appeared the form of Guendolen.

IX.

“Beyond the outmost wall she stood,
Attired like huntress of the wood:
Sandalled her feet, her ankles bare,
And eagle-plumage decked her hair;
Firm was her look, her bearing bold,
And in her hand a cup of gold.
‘Thou goest,’ she said, ‘and ne’er again
Must we two meet, in joy or pain.
Full fain would I this hour delay,
Though weak the wish—yet, wilt thou stay?—
No! thou look’st forward. Still attend,—
Part we like lover and like friend.’
She raised the cup—‘Not this the juice
The sluggish vines of earth produce;
Pledge we, at parting, in the draught
Which Genii love!’—she said, and quaffed;
And strange unwonted lustres fly
From her flushed cheek and sparkling eye.

X.

“The courteous Monarch bent him low,
And, stooping down from saddlebow,

Lifted the cup, in act to drink.
 A drop escaped the goblet's brink ;
 Intense as liquid fire from hell,
 Upon the charger's neck it fell.
 Screaming with agony and fright,
 He bolted twenty feet upright—
 The peasant still can show the dint
 Where his hoofs lighted on the flint.
 From Arthur's hand the goblet flew,
 Scattering a shower of fiery dew,
 That burned and blighted where it fell ! *
 The frantic steed rushed up the dell,
 As whistles from the bow the reed ;
 Nor bit nor rein could check his speed,
 Until he gained the hill ;
 Then breath and sinew failed apace,
 And, reeling from the desperate race,
 He stood, exhausted, still.
 The Monarch, breathless and amazed,
 Back on the fatal castle gazed—
 Nor tower nor donjon could he spy,
 Darkening against the morning sky ; †
 But, on the spot where once they frowned,
 The lonely streamlet brawled around
 A tufted knoll, where dimly shone
 Fragments of rocks and rifted stone.
 Musing on this strange hap the while,
 The King wends back to fair Carlisle ;
 And cares, that cumber royal sway,
 Wore memory of the past away.

..XI.

“ Full fifteen years, and more, were sped,
 Each brought new wreaths to Arthur's head.
 Twelve bloody fields, with glory fought,
 The Saxons to subjection brought ; ‡

* See Note 4. † See Note 5.

‡ Arthur is said to have defeated the Saxons in twelve pitched battles, and to have achieved the other feats alluded to in the text.

Rython, the mighty giant, slain
 By his good brand, relieved Bretagne ;
 The Pictish Gillamore in fight,
 And Roman Lucius, owned his might ;
 And wide were through the world renowned
 The glories of his Table Round.
 Each knight who sought adventurous fame,
 To the bold court of Britain came ;
 And all who suffered causeless wrong,
 From tyrant proud or faitour strong,
 Sought Arthur's presence to complain—
 Nor there for aid implored in vain.

XII.

“ For this the King, with pomp and pride,
 Held solemn court at Whitsuntide,
 And summoned prince and peer,
 All who owed homage for their land,
 Or who craved knighthood from his hand,
 Or who had succour to demand,
 To come from far and near.
 At such high tide were glee and game
 Mingled with feats of martial fame,
 For many a stranger champion came,
 In lists to break a spear ;
 And not a knight of Arthur's host,
 Save that he trode some foreign coast
 But at this feast of Pentecost
 Before him must appear.
 Ah, Minstrels ! when the Table Round
 Arose, with all its warriors crowned,
 There was a theme for bards to sound
 In triumph to their string !
 Five hundred years are past and gone,
 But time shall draw his dying groan,
 Ere he behold the British throne
 Begirt with such a ring !

XIII.

“ The heralds named the appointed spot,
 As Caerleon or Camelot, Do you know

Or Carlisle fair and free.
 At Penrith, now, the feast was set,
 And in fair Eamont's vale were met
 The flower of Chivalry.
 There Galaad sate with manly grace,
 Yet maiden meekness in his face;
 There Morolt of the iron mace,
 And love-lorn Tristrem there : *
 And Dinadam with lively glance,
 And Lanval with the fairy lance,
 And Mordred with his look askance,
 Brunor and Bevidere.
 Why should I tell of numbers more?
 Sir Cay, Sir Bannier, and Sir Bore,
 Sir Carodac the keen,
 The gentle Gawain's courteous lore,
 Hector de Mares and Pellinore,
 And Lancelot, that ever more
 Looked stol'n-wise on the Queen. †

XIV.

" When wine and mirth did most abound,
 And harpers played their blithest round,
 A shrilly trumpet shook the ground,
 And marshals cleared the ring ;
 A maiden, on a palfrey white,
 Heading a band of damsels bright,
 Paced through the circle, to alight
 And kneel before the King.
 Arthur, with strong emotion, saw
 Her graceful boldness checked by awe,
 Her dress like huntress of the wold,
 Her bow and baldric trapped with gold,
 Her sandalled feet, her ankles bare,
 And the eagle-plume that decked her hair.
 Graceful her veil she backward flung—
 The King, as from his seat he sprung,
 Almost cried, ' Guendolen ! '

* See Note 6. † See Note 7.

But 'twas a face more frank and wild,
Betwixt the woman and the child,
Where less of magic beauty smiled
Than of the race of men ;
And in the forehead's haughty grace,
The lines of Britain's royal race,
Pendragon's you might ken.

XV.

"Faltering, yet gracefully, she said—
'Great Prince ! behold an orphan maid,
In her departed mother's name,
A father's vowed protection claim !
The vow was sworn in desert lone,
In the deep valley of St. John.'
At once the King the suppliant raised,
And kissed her brow, her beauty praised.
His vow, he said, should well be kept,
Ere in the sea the sun was dipped,—
Then, conscious, glanced upon his queen ;
But she, unruffled at the scene
Of human frailty, construed mild,
Looked upon Lancelot and smiled.

XVI.

"Up ! up ! each knight of gallant crest
Take buckler, spear, and brand !
He that to-day shall bear him best
Shall win my Gyneth's hand.
And Arthur's daughter, when a bride,
Shall bring a noble dower ;
Both fair Strath-Clyde and Reged wide,
And Carlisle town and tower.'
Then might you hear each valiant knight,
To page and squire that cried,
'Bring my armour bright, and my courser wight !
'Tis not each day that a warrior's might
May win a royal bride.'
Then cloaks and caps of maintenance
In haste aside they fling ;

The helmets glance, and gleams the lance,
And the steel-weaved hauberks ring.
Small care had they of their peaceful array,
They might gather it that wolde ;
For brake and bramble glittered gay
With pearls and cloth of gold.

XVII.

“ Within trumpet sound of the Table Round
Were fifty champions free,
And they all arise to fight that prize,—
They all arise but three.
Nor love’s fond troth, nor wedlock’s oath,
One gallant could withhold ;
For priests will allow of a broken vow,
For penance or for gold.
But sigh and glance from ladies bright
Among the troop were thrown,
To plead their right, and true-love plight,
And ’plain of honour flown.
The knights they busied them so fast,
With buckling spur and belt,
That sigh and look, by ladies cast,
Were neither seen nor felt.
From pleading, or upbraiding glance,
Each gallant turns aside,
And only thought, ‘ If speeds my lance,
A queen becomes my bride !
She has fair Strath-Clyde, and Reged wide,
And Carlisle tower and town ;
She is the loveliest maid, beside,
That ever heired a crown.’
So in haste their coursers they bestride,
And strike their visors down.

XVIII.

“ The champions, armed in martial sort,
Have thronged into the list,
And but three knights of Arthur’s court
Are from the tourney missed.

And still these lovers' fame survives
For faith so constant shown,
There were two who loved their neighbours' wives,
And one who loved his own.*
The first was Lancelot de Lac,
The second Tristrem bold,
The third was valiant Carodac,
Who won the cup of gold,†
What time, of all King Arthur's crew
(Thereof came jeer and laugh),
He, as the mate of lady true,
Alone the cup could quaff.
Though envy's tongue would fain surmise,
That but for very shame
Sir Carodac, to fight that prize,
Had given both cup and dame;
Yet, since but one of that fair court
Was true to wedlock's shrine,
Brand him who will with base report,
He shall be free from mine.

XIX.

"Now caracoled the steeds in air,
Now plumes and pennons wantoned fair,
As all around the lists so wide
In panoply the champions ride.
King Arthur saw with startled eye
The flower of chivalry march by,
The bulwark of the Christian creed,
The kingdom's shield in hour of need.
Too late he thought him of the woe
Might from their civil conflict flow;
For well he knew they would not part
Till cold was many a gallant heart.

* See Note 8.

† See the comic tale of the Boy and the Mantle, in the third volume of Percy's "Reliques of Ancient Poetry," from the Breton or Norman original of which Ariosto is supposed to have taken his Tale of the Enchanted Cup.

His hasty vow he 'gan to rue,
 And Gyneth then apart he drew ;
 To her his leading-staff resigned,
 But added caution grave and kind :—

XX.

“ ‘Thou seest, my child, as promise-bound,
 I bid the trump for tourney sound.
 Take thou my warder as the queen
 And umpire of the martial scene.
 But mark thou this : as Beauty bright
 Is polar star to valiant knight,
 As at her word his sword he draws,
 His fairest guerdon her applause,
 So gentle maid should never ask
 Of knighthood vain and dangerous task ;
 And Beauty's eyes should ever be
 Like the twin stars that soothe the sea,
 And Beauty's breath shall whisper peace,
 And bid the storm of battle cease.
 I tell thee this, lest all too far,
 These knights urge tourney into war.
 Blithe at the trumpet let them go,
 And fairly counter blow for blow ;—
 No striplings these, who succour need
 For a razed helm or falling steed.
 But, Gyneth, when the strife grows warm,
 And threatens death or deadly harm,
 Thy sire entreats, thy king commands,
 Thou drop the warder from thy hands.
 Trust thou thy father with thy fate,
 Doubt not he choose thee fitting mate ;
 Nor be it said, through Gyneth's pride
 A rose of Arthur's chaplet died.’

XXI.

“ A proud and discontented glow
 O'ershadowed Gyneth's brow of snow ;
 She put the warder by :—
 ‘ Reserve thy boon, my liege,’ she said,

‘ Thus chaffered down and limited,
Debased and narrowed for a maid
Of less degree than I.
No petty chief but holds his heir
At a more honoured price and rare
Than Britain’s King holds me !
Although the sun-burned maid, for dower,
Has but her father’s rugged tower,
His barren hill and lea.—
King Arthur swore, “ By crown and sword,
As belted knight and Britain’s lord,
That a whole summer’s day should strive
His knights, the bravest knights alive ! ”
Recall thine oath ! and to her glen
Poor Gyneth can return agen !
Not on thy daughter will the stain,
That soils thy sword and crown remain.
But think not she will e’er be bride
Save to the bravest, proved and tried.
Pendragon’s daughter will not fear
For clashing sword or splintered spear,
Nor shrink though blood should flow :
And all too well sad Guendolen
Hath taught the faithlessness of men,
That child of hers should pity, when
Their meed they undergo.’

XXII.

“ He frowned and sighed, the Monarch bold :—
‘ I give—what I may not withhold ;
For, not for danger, dread, or death,
Must British Arthur break his faith.
Too late I mark thy mother’s art
Hath taught thee this relentless part :
I blame her not, for she had wrong,
But not to these my faults belong.
Use, then, the warder as thou wilt ;
But trust me that, if life be spilt,
In Arthur’s love, in Arthur’s grace,
Gyneth shall lose a daughter’s place.’

With that he turned his head aside,
 Nor brooked to gaze upon her pride,
 As, with the truncheon raised, she sate
 The arbitress of mortal fate ;
 Nor brooked to mark, in ranks disposed,
 How the bold champions stood opposed,
 For shrill the trumpet-flourish fell
 Upon his ear like passing bell !
 Then first from sight of martial fray
 Did Britain's hero turn away.

XXIII.

" But Gyneth heard the clangour high,
 As hears the hawk the partridge cry.
 Oh, blame her not ! the blood was hers,
 That at the trumpet's summons stirs !—
 And e'en the gentlest female eye
 Might the brave strife of chivalry
 Awhile untroubled view ;
 So well accomplished was each knight,
 To strike and to defend in fight,
 Their meeting was a goodly sight,
 While plate and mail held true.
 The lists with painted plumes were strown,
 Upon the wind at random thrown,
 But helm and breastplate bloodless shone—
 It seemed their feathered crests alone
 Should this encounter rue.
 And ever, as the combat grows,
 The trumpet's cheery voice arose,
 Like lark's shrill song the flourish flows,
 Heard while the gale of April blows
 The merry greenwood through.

XXIV.

" But soon to earnest grew their game,
 The spears drew blood, the swords struck flame,
 And, horse and man, to ground there came
 Knights, who shall rise no more !
 Gone was the pride the war that graced,

Gay shields were cleft, and crests defaced,
And steel coats riven, and helms unbraced,
And pennons streamed with gore.
Gone, too, were fence and fair array,
And desperate strength made deadly way
At random through the bloody fray,
And blows were dealt with headlong sway,
Unheeding where they fell ;
And now the trumpet's clamours seem
Like the shrill sea-bird's wailing scream,
Heard o'er the whirlpool's gulfling stream,
The sinking seaman's knell !

xxv.

“ Seemed in this dismal hour, that Fate
Would Camlan's ruin antedate,
And spare dark Mordred's crime ;
Already gasping on the ground
Lie twenty of the Table Round,
Of chivalry the prime.
Arthur, in anguish, tore away
From head and beard his tresses grey ;
And she, proud Gyneth, felt dismay,
And quaked with ruth and fear :
But still she deemed her mother's shade
Hung o'er the tumult, and forbade
The sign that had the slaughter stayed,
And chid the rising tear.
Then Brunor, Taulas, Mador, fell,
Helias the White, and Lionel,
And many a champion more ;
Rochemont and Dinadam are down,
And Ferrand of the Forest Brown
Lies gasping in his gore.
Vanoc, by mighty Morolt pressed
Even to the confines of the list,
Young Vanoc of the beardless face
(Fame spoke the youth of Merlin's race),
O'erpowered at Gyneth's footstool bled,
His heart's blood dyed her sandals red.

But then the sky was overcast,
 Then howled at once a whirlwind's blast,
 And rent by sudden throes,
 Yawned in mid-lists the quaking earth,
 And from the gulf—tremendous birth!—
 The form of Merlin rose.

XXVI.

“ Sternly the Wizard Prophet eyed
 The dreary lists with slaughter dyed,
 And sternly raised his hand :—
 ‘ Madmen,’ he said, ‘ your strife forbear ;
 And thou, fair cause of mischief, hear
 The doom thy fates demand :—
 Long shall close in stony sleep
 Eyes for ruth that would not weep ;
 Iron lethargy shall seal
 Heart that pity scorned to feel.
 Yet, because thy mother’s art
 Warped thine unsuspecting heart,
 And for love of Arthur’s race
 Punishment is blent with grace,
 Thou shalt bear thy penance lone
 In the Valley of St. John,
 And this weird* shall overtake thee—
 Sleep, until a knight shall wake thee,
 For feats of arms as far renowned
 As warrior of the Table Round.
 Long endurance of thy slumber
 Well may teach the world to number
 All their woes from Gyneth’s pride,
 When the Red Cross champions died.’ ”

XXVII.

“ As Merlin speaks, on Gyneth’s eye
 Slumber’s load begins to lie ;
 Fear and anger vainly strive
 Still to keep its light alive.

* Doom.

Twice, with effort and with pause,
O'er her brow her hand she draws ;
Twice her strength in vain she tries
From the fatal chair to rise :
Merlin's magic doom is spoken,
Vanoc's death must now be wroken.
Slow the dark-fringed eyelids fall,
Curtaining each azure ball—
Slowly as on summer eves
Violets fold their dusky leaves.
The weighty baton of command
Now bears down her sinking hand ;
On her shoulder droops her head ;
Net of pearl and golden thread,
Bursting, gave her locks to flow
O'er her arm and breast of snow.
And so lovely seemed she there,
Spell-bound in her ivory chair,
That her angry sire, repenting,
Craved stern Merlin for relenting,
And the champions, for her sake,
Would again the contest wake ;
Till, in necromantic night,
Gyneth vanished from their sight.

XXVIII.

" Still she bears her weird alone,
In the Valley of St. John ;
And her semblance oft will seem,
Mingling in a champion's dream,
Of her weary lot to plain,
And crave his aid to burst her chain.
While her wondrous tale was new,
Warriors to her rescue drew,
East and west, and south and north,
From the Liffy, Thames, and Forth.
Most have sought in vain the glen,
Tower nor castle could they ken ;
Not at every time or tide,
Nor by every eye, descried.

Fast and vigil must be borne,
 Many a night in watching worn,
 Ere an eye of mortal powers
 Can discern those magic towers.
 Of the persevering few,
 Some from hopeless task withdrew,
 When they read the dismal threat
 Graved upon the gloomy gate.
 Few have braved the yawning door,
 And those few returned no more.
 In the lapse of time forgot,
 Well-nigh lost is Gyneth's lot;
 Sound her sleep as in the tomb,
 Till wakened by the trump of doom."

END OF LYULPH'S TALE.

I.

Here pause my tale ; for all too soon,
 My Lucy, comes the hour of noon.
 Already from thy lofty dome
 Its courtly inmates 'gin to roam,
 And each, to kill the goodly day
 That God has granted them, his way
 Of lazy sauntering has sought ;
 Lordlings and witlings not a few,
 Incapable of doing aught,
 Yet ill at ease with nought to do.
 Here is no longer place for me ;
 For, Lucy, thou wouldst blush to see
 Some phantom, fashionably thin,
 With limb of lath and kerchiefed chin,
 And lounging gape, or sneering grin,
 Steal sudden on our privacy.
 And how should I, so humbly born,
 Endure the graceful spectre's scorn ?
 Faith ! ill, I fear, while conjuring wand
 Of English oak is hard at hand.

II.

Or grant the hour be all too soon
For Hessian boot and pantaloon,
And grant the lounge seldom strays
Beyond the smooth and gravelled maze,
Laud we the gods that Fashion's train
Holds hearts of more adventurous strain.
Artists are hers, who scorn to trace
Their rules from Nature's boundless grace,
But their right paramount assert
To limit her by pedant art,
Damning whate'er of vast and fair
Exceeds a canvas three feet square.
This thicket, for their gumption fit,
May furnish such a happy bit.
Bards, too, are hers, wont to recite
Their own sweet lays by waxen light,
Half in the salver's tangle drowned,
While the chasse-café glides around;
And such may hither secret stray,
To labour an extempore.
Or sportsman, with his boisterous hollo
May here his wiser spaniel follow;
Or stage-struck Juliet may presume
To choose this bower for tiring-room.
And we alike must shun regard
From painter, player, sportsman, bard:
Insects that skim in Fashion's sky,
Wasp, blue-bottle, or butterfly,
Lucy, have all alarms for us,
For all can hum and all can buzz.

III.

But, O my Lucy, say how long
We still must dread this trifling throng,
And stoop to hide, with coward art,
The genuine feelings of the heart!
No parents thine whose just command
Should rule their child's obedient hand;

Thy guardians, with contending voice,
 Press each his individual choice.
 And which is Lucy's?—Can it be
 That puny fop, trimmed cap-à-pee,
 Who loves in the saloon to show
 The arms that never knew a foe;
 Whose sabre trails along the ground,
 Whose legs in shapeless boots are drowned;
 A new Achilles, sure,—the steel
 Fled from his breast to fence his heel;
 One, for the simple manly grace
 That wont to deck our martial race,
 Who comes in foreign trashery
 Of tinkling chain and spur,
 A walking haberdashery
 Of feathers, lace, and fur—
 In Rowley's antiquated phrase,
 Horse-milliner of modern days?

IV.

Or is it he, the wordy youth,
 So early trained for statesman's part,
 Who talks of honour, faith, and truth,
 As themes that he has got by heart;
 Whose ethics Chesterfield can teach,
 Whose logic is from Single-speech;*
 Who scorns the meanest thought to vent,
 Save in the phrase of Parliament;
 Who, in a tale of cat and mouse,
 Calls "order," and "divides the house,"
 Who "craves permission to reply,"
 Whose "noble friend is in his eye;"
 Whose loving tender some have reckoned
 A motion, you should gladly second?

V.

What, neither? Can there be a third,
 To such resistless swains preferred?—

* See "Parliamentary Logic, etc.," by the Right Hon. William Gerard Hamilton (1808), commonly called "Single-Speech Hamilton."

O why, my Lucy, turn aside,
With that quick glance of injured pride?
Forgive me, love, I cannot bear
That altered and resentful air.
Were all the wealth of Russel mine,
And all the rank of Howard's line,
All would I give for leave to dry
That dewdrop trembling in thine eye.
Think not I fear such fops can wile
From Lucy more than careless smile;
But yet, if wealth and high degree
Give gilded counters currency,
Must I not fear, when rank and birth
Stamp the pure ore of genuine worth?
Nobles there are, whose martial fires
Rival the fame that raised their sires;
And patriots, skilled through storms of fate
To guide and guard the reeling state.
Such, such there are—If such should come,
Arthur must tremble and be dumb,
Self-exiled seek some distant shore,
And mourn till life and grief are o'er.

VI.

What sight, what signal of alarm,
That Lucy clings to Arthur's arm?
Or is it, that the rugged way
Makes Beauty lean on lover's stay?
Oh, no! for on the vale and brake
Nor sight nor sounds of danger wake,
And this trim sward of velvet green
Were carpet for the Fairy Queen.
That pressure slight was but to tell
That Lucy loves her Arthur well,
And fain would banish from his mind
Suspicious fear and doubt unkind.

VII.

But wouldst thou bid the demons fly
Like mist before the dawning sky,

There is but one resistless spell—
 Say, wilt thou guess, or must I tell?
 'Twere hard to name, in minstrel phrase,
 A landaulet and four blood-bays,
 But bards agree this wizard band
 Can but be bound in Northern land.
 'Tis there—nay, draw not back thy hand!—
 'Tis there this slender finger round
 Must golden amulet be bound,
 Which, blessed with many a holy prayer,
 Can change to rapture lovers' care,
 And doubt and jealousy shall die,
 And fears give place to ecstasy.

VIII.

Now, trust me, Lucy, all too long
 Has been thy lover's tale and song.
 Oh, why so silent, love, I pray?
 Have I not spoke the livelong day?
 And will not Lucy deign to say
 One word her friend to bless?
 I ask but one—a simple sound,
 Within three little letters bound,
 Oh, let the word be YES!

CANTO THIRD.

INTRODUCTION.

For though to Lovers long this

LONG loved, long wooed, and lately won,
 My life's best hope, and now mine own!
 Doth not this rude and Alpine glen
 Recall our favourite haunts again?
 A wild resemblance we can trace,
 Though reft of every softer grace—
 As the rough warrior's brow may bear
 A likeness to a sister fair.
 Full well advised our Highland host
 That this wild pass on foot be crossed,

While round Ben-Cruach's mighty base
Wheel the slow steeds and lingering chaise,
The keen old carle, with Scottish pride,
He praised his glen and mountains wide ;
An eye he bears for Nature's face,
Ay, and for woman's lovely grace.
Even in such mean degree we find
The subtle Scot's observing mind ;
For, nor the chariot nor the train
Could gape of vulgar wonder gain,
But when old Allan would expound
Of Beal-na-paish * the Celtic sound,
His bonnet doffed, and bow, applied
His legend to my bonny bride ;
While Lucy blushed beneath his eye,
Courteous and cautious, shrewd and sly.

II.

Enough of him.—Now, ere we lose,
Plunged in the vale, the distant views,
Turn thee, my love ! look back once more
To the blue lake's retiring shore.
On its smooth breast the shadows seem
Like objects in a morning dream,
What time the slumberer is aware
He sleeps, and all the vision's air.
Even so, on yonder liquid lawn,
In hues of bright reflection drawn,
Distinct the shaggy mountains lie,
Distinct the rocks, distinct the sky ;
The summer-clouds so plain we note,
That we might count each dappled spot :
We gaze and we admire, yet know
The scene is all delusive show.
Such dreams of bliss would Arthur draw,
When first his Lucy's form he saw ;
Yet sighed and sickened as he drew,
Despairing they could e'er prove true !

* Beal-na-paish, the "Vale of the Bridal."

III.

But, Lucy, turn thee now, to view,
Up the fair glen, our destined way :
The fairy path that we pursue,
Distinguished but by greener hue,
Winds round the purple brae ;
While Alpine flowers of varied dye
For carpet serve, or tapestry.
See how the little runnels leap,
In threads of silver, down the steep,
To swell the brooklet's moan :
Seems that the Highland Naiad grieves,
Fantastic while her crown she weaves,
Of rowan, birch, and alder leaves,
So lovely, and so lone.
There's no illusion there : these flowers,
That wailing brook, these lovely bowers,
Are, Lucy, all our own ;
And, since thine Arthur called thee wife,
Such seems the prospect of his life,
A lovely path, on-winding still,
By gurgling brook and sloping hill.
'Tis true that mortals cannot tell
What waits them in the distant dell ;
But be it hap, or be it harm,
We tread the pathway arm in arm.

IV.

And now, my Lucy, wot'st thou why
I could thy bidding twice deny,
When twice you prayed I would again
Resume the legendary strain
Of the bold knight of Triermain ?
At length yon peevish vow you swore,
That you would sue to me no more,
Until the minstrel fit drew near,
And made me prize a listening ear.
But, loveliest, when thou first didst pray
Continuance of the knightly lay,

Was it not on the happy day
That made thy hand mine own?
When, dizzied with mine ecstasy,
Nought past, or present, or to be,
Could I or think on, hear, or see,
Save, Lucy, thee alone!
A giddy draught my rapture was,
As ever chemist's magic gas.

V.

Again the summons I denied
In yon fair capital of Clyde:
My Harp—or let me rather choose
The good old classic form—my Muse
(For Harp's an over-scutchèd phrase,
Worn out by bards of modern days),
My Muse, then—seldom will she wake,
Save by dim wood and silent lake;
She is the wild and rustic Maid,
Whose foot unsandalled loves to tread
Where the soft greensward is inlaid
With varied moss and thyme;
And, lest the simple lily-braid,
That coronets her temples, fade,
She hides her still in greenwood shade,
To meditate her rhyme.

VI.

And now she comes! the murmur dear
Of the wild brook hath caught her ear,
The glade hath won her eye;
She longs to join with each blithe rill
That dances down the Highland hill
Her blither melody.
And now, my Lucy's way to cheer,
She bids Ben-Cruach's echoes hear
How closed the tale, my love whilere
Loved for its chivalry.
List how she tells, in notes of flame,
"Child Roland to the dark tower came."

CANTO THIRD.

I.

BEWCASTLE now must keep the Hold,
Speir-Adam's steeds must bide in stall,
Of Hartley-burn the bowmen bold
Must only shoot from battled wall;
And Liddesdale may buckle spur,
And Teviot now may belt the brand,
Tarras and Ewes keep nightly stir,
And Eskdale foray Cumberland.
Of wasted fields and plundered flocks
The Borderers bootless may complain;
They lack the sword of brave De Vaux,
There comes no aid from Triermain.
That lord, on high adventure bound,
Hath wandered forth alone,
And day and night keeps watchful round
In the valley of St. John.

II.

When first began his vigil bold,
The moon twelve summer nights was old,
And shone both fair and full;
High in the vault of cloudless blue,
O'er streamlet, dale, and rock, she threw
Her light composed and cool.
Stretched on the brown hill's heathy breast,
Sir Roland eyed the vale;
Chief where, distinguished from the rest,
Those clustering rocks upreared their crest,
The dwelling of the fair distressed,
As told grey Lyulph's tale.
Thus as he lay the lamp of night
Was quivering on his armour bright,
In beams that rose and fell,
And danced upon his buckler's boss,
That lay beside him on the moss,
As on a crystal well.

III.

Ever he watched, and oft he deemed,
While on the mound the moonlight streamed,
 It altered to his eyes ;
Fain would he hope the rocks 'gan change
To buttressed walls their shapeless range,
Fain think, by transmutation strange,
 He saw grey turrets rise.
But scarce his heart with hope throbbed high,
Before the wild illusions fly,
 Which fancy had conceived,
Abetted by an anxious eye
 That longed to be deceived.
It was a fond deception all,
Such as, in solitary hall,
 Beguiles the musing eye,
When, gazing on the sinking fire,
Bulwark, and battlement, and spire
 In the red gulf we spy.
For, seen by moon of middle night,
Or by the blaze of noontide bright,
Or by the dawn of morning light,
 Or evening's western flame,
In every tide, at every hour,
In mist, in sunshine, and in shower,
 The rocks remained the same.

IV.

Oft has he traced the charmed mound,
Oft climbed its crest, or paced it round,
 Yet nothing might explore,
Save that the crags so rudely piled,
At distance seen, resemblance wild
 To a rough fortress bore;
Yet still his watch the Warrior keeps,
Feeds hard and spare, and seldom sleeps,
 And drinks but of the well.
Ever by day he walks the hill,
And when the evening gale is chill,

He seeks a rocky cell,
 Like hermit poor to bid his bead,
 And tell his Ave and his Creed,
 Invoking every saint at need,
 For aid to burst his spell.

V.

And now the moon her orb has hid,
 And dwindled to a silver thread,
 Dim seen in middle heaven ;
 While o'er its curve careering fast,
 Before the fury of the blast

The midnight clouds are driven.
 The brooklet raved, for on the hills,
 The upland showers had swoln the rills,

And down the torrents came ;
 Muttered the distant thunder dread,
 And frequent o'er the vale was spread
 A sheet of lightning flame.

De Vaux, within his mountain cave
 (No human step the storm durst brave),
 To moody meditation gave

Each faculty of soul,
 Till, lulled by distant torrent sound,
 And the sad winds that whistled round,
 Upon his thoughts, in musing drowned,
 A broken slumber stole.

VI.

'Twas then was heard a heavy sound
 (Sound, strange and fearful there to hear,
 'Mongst desert hills, where, leagues around,
 Dwelt but the gorcock and the deer),

As, starting from his couch of fern,
 Again he heard in clangour stern,

That deep and solemn swell,—
 Twelve times, in measured tone, it spoke,
 Like some proud minster's pealing clock,
 Or city's 'larum-bell.

What thought was Roland's first when fell,

In that deep wilderness, the knell
Upon his startled ear?
To slander warrior were I loath,
Yet must I hold my minstrel troth,—
It was a thought of fear.

VII.

But lively was the mingled thrill
That chased that momentary chill;
For Love's keen wish was there,
And eager Hope, and Valour high,
And the proud glow of Chivalry,
That burned to do and dare.
Forth from the cave the Warrior rushed,
Long ere the mountain-voice was hushed,
That answered to the knell;
For long and far the unwonted sound,
Eddying in echoes round and round,
Was tossed from fell to fell;
And Glaramara answer flung,
And Grisdale-pike responsive rung,
And Legbert heights their echoes swung
As far as Derwent's dell.

VIII.

Forth upon trackless darkness gazed
The Knight, bedeaftened and amazed,
Till all was hushed and still,
Save the swoln torrent's sullen roar,
And the night-blast that wildly bore
Its course along the hill.
Then on the northern sky there came
A light, as of reflected flame,
And over Legbert-head,
As if by magic art controlled,
A mighty meteor slowly rolled
Its orb of fiery red:
Thou wouldst have thought some demon dire
Came mounted on that car of fire,
To do his errand dread.

Far on the sloping valley's course,
 On thicket, rock, and torrent hoarse,
 Shingle and scrae,* and fell and force,†
 A dusky light arose.

Displayed, yet altered, was the scene :
 Dark rock, and brook of silver sheen,
 Even the gay thicket's summer green,
 In bloody tincture glows.

IX.

De Vaux had marked the sunbeams set,
 At eve, upon the coronet

Of that enchanted mound,
 And seen but crags at random flung,
 That, o'er the brawling torrent hung,
 In desolation frowned.

What sees he by that meteor's lower ?—
 A bannered castle, keep, and tower,
 Return the lurid gleam,

With battled walls and buttress fast,
 And barbican ‡ and ballium § vast,
 And airy flanking towers, that cast
 Their shadows on the stream.

'Tis no deceit !—distinctly clear
 Crenell || and parapet appear,
 While o'er the pile that meteor drear
 Makes momentary pause.

Then forth its solemn path it drew ;
 And fainter yet and fainter grew
 Those gloomy towers upon the view,
 As its wild light withdraws.

X.

Forth from the cave did Roland rush,
 O'er crag and stream, through brier and bush ;
 Yet far he had not sped,
 Ere sunk was that portentous light

* Bank of loose stones. † Waterfall.

|| Aperture for shooting arrows.

Behind the hills, and utter night
Was on the valley spread.
He paused perforce, and blew his horn,
And, on the mountain-echoes borne,
Was heard an answering sound,
A wild and lonely trumpet-note,—
In middle air it seemed to float
High o'er the battled mound ;
And sounds were heard, as when a guard,
Of some proud castle, holding ward,
Pace forth their nightly round.
The valiant Knight of Triermain
Rung forth his challenge-blast again,
But answer came there none ;
And 'mid the mingled wind and rain,
Darkling he sought the vale in vain,
Until the dawning shone ;
And when it dawned, that wondrous sight,
Distinctly seen by meteor light,
It all had passed away !
And that enchanted mount once more
A pile of granite fragments bore,
As at the close of day.

XI.

Steeled for the deed, De Vaux's heart,
Scorned from his vent'rous quest to part,
He walks the vale once more ;
But only sees, by night or day,
That shattered pile of rocks so grey,
Hears but the torrent's roar,
Till when, through hills of azure borne,
The moon renewed her silver horn,
Just at the time her waning ray
Had faded in the dawning day,
A summer mist arose.
Adown the vale the vapours float,
And cloudy undulations moat
That tufted mound of mystic note,
As round its base they close ;

And higher now the fleecy tide
 Ascends its stern and shaggy side,
 Until the airy billows hide

The rock's majestic isle:
 It seemed a veil of filmy lawn,
 By some fantastic fairy drawn
 Around enchanted pile.

XII.

The breeze came softly down the brook,
 And, sighing as it blew,
 The vale of silver mist it shook,
 And to De Vaux's eager look
 Renewed that wondrous view.

For, though the loitering vapour braved
 The gentle breeze, yet oft it waved
 Its mantle's dewy fold ;

And still, when shook that filmy screen,
 Were towers and bastions dimly seen,
 And Gothic battlements between
 Their gloomy length unrolled.

Speed, speed, De Vaux, ere on thine eye
 Once more the fleeting vision die !—

The gallant knight 'gan speed
 As prompt and light as, when the hound
 Is opening, and the horn is wound,
 Careers the hunter's steed.

Down the steep dell his course amain
 Hath rivalled archer's shaft ;

But ere the mound he could attain,
 The rocks their shapeless form regain,
 And, mocking loud his labour vain,

The mountain spirits laughed—
 Far up the echoing dell was borne
 Their wild unearthly shout of scorn.

XIII.

Wroth waxed the Warrior—"Am I then
 Fooled by the enemies of men,
 Like a poor hind, whose homeward way
 Is haunted by malicious fay ?

Is Triermain become your taunt,
De Vaux your scorn? False fiends, avaunt!"
A weighty curtal-axe he bare;
The baleful blade so bright and square,
And the tough shaft of heben wood,
Were oft in Scottish gore imbrued.
Backward his stately form he drew,
And at the rocks the weapon threw,
Just where one crag's projected crest
Hung proudly balanced o'er the rest.
Hurled with main force, the weapon's shock
Rent a huge fragment of the rock.
If by mere strength, 'twere hard to tell,
Or if the blow dissolved some spell,
But down the headlong ruin came,
With cloud of dust and flash of flame.
Down bank, o'er bush, its course was borne,
Crushed lay the copse, the earth was torn,
Till stayed at length, the ruin dread
Cumbered the torrent's rocky bed,
And bade the waters' high-swoln tide
Seek other passage for its pride.

XIV.

When ceased that thunder, Triermain
Surveyed the mound's rude front again;
And lo! the ruin had laid bare,
Hewn in the stone, a winding stair,
Whose mossed and fractured steps might lend
The means the summit to ascend;
And by whose aid the brave De Vaux
Began to scale these magic rocks,
And soon a platform won,
Where, the wild witchery to close,
Within three lances' length arose
The Castle of St. John!
No misty phantom of the air,
No meteor-blazoned show was there;
In morning splendour, full and fair,
The massive fortress shone.

XV.

Embattled high and proudly towered,
Shaded by pond'rous flankers, lowered
The portal's gloomy way.
Though for six hundred years and more,
Its strength had brooked the tempest's roar,
The scutcheoned emblems which it bore
Had suffered no decay ;
But from the eastern battlement
A turret had made sheer descent,
And, down in recent ruin rent,
In the mid torrent lay.
Else, o'er the Castle's brow sublime,
Insults of violence or of time
Unfelt had passed away.
In shapeless characters of yore,
The gate this stern inscription bore :—

XVI.

Inscription.

“Patience waits the destined day,
Strength can clear the cumbered way.
Warrior, who hast waited long,
Firm of soul, of sinew strong,
It is given thee to gaze
On the pile of ancient days.
Never mortal builder's hand
This enduring fabric planned ;
Sign and sigil, word of power,
From the earth raised keep and tower.
View it o'er, and pace it round,
Rampart, turret, battled mound.
Dare no more ! To cross the gate
Were to tamper with thy fate ;
Strength and fortitude were vain,
View it o'er—and turn again.”

XVII.

“That would I,” said the Warrior bold,
“If that my frame were bent and old,

And my thin blood dropped slow and cold,
As icicle in thaw ;
But while my heart can feel it dance,
Blithe as the sparkling wine of France,
And this good arm wields sword or lance,
I mock these words of awe ! ”
He said ; the wicket felt the sway
Of his strong hand, and straight gave way,
And, with rude crash and jarring bray,
The rusty bolts withdraw :
But o’er the threshold as he strode,
And forward took the vaulted road,
An unseen arm, with force amain,
The ponderous gate flung close again,
And rusted bolt and bar
Spontaneous took their place once more,
While the deep arch with sullen roar
Returned their surly jar.
“ Now closed is the gin and the prey within,
By the Rood of Lanercost !
But he that would win the war-wolf’s skin,
May rue him of his boast.”
Thus muttering, on the Warrior went,
By dubious light down deep descent.

XVIII.

Unbarred, unlocked, unwatched, a port
Led to the Castle’s outer court :
There the main fortress, broad and tall,
Spread its long range of bower and hall,
And towers of varied size,
Wrought with each ornament extreme,
That Gothic art, in wildest dream
Of fancy, could devise ;
But full between the Warrior’s way
And the main portal arch, there lay
An inner moat ;
Nor bridge nor boat
Affords De Vaux the means to cross
The clear, profound, and silent fosse.

His arms aside in haste he flings,
 Cuirass of steel and hauberk rings,
 And down falls helm, and down the shield
 Rough with the dints of many a field.
 Fair was his manly form, and fair
 His keen dark eye and close curled hair,
 When, all unarmed, save that the brand
 Of well-proved metal graced his hand,
 With nought to fence his dauntless breast
 But the close gipon's * under-vest,
 Whose sullied buff the sable stains
 Of hauberk and of mail retains,—
 Roland De Vaux upon the brim
 Of the broad moat stood prompt to swim.

XIX.

Accoutred thus he dared the tide,
 And soon he reached the farther side,
 And entered soon the Hold,
 And paced a hall whose walls so wide
 Were blazoned all with feats of pride,
 By warriors done of old.
 In middle lists they countered here,
 While trumpets seemed to blow ;
 And there, in den or desert drear,
 They quelled gigantic foe,
 Braved the fierce griffon in his ire,
 Or faced the dragon's breath of fire.
 Strange in their arms, and strange in face,
 Heroes they seemed of ancient race,
 Whose deeds of arms, and race, and name,
 Forgotten long by later fame,
 Were here depicted, to appal
 Those of an age degenerate,
 Whose bold intrusion braved their fate,
 In this enchanted hall.
 For some short space the venturous knight
 With these high marvels fed his sight,

* A sort of doublet worn beneath the armour.

Then sought the chamber's upper end,
Where three broad easy steps ascend
 To an arched portal door,
In whose broad folding leaves of state
Was framed a wicket window-grate,
 And, ere he ventured more,
The gallant Knight took earnest view
The grated wicket-window through.

XX.

Oh for his arms ! Of martial weed
Had never mortal knight such need !
He spied a stately gallery : all
Of snow-white marble was the wall,
 The vaulting, and the floor ;
And, contrast strange ! on either hand
There stood arrayed in sable band
 Four Maids whom Afric bore,
And each a Libyan tiger led,
Held by as bright and frail a thread
 As Lucy's golden hair,
For the leash that bound these monsters dread
 Was but of gossamer.
Each Maiden's short barbaric vest
Left all unclosed the knee and breast,
 And limbs of shapely jet ;
White was their vest and turban's fold,
On arms and ankles rings of gold
 In savage pomp were set ;
A quiver on their shoulders lay,
And in their hand an assagay.
Such and so silent stood they there,
 That Roland well-nigh hoped
He saw a band of statues rare,
Stationed the gazer's soul to scare :
 But when the wicket oped,
Each grisly beast 'gan upward draw,
Rolled his grim eye and spread his claw,
Scented the air and licked his jaw ;

While these weird Maids, in Moorish tongue,
A wild and dismal warning sung :—

XXI.

- “ Rash Adventurer, bear thee back !
Dread the spell of Dahomay !
Fear the race of Zaharak,*
Daughters of the burning day !
- “ When the whirlwind’s gusts are wheeling,
Ours it is the dance to braid ;
Zarah’s sands in pillars reeling
Join the measure that we tread,
When the Moon has donned her cloak,
And the stars are red to see,
Shrill when pipes the sad Siroc,
Music meet for such as we.
- “ Where the shattered columns lie,
Showing Carthage once had been,
If the wandering Santon’s eye
Our mysterious rites hath seen,
Oft he cons the prayer of death,
To the nations preaches doom,
‘ Azrael’s brand hath left the sheath !
Moslems, think upon the tomb !’
- “ Ours the scorpion, ours the snake,
Ours the hydra of the fen,
Ours the tiger of the brake,
All that plague the sons of men.
Ours the tempest’s midnight wrack,
Pestilence that wastes by day—
Dread the race of Zaharak !
Fear the spell of Dahomay !”

XXII.

Uncouth and strange the accents shrill
Rung those vaulted roofs among ;

* Or Zaharah, the Arab name of the Great Desert.

Long it was ere, faint and still,
Died the far resounding song.
While yet the distant echoes roll,
The Warrior communed with his soul :
“ When first I took this venturous quest,
I swore upon the rood,
Neither to stop, nor turn, nor rest,
For evil or for good.
My forward path too well I ween,
Lies yonder fearful ranks between !
For man unarmed, 'tis bootless hope
With tigers and with fiends to cope ;
Yet, if I turn, what waits me there,
Save famine dire and fell despair ?—
Other conclusion let me try,
Since, choose howe'er I list, I die.
Forward lies faith and knightly fame,
Behind are perjury and shame.
In life or death I hold my word ! ”
With that he drew his trusty sword,
Caught down a banner from the wall,
And entered thus the fearful hall.

: XXIII.

On high each wayward Maiden threw
Her swarthy arm, with wild halloo !
On either side a tiger sprung :
Against the leftward foe he flung
The ready banner, to engage
With tangling folds the brutal rage ;
The right-hand monster in mid air
He struck so fiercely and so fair,
Through gullet and through spinal bone
The trenchant blade had sheerly gone.
His grisly brethren ramped and yelled,
But the slight leash their rage withheld,
Whilst, 'twixt their ranks, the dangerous road
Firmly, though swift, the champion strode.
Safe to the gallery's bound he drew,
Safe passed an open portal through ;

And when against pursuit he flung
 The gate, judge if the echoes rung!
 Onward his daring course he bore,
 While, mixed with dying growl and roar,
 Wild jubilee and loud hurra
 Pursued him on his venturous way.

XXIV.

"Hurra, hurra! Our watch is done!
 We hail once more the tropic sun.
 Pallid beams of northern day,
 Farewell, farewell! Hurra, hurra!

"Five hundred years o'er this cold glen
 Hath the pale sun come round agen;
 Foot of man, till now, hath ne'er
 Dared to cross the Hall of Fear.

"Warrior! thou, whose dauntless heart
 Gives us from our ward to part,
 Be as strong in future trial,
 Where resistance is denial.

"Now for Afric's glowing sky,
 Zwenga wide and Atlas high,
 Zaharak and Dahomay!—
 Mount the winds! Hurra, hurra!"

XXV.

The wizard song at distance died,
 As if in ether borne astray,
 While through waste halls and chambers wide
 The Knight pursued his steady way,
 Till to a lofty dome he came,
 That flashed with such a brilliant flame,
 As if the wealth of all the world
 Were there in rich confusion hurled.
 For here the gold, in sandy heaps,
 With duller earth, incorporate, sleeps;
 Was there in ingots piled, and there
 Coined badge of empery it bare;

Yonder, huge bars of silver lay,
Dimmed by the diamond's neighbouring ray,
Like the pale moon in morning day;
And in the midst four Maidens stand,
The daughters of some distant land.
Their hue was of the dark-red dye
That fringes oft a thunder sky;
Their hands palmetto baskets bare,
And cotton fillets bound their hair;
Slim was their form, their mien was shy,
To earth they bent the humbled eye,
Folded their arms, and suppliant kneeled,
And thus their proffered gifts revealed:—

XXVI.

Chorus.

“See the treasures Merlin piled,
Portion meet for Arthur's child.
Bathe in Wealth's unbounded stream,
Wealth that Avarice ne'er could dream!”

First Maiden.

“See these clots of virgin gold!
Severed from the sparry mould,
Nature's mystic alchemy
In the mine thus bade them lie;
And their orient smile can win
Kings to stoop, and saints to sin.”

Second Maiden.

“See these pearls, that long have slept!
These were tears by Naiads wept
For the loss of Marinel.
Tritons in the silver shell
Treasured them, till hard and white
As the teeth of Amphitrite.”

Third Maiden.

“Does a livelier hue delight?—
Here are rubies blazing bright,

Here the emerald's fairy green,
And the topaz glows between ;
Here their varied hues unite,
In the changeful chrysolite."

Fourth Maiden.

"Leave these gems of poorer shine,
Leave them all, and look on mine !
While their glories I expand,
Shade thine eyebrows with thy hand :
Mid-day sun and diamond's blaze
Blind the rash beholder's gaze."

Chorus.

"Warrior, seize the splendid store !
Would 'twere all our mountains bore ;
We should ne'er in future story,
Read, Peru, thy perished glory !"

XXVII.

Calmly and unconcerned, the Knight
Waved aside the treasures bright :—
"Gentle Maidens, rise, I pray !
Bar not thus my destined way.
Let these boasted brilliant toys
Braid the hair of girls and boys !
Bid your streams of gold expand
O'er proud London's thirsty land.
De Vaux of wealth saw never need,
Save to purvey him arms and steed ;
And all the ore he deigned to hoard
Inlays his helm and hilts his sword."
Thus gently parting from their hold,
He left, unmoved, the dome of gold.

XXVIII.

And now the morning sun was high,
De Vaux was weary, faint, and dry ;
When, lo ! a plashing sound he hears,
A gladsome signal that he nears

Some frolic water-run ;
And soon he reached a courtyard square,
Where, dancing in the sultry air,
Tossed high aloft, a fountain fair
Was sparkling in the sun.
On right and left, a fair arcade
In long perspective view displayed
Alleys and bowers, for sun or shade ;
But, full in front, a door,
Low-browed and dark, seemed as it led
To the lone dwelling of the dead,
Whose memory was no more.

XXIX.

Here stopped De Vaux an instant's space,
To bathe his parchèd lips and face,
And marked with well-pleased eye,
Refracted on the fountain stream,
In rainbow hues the dazzling beam
Of that gay summer sky.
His senses felt a mild control,
Like that which lulls the weary soul,
From contemplation high
Relaxing, when the ear receives
The music that the greenwood leaves
Make to the breezes' sigh.

XXX.

And oft in such a dreamy mood,
The half-shut eye can frame
Fair apparitions in the wood,
As if the nymphs of field and flood
In gay procession came.
Are these of such fantastic mould,
Seen distant down the fair arcade,
These Maids enlinked in sister-fold,
Who, late at bashful distance stayed,
Now tripping from the greenwood shade,
Nearer the musing champion draw,
And, in a pause of seeming awe,

Again stand doubtful now?—
 Ah, that sly pause of witching powers!
 That seems to say, "To please be ours,
 Be yours to tell us how."
 Their hue was of the golden glow
 That suns of Candahar bestow,
 O'er which in slight suffusion flows
 A frequent tinge of paly rose.
 Their limbs were fashioned fair and free,
 In nature's justest symmetry;
 And, wreathed with flowers, with odours graced,
 Their raven ringlets reached the waist.
 In Eastern pomp, its gilding pale
 The hennah lent each shapely nail;
 And the dark sumah gave the eye
 More liquid and more lustrous dye.
 The spotless veil of misty lawn,
 In studied disarrangement, drawn
 The form and bosom o'er,
 To win the eye, or tempt the touch,
 For modesty showed all too much—
 Too much—yet promised more.

XXXI.

"Gentle Knight, awhile delay,"
 Thus they sung, "thy toilsome way,
 While we pay the duty due
 To our Master and to you.
 Over Avarice, over Fear,
 Love triumphant led thee here;
 Warrior, list to us, for we
 Are slaves to Love, are friends to thee.
 Though no treasured gems have we
 To proffer on the bended knee,
 Though we boast nor arm nor heart
 For the assagay or dart,
 Swains allow each simple girl
 Ruby lip and teeth of pearl;
 Or, if dangers more you prize,
 Flatterers find them in our eyes.

"Stay, then, gentle Warrior, stay,
 Rest till evening steal on day;
 Stay, oh, stay!—in yonder bowers
 We will braid thy locks with flowers,
 Spread the feast and fill the wine,
 Charm thy ear with sounds divine,
 Weave our dances till delight
 Yield to languor, day to night.

"Then shall she you most approve
 Sing the lays that best you love,
 Soft thy mossy couch shall spread,
 Watch thy pillow, prop thy head,
 Till the weary night be o'er—
 Gentle Warrior, wouldst thou more?
 Wouldst thou more, fair Warrior—she
 Is slave to Love and slave to thee."

XXXII.

Oh, do not hold it for a crime
 In the bold hero of my rhyme,
 For Stoic look,
 And meet rebuke,
 He lacked the heart or time!
 As round the band of sirens trip,
 He kissed one damsel's laughing lip,
 And pressed another's proffered hand;
 Spoke to them all in accents bland,—
 But broke their magic circle through.
 "Kind Maids," he said, "adieu, adieu!
 My fate, my fortune, forward lies."
 He said, and vanished from their eyes.
 But as he dared that dangerous way,
 Still heard behind their lovely lay:—
 "Fair Flower of Courtesy, depart!
 Go, where the feelings of the heart
 With the warm pulse in concord move—
 Go, where Virtue sanctions Love!"

XXXIII.

Downward De Vaux through darksome ways
 And ruined vaults has gone,
 Till issue from their wildered maze,
 Or safe retreat, seemed none ;
 And e'en the dismal path he strays
 Grew worse as he went on.

For cheerful sun, for living air,
 Foul vapours rise and mine-fires glare,
 Whose fearful light the dangers showed
 That dogged him on that dreadful road.
 Deep pits, and lakes of waters dun,
 They showed, but showed not how to shun.
 These scenes of desolate despair,
 These smothering clouds of poisoned air,
 How gladly had De Vaux exchanged,
 Though 'twere to face yon tigers ranged !

Nay, soothful bards have said
 So perilous his state seemed now,
 He wished him under arbour bough
 With Asia's willing maid ;
 When, joyful sound ! at distance near
 A trumpet flourished loud and clear,
 And as it ceased, a lofty lay
 Seemed thus to chide his lagging way :—

XXXIV.

“ Son of Honour, theme of story,
 Think on the reward before ye !
 Danger, darkness, toil despise ;
 'Tis Ambition bids thee rise.

“ He that would her heights ascend,
 Many a weary step must wend ;
 Hand and foot and knee he tries :
 Thus Ambition's minions rise.

“ Lag not now, though rough the way,
 Fortune's mood brooks no delay :

Grasp the boon that's spread before ye,
Monarch's power, and Conqueror's glory !”

It ceased. Advancing on the sound,
A steep ascent the Wanderer found,
And then a turret stair.
Nor climbed he far its steepy round
Till fresher blew the air;
And next a welcome glimpse was given,
That cheered him with the light of heaven.
At length his toil had won
A lofty hall with trophies dressed,
Where, as to greet imperial guest,
Four Maidens stood, whose crimson vest
Was bound with golden zone.

XXXV.

Of Europe seemed the damsels all :
The first a nymph of lively Gaul,
Whose easy step and laughing eye
Her borrowed air of awe belie ;
The next a maid of Spain,
Dark-eyed, dark-haired, sedate, yet bold ;
White ivory skin and tress of gold,
Her shy and bashful comrade told
For daughter of Almaine.
These Maidens bore a royal robe,
With crown, with sceptre, and with globe,
Emblems of empery ;
The fourth a space behind them stood,
And leant upon a harp, in mood
Of minstrel ecstasy.
Of merry England she, in dress
Like ancient British Druidess :
Her hair an azure fillet bound ;
Her graceful vesture swept the ground ;
And, in her hand displayed,
A crown did that fourth Maiden hold,
But unadorned with gems and gold,
Of glossy laurel made.

XXXVI.

At once to brave De Vaux knelt down
 These foremost Maidens three,
 And proffered sceptre, robe, and crown,
 Liegdom and seignorie,
 O'er many a region wide and fair,
 Destined, they said, for Arthur's heir.

But homage would he none :—

"Rather," he said, "De Vaux would ride,
 A Warden of the Border-side,
 In plate and mail, than, robed in pride,
 A monarch's empire own ;
 Rather, far rather, would he be
 A freeborn knight of England free,
 Than sit on Despot's throne."

So passed he on, when that fourth Maid,
 As starting from a trance,
 Upon the harp her finger laid ;
 Her magic touch the chords obeyed,
 Their soul awaked at once !

Song of the Fourth Maiden.

"Quake to your foundations deep,
 Stately Towers and Bannered Keep,
 Bid your vaulted echoes moan,
 As the dreaded step they own.

"Fiends, that wait on Merlin's spell,
 Hear the footfall ! mark it well !
 Spread your dusky wings abroad,
 Boune ye for your homeward road !

"It is HIS, the first who e'er
 Dared the dismal Hall of Fear ;
 HIS, who hath the snares defied
 Spread by Pleasure, Wealth, and Pride.

"Quake to your foundations deep,
 Bastion huge and Turret steep !

Tremble, Keep! and totter, Tower!
This is Gyneth's waking hour."

XXXVII.

Thus while she sung the venturous Knight
Has reached a bower, where milder light
Through crimson curtains fell;
Such softened shade the hill receives,
Her purple veil when twilight leaves
Upon its western swell.

That bower, the gazer to bewitch,
Hath wondrous store of rare and rich
As e'er was seen with eye;

For there by magic skill, I wis,
Form of each thing that living is
Was limned in proper dye.

All seemed to sleep—the timid hare
On form, the stag upon his lair,
The eagle in her eyrie fair
Between the earth and sky.

But what of pictured rich and rare
Could win De Vaux's eye-glance, where;
Deep slumbering in the fatal chair;

He saw King Arthur's child!
Doubt, and anger, and dismay
From her brow had passed away,
Forgot was that fell tourney day;

For, as she slept, she smiled:
It seemed that the repentant Seer
Her sleep of many a hundred year
With gentle dreams beguiled.

XXXVIII.

That form of maiden loveliness,
'Twixt childhood and 'twixt youth,
That ivory chair, that silvan dress,
The arms and ankles bare, express
Of Lyulph's tale the truth.
Still upon her garment's hem
Vanoc's blood made purple gem;

And the warder of command
 Cumbered still her sleeping hand ;
 Still her dark locks dishevelled flow
 From net of pearl o'er breast of snow ;
 And so fair the slumberer seems,
 That De Vaux impeached his dreams,
 Vapid all and void of might,
 Hiding half her charms from sight.
 Motionless awhile he stands,
 Folds his arms and clasps his hands,
 Trembling in his fitful joy,
 Doubtful how he should destroy
 Long-enduring spell ;
 Doubtful, too, when slowly rise
 Dark-fringed lids of Gyneth's eyes,
 What these eyes shall tell.—
 “ St. George ! St. Mary ! can it be,
 That they will kindly look on me ! ”

XXXIX.

Gently, lo ! the Warrior kneels,
 Soft that lovely hand he steals,
 Soft to kiss, and soft to clasp—
 But the warder leaves her grasp ;
 Lightning flashes, rolls the thunder !
 Gyneth startles from her sleep,
 Totters Tower, and trembles Keep,
 Burst the Castle walls asunder !
 Fierce and frequent were the shocks,—
 Melt the magic halls away ;—
 But beneath their mystic rocks,
 In the arms of bold De Vaux,
 Safe the princess lay ;
 Safe and free from magic power,
 Blushing like the rose's flower
 Opening to the day ;
 And round the Champion's brows were bound
 The crown that Druidess had wound,
 Of the green laurel-bay.

And this was what remained of all
The wealth of each enchanted hall—
The Garland and the Dame.
But where should Warrior seek the meed
Due to high worth for daring deed,
Except from LOVE and FAME!

CONCLUSION.

I.

My Lucy, when the Maid is won,
The Minstrel's task, thou know'st, is done;
And to require of bard
That to his dregs the tale should run,
Were ordinance too hard.
Our lovers, briefly be it said,
Wedded as lovers wont to wed,
When tale or play is o'er,
Lived long and blest, loved fond and true,
And saw a numerous race renew
The honours that they bore.
Know, too, that when a pilgrim strays,
In morning mist or evening maze,
Along the mountain lone,
That fairy fortress often mocks
His gaze upon the castled rocks
Of the Valley of St. John;
But never man since brave De Vaux
The charmed portal won.
'Tis now a vain illusive show,
That melts whene'er the sunbeams glow,
Or the fresh breeze hath blown.

II.

But see, my love, where far below
Our lingering wheels are moving slow,
The whiles, up-gazing still,
Our menials eye our steepy way,

Marvelling, perchance, what whim can stay
Our steps, when eve is sinking grey,
On this gigantic hill.
So think the vulgar—life and time
Ring all their joys in one dull chime
Of luxury and ease ;
And, oh ! beside these simple knaves,
How many better born are slaves
To such coarse joys as these,—
Dead to the nobler sense that glows
When Nature's grander scenes unclose !
But, Lucy, we will love them yet—
The mountain's misty coronet,
The greenwood, and the wold ;
And love the more, that of their maze
Adventure high of other days
By ancient bards is told,
Bringing, perchance, like my poor tale,
Some moral truth in fiction's veil :
Nor love them less, that o'er the hill
The evening breeze, as now, comes chill ;—
My love shall wrap her warm,
And, fearless of the slippery way,
While safe she trips the heathy brae,
Shall hang on Arthur's arm.

A POEM

IN SIX CANTOS.

ADVERTISEMENT.

THE Scene of this Poem lies, at first, in the Castle of Artornish, on the coast of Argyleshire ; and, afterwards, in the Islands of Skye and Arran, and upon the coast of Ayrshire. Finally, it is laid near Stirling. The story opens in the spring of the year 1307, when Bruce, who had been driven out of Scotland by the English, and the Barons who adhered to that foreign interest, returned from the Island of Rachrin, on the coast of Ireland, again to assert his claims to the Scottish crown. Many of the personages and incidents introduced are of historical celebrity. The authorities used are chiefly those of the venerable Lord Hailes, as well entitled to be called the restorer of Scottish history as Bruce the restorer of Scottish monarchy ; and of Archdeacon Barbour, a correct edition of whose Metrical History of Robert Bruce will soon, I trust, appear under the care of my learned friend, the Rev. Dr. Jamieson.

ABBOTSFORD, December 10, 1814.

THE LORD OF THE ISLES.

CANTO FIRST.

AUTUMN departs—but still his mantle's fold
Rests on the groves of noble Somerville,*
Beneath a shroud of russet dropped with gold
Tweed and his tributaries mingle still ;
Hoarser the wind, and deeper sounds the rill,
Yet lingering notes of silvan music swell,
The deep-toned cushat, and the redbreast shrill ;
And yet some tints of summer splendour tell
When the broad sun sinks down on Ettrick's western fell.

Autumn departs—from Gala's fields no more
Come rural sounds our kindred banks to cheer ;
Blent with the stream, and gale that wafts it o'er,
No more the distant reaper's mirth we hear.
The last blithe shout hath died upon our ear,
And harvest-home hath hushed the clanging wain ;
On the waste hill no forms of life appear,
Save where, sad laggard of the autumnal train,
Some age-struck wanderer gleans few ears of scattered grain.

Deem'st thou these saddened scenes have pleasure still,
Lovest thou through Autumn's fading realms to stray,
To see the heath-flower withered on the hill,
To listen to the wood's expiring lay,
To note the red leaf shivering on the spray,
To mark the last bright tints the mountain stain,

* The residence of Lord Somerville, situated on the Tweed, over against Melrose, and in sight of Abbotsford.

On the waste fields to trace the gleaner's way,
 And moralize on mortal joy and pain?—
 O! if such scenes thou lovest, scorn not the minstrel strain!

No! do not scorn, although its hoarser note
 Scarce with the cushat's homely song can vie,
 Though faint its beauties as the tints remote
 That gleam through mist in autumn's evening sky,
 And few as leaves that tremble, sear and dry,
 When wild November hath his bugle wound;
 Nor mock my toil—a lonely gleaner I,
 Through fields time-wasted, on sad inquest bound,
 Where happier bards of yore have richer harvest found.

So shalt thou list, and haply not unmoved,
 To a wild tale of Albyn's warrior day;
 In distant lands, by the rough West reproved,
 Still live some relics of the ancient lay.
 For, when on Coolin's hills the lights decay,
 With such the Seer of Skye the eve beguiles;
 'Tis known amid the pathless wastes of Reay,
 In Harries known, and in Iona's piles,
 Where rest from mortal coil the Might of the Isles.

I.

"WAKE, Maid of Lorn!" the Minstrels sung.
 Thy rugged halls, Artornish! rung,*
 And the dark seas, thy towers that lave,
 Heaved on the beach a softer wave,
 As 'mid the tuneful choir to keep
 The diapason of the Deep.
 Lulled were the winds on Inninmore,
 And green Loch-Aline's woodland shore,
 As if wild woods and waves had pleasure
 In listing to the lovely measure.
 And ne'er to symphony more sweet
 Gave mountain echoes answer meet,
 Since, met from mainland and from isle,
 Ross, Arran, Ilay, and Argyle,

* See Note I.

Each minstrel's tributary lay
Paid homage to the festal day.
Dull and dishonoured were the bard,
Worthless of guerdon and regard,
Deaf to the hope of minstrel fame,
Or lady's smiles, his noblest aim,
Who on that morn's resistless call
Was silent in Artornish hall.

II.

"Wake, Maid of Lorn!" 'twas thus they sung,
And yet more proud the descant rung—
"Wake, Maid of Lorn! high right is ours
To charm dull sleep from Beauty's bowers;
Earth, Ocean, Air have nought so shy
But owns the power of minstrelsy.
In Lettermore the timid deer
Will pause, the harp's wild chime to hear;
Rude Heiskar's seal through surges dark
Will long pursue the minstrel's bark;*
To list his notes, the eagle proud
Will poise him on Ben-Cailliach's cloud.
Then let not Maiden's ear disdain
The summons of the minstrel train,
But, while our harps wild music make,
Edith of Lorn, awake, awake!

III.

"O wake, while Dawn, with dewy shine,
Wakes Nature's charms to vie with thine!
She bids the mottled thrush rejoice
To mate thy melody of voice;
The dew that on the violet lies
Mocks the dark lustre of thine eyes:
But, Edith, wake, and all we see
Of sweet and fair shall yield to thee!"—
"She comes not yet," grey Ferrand cried;
"Brethren, let softer spell be tried,

* See Note 2.

Those notes prolonged, that soothing theme,
Which best may mix with Beauty's dream,
And whisper, with their silvery tone,
The hope she loves yet fears to own."
He spoke, and on the harp-strings died
The strains of flattery and of pride ;
More soft, more low, more tender fell
The lay of love he bade them tell.

IV.

"Wake, Maid of Lorn ! the moments fly,
Which yet that maiden-name allow ;
Wake, Maiden, wake ! the hour is nigh,
When Love shall claim a plighted vow.
By Fear, thy bosom's fluttering guest,
By Hope, that soon shall fears remove,
We bid thee break the bonds of rest,
And wake thee at the call of Love !

"Wake, Edith, wake ! in yonder bay
Lies many a galley gaily manned ;
We hear the merry pibrochs play,
We see the streamers' silken band.
What Chieftain's praise these pibrochs swell,
What crest is on these banners wove,
The harp, the minstrel, dare not tell—
The riddle must be read by Love."

V.

Retired her maiden train among,
Edith of Lorn received the song,
But tamed the Minstrel's pride had been
That had her cold demeanour seen ;
For not upon her cheek awoke
The glow of pride when Flattery spoke,
Nor could their tenderest numbers bring
One sigh responsive to the string.
As vainly had her maidens vied
In skill to deck the princely bride.
Her locks, in dark-brown length arrayed,
Cathleen of Ulne, 'twas thine to braid ;

Young Eva with meet reverence drew
On the light foot the silken shoe,
While on the ankle's slender round
Those strings of pearl fair Bertha wound,
That, bleached Lochryan's depth within,
Seemed dusky still on Edith's skin.
But Einion, of experience old,
Had weightiest task—the mantle's fold
In many an artful plait she tied,
To show the form it seemed to hide,
Till on the floor descending rolled
Its waves of crimson blent with gold.

VI.

Oh! lives there now so cold a maid,
Who thus in beauty's pomp arrayed,
In beauty's proudest pitch of power,
And conquest won—the bridal hour—
With every charm that wins the heart,
By Nature given, enhanced by Art,
Could yet the fair reflection view,
In the bright mirror pictured true,
And not one dimple on her cheek
A tell-tale consciousness bespeak?—
Lives still such maid?—Fair damsels, say,
For further vouches not my lay,
Save that such lived in Britain's isle,
When Lorn's bright Edith scorned to smile.

VII.

But Morag, to whose fostering care
Proud Lorn had given his daughter fair,
Morag, who saw a mother's aid
By all a daughter's love repaid
(Strict was that bond—most kind of all—Inviolate in Highland hall)—
Grey Morag sat a space apart,
In Edith's eyes to read her heart.
In vain the attendants' fond appeal
To Morag's skill, to Morag's zeal;

She marked her child receive their care,
 Cold as the image sculptured fair
 (Form of some sainted patroness),
 Which cloistered maids combine to dress ;
 She marked—and knew her nursling's heart
 In the vain pomp took little part.
 Wistful awhile she gazed, then pressed
 The maiden to her anxious breast
 In finished loveliness, and led
 To where a turret's airy head,
 Slender and steep, and battled round,
 O'erlooked, dark Mull ! thy mighty Sound,*
 Where thwarting tides, with mingled roar,
 Part thy swarth hills from Morven's shore.

VIII.

" Daughter," she said, " these seas behold,
 Round twice a hundred islands rolled,
 From Hirt, that hears their northern roar,
 To the green Ilay's fertile shore ;
 Or mainland turn, where many a tower
 Owns thy bold brother's feudal power,
 Each on its own dark cape reclined,
 And listening to its own wild wind,
 From where Mingarry, sternly placed,
 O'erawes the woodland and the waste,†
 To where Dunstaffnage hears the raging
 Of Connel with his rocks engaging.
 Think'st thou, amid this ample round,
 A single brow but thine has frowned,
 To sadden this auspicious morn,
 That bids the daughter of high Lorn
 Impledge her spousal faith to wed
 The heir of mighty Somerled ;‡
 Ronald, from many a hero sprung,
 The fair, the valiant, and the young,
 LORD OF THE ISLES,§ whose lofty name
 A thousand bards have given to fame,

The mate of monarchs, and allied
On equal terms with England's pride.
From chieftain's tower to bondsman's cot,
Who hears the tale, and triumphs not?
The damsel dons her best attire,
The shepherd lights his Beltane fire,
Joy, joy! each warder's horn hath sung,
Joy, joy! each matin bell hath rung;
The holy priest says grateful mass,
Loud shouts each hardy gallaglass,
No mountain den holds outcast boor,
Of heart so dull, of soul so poor,
But he hath flung his task aside,
And claimed this morn for holy-tide:
Yet, empress of this joyful day,
Edith is sad while all are gay."

IX.

Proud Edith's soul came to her eye,
Resentment checked the struggling sigh.
Her hurrying hand indignant dried
The burning tears of injured pride—
"Morag, forbear! or lend thy praise
To swell yon hireling harpers' lays;
Make to yon maids thy boast of power,
That they may waste a wondering hour
Telling of banners proudly borne,
Of pealing bell and bugle-horn,—
Or, theme more dear, of robes of price,
Crownlets and gawds of rare device.
But thou, experienced as thou art,
Think'st thou with these to cheat the heart,
That, bound in strong affection's chain,
Looks for return, and looks in vain?
No! sum thine Edith's wretched lot
In these brief words—He loves her not!

X.

"Debate it not—too long I strove
To call his cold observance love,

All blinded by the league that stiled
 Edith of Lorn,—while, yet a child,
 She tripped the heath by Morag's side,—
 The brave Lord Ronald's destined bride.
 Ere yet I saw him, while afar
 His broadsword blazed in Scotland's war,
 Trained to believe our fates the same,
 My bosom throbbed when Ronald's name
 Came gracing Fame's heroic tale,
 Like perfume on the summer gale.
 What pilgrim sought our halls, nor told
 Of Ronald's deeds in battle bold ;
 Who touched the harp to heroes' praise,
 But his achievements swelled the lays ?
 Even Morag—not a tale of fame
 Was hers but closed with Ronald's name.
 He came ! and all that had been told
 Of his high worth seemed poor and cold.
 Tame, lifeless, void of energy,
 Unjust to Ronald and to me !

XI.

“ Since then, what thought had Edith's heart,
 And gave not plighted love its part !—
 And what requital ? cold delay—
 Excuse that shunned the spousal day.
 It dawns, and Ronald is not here !—
 Hunts he Bentalla's nimble deer,
 Or loiters he in secret dell
 To bid some lighter love farewell,
 And swear, that though he may not scorn
 A daughter of the House of Lorn,*
 Yet, when these formal rites are o'er,
 Again they meet, to part no more ? ”—

XII.

“ Hush, daughter, hush ! thy doubts remove,
 More nobly think of Ronald's love.

* See Note 7.

Look, where beneath the castle grey
His fleet unmoor from Aros-bay !
Seest not each galley's topmast bend,
As on the yards the sails ascend ?
Hiding the dark-blue land, they rise
Like the white clouds on April skies ;
The shouting vassals man the oars,
Behind them sink Mull's mountain shores,
Onward their merry course they keep
Through whistling breeze and foaming deep.
And mark the headmost, seaward cast,
Stoop to the freshening gale her mast,
As if she veiled its bannered pride
To greet afar her prince's bride !
Thy Ronald comes, and while in speed
His galley mates the flying steed,
He chides her sloth !"—Fair Edith sighed,
Blushed, sadly smiled, and thus replied :—

XIII.

" Sweet thought, but vain !—No, Morag ! mark,
Type of his course, yon lonely bark,
That oft hath shifted helm and sail,
To win its way against the gale.
Since peep of morn, my vacant eyes
Have viewed by fits the course she tries ;
Now, though the darkening scud comes on,
And dawn's fair promises be gone,
And though the weary crew may see
Our sheltering haven on their lee,
Still closer to the rising wind
They strive her shivering sail to bind,
Still nearer to the shelves' dread verge
At every tack her course they urge,
As if they feared Artornish more
Than adverse winds and breakers' roar."

XIV.

Sooth spoke the Maid. Amid the tide
The skiff she marked lay tossing sore,

And shifted oft her stooping side,
 In weary tack from shore to shore.
 Yet on her destined course no more
 She gained of forward way,
 Than what a minstrel may compare
 With the poor meed which peasants share,
 Who toil the livelong day;
 And such the risk her pilot braves,
 That oft, before she wore,
 Her boltsprit kissed the broken waves,
 Where in white foam the ocean raves
 Upon the shelving shore;
 Yet, to their destined purpose true,
 Undaunted toiled her hardy crew,
 Nor looked where shelter lay,
 Nor for Artornish Castle drew,
 Nor steered for Aros-bay.

XV.

Thus while they strove with wind and seas,
 Borne onward by the willing breeze,
 Lord Ronald's fleet swept by,
 Streamered with silk and tricked with gold,
 Manned with the noble and the bold
 Of Island chivalry.
 Around their prows the ocean roars,
 And chafes beneath their thousand oars,
 Yet bears them on their way:
 So chafes the war-horse in his might,
 That fieldward bears some valiant knight,
 Champs till both bit and boss are white,
 But, foaming, must obey.
 On each gay deck they might behold
 Lances of steel and crests of gold,
 And hauberks with their burnished fold,
 That shimmered fair and free;
 And each proud galley, as she passed,
 To the wild cadence of the blast
 Gave wilder minstrelsy.

Full many a shrill triumphant note
Saline and Scallastle bade float
 Their misty shores around;
And Morven's echoes answered well,
And Duart heard the distant swell
 Come down the darksome Sound.

XVI.

So bore they on with mirth and pride,
And if that labouring bark they spied,
 'Twas with such idle eye
As nobles cast on lowly poor,
When, toiling in his task obscure,
 They pass him careless by.
Let them sweep on with heedless eyes!
But, had they known what mighty prize
 In that frail vessel lay,
The famished wolf that prowls the wold,
Had scathless passed the unguarded fold,
Ere, drifting by these galleys bold,
 Unchallenged were her way!
And thou, Lord Ronald, sweep thou on,
With mirth and pride and minstrel tone!
But hadst thou known who sailed so nigh,
Far other glance were in thine eye!
Far other flush were on thy brow,
That, shaded by the bonnet, now
Assumes but ill the blithesome cheer
Of bridegroom when the bride is near!

XVII.

Yes, sweep they on!—We will not leave,
For them that triumph, those who grieve.
 With that armada gay
Be laughter loud and jocund shout,
And bards to cheer the wassail rout,
 With tale, romance, and lay;
And of wild mirth each clamorous art,
Which, if it cannot cheer the heart,
May stupefy and stun its smart,
 For one loud busy day.

Yes, sweep they on!—But with that skiff
 Abides the minstrel tale,
 Where there was dread of surge and clift,
 And toil that strained each sinew stiff,
 And one sad Maiden's wail.

XVIII.

All day with fruitless strife they toiled,
 With eve the ebbing currents boiled
 More fierce from strait and lake;
 And midway through the channel met
 Conflicting tides that foam and fret,
 And high their mingled billows jet,
 As spears that, in the battle set,
 Spring upward as they break.
 Then, too, the lights of eve were past,
 And louder sung the western blast
 On rocks of Inninmore;
 Rent was the sail, and strained the mast,
 And many a leak was gaping fast,
 And the pale steersman stood aghast,
 And gave the conflict o'er.

XIX.

'Twas then that One, whose lofty look
 Nor labour dulled nor terror shook,
 Thus to the Leader spoke:—
 “Brother, how hopest thou to abide
 The fury of this wildered tide,
 Or how avoid the rock's rude side,
 Until the day has broke?
 Didst thou not mark the vessel reel,
 With quivering planks and groaning keel,
 At the last billow's shock?
 Yet how of better counsel tell,
 Though here thou seest poor Isabel
 Half dead with want and fear;
 For look on sea, or look on land,
 Or yon dark sky—on every hand
 Despair and death are near.

For her alone I grieve—on me
Danger sits light by land and sea,
I follow where thou wilt ;
Either to bide the tempest's lower,
Or wend to yon unfriendly tower,
Or rush amid their naval power,
With war-cry wake their wassail-hour,
And die with hand on hilt."

XX.

That elder Leader's calm reply
In steady voice was given :—
" In man's most dark extremity
Oft succour dawns from Heaven.
Edward, trim thou the shattered sail,
The helm be mine, and down the gale
Let our free course be driven ;
So shall we 'scape the western bay,
The hostile fleet, the unequal fray,
So safely hold our vessel's way
Beneath the Castle wall ;
For if a hope of safety rest,
'Tis on the sacred name of guest,
Who seeks for shelter, storm-distressed,
Within a chieftain's hall.
If not—it best beseems our worth,
Our name, our right, our lofty birth,
By noble hands to fall."

XXI.

The helm, to his strong arm consigned,
Gave the reefed sail to meet the wind,
And on her altered way,
Fierce bounding, forward sprung the ship,
Like greyhound starting from the slip
To seize his flying prey.
Awaked before the rushing prow,
The mimic fires of ocean glow,
Those lightnings of the wave ; *

* See Note 8.

Wild sparkles crest the broken tides,
 And, flashing round, the vessel's sides
 With elvish lustre lave,
 While, far behind, their livid light
 To the dark billows of the night
 A gloomy splendour gave.
 It seems as if old Ocean shakes
 From his dark brow the lucid flakes
 In envious pageantry,
 To match the meteor-light that streaks
 Grim Hecla's midnight sky.

XXII.

Nor lacked they steadier light to keep
 Their course upon the darkened deep ;—
 Artornish, on her frowning steep
 'Twixt cloud and ocean hung;
 Glanced with a thousand lights of glee,
 And landward far, and far to sea,
 Her festal radiance flung.
 By that blithe beacon-light they steered,
 Whose lustre mingled well
 With the pale beam that now appeared,
 As the cold moon her head upreared
 Above the eastern fell.

XXIII.

Thus guided, on their course they bore,
 Until they neared the mainland shore,
 When frequent on the hollow blast
 Wild shouts of merriment were cast,
 And wind and wave and sea-birds' cry
 With wassail sounds in concert vie,
 Like funeral shrieks with revelry,
 Or like the battle-shout
 By peasants heard from cliffs on high,
 When triumph, rage, and agony,
 Madden the fight and rout.
 Now nearer yet, through mist and storm,
 Dimly arose the Castle's form,

And deepened shadow made,
Far lengthened on the main below,
Where, dancing in reflected glow,
A hundred torches played,
Spangling the wave with lights as vain
As pleasures in this vale of pain,
That dazzle as they fade.

XXIV.

Beneath the Castle's sheltering lee,
They stayed their course in quiet sea.
Hewn in the rock, a passage there
Sought the dark fortress, by a stair *
So strait, so high, so steep,
With peasant's staff one valiant hand
Might well the dizzy pass have manned,
'Gainst hundreds armed with spear and brand,
And plunged them in the deep.
His bugle then the helmsman wound;
Loud answered every echo round,
From turret, rock, and bay,
The postern's hinges crash and groan,
And soon the warder's cresset shone
On those rude steps of slippery stone,
To light the upward way.
"Thrice welcome, holy Sire!" he said;
"Full long the spousal train have staid,
And, vexed at thy delay,
Feared lest, amidst these wildering seas,
The darksome night and freshening breeze
Had driven thy bark astray."—

[SING THE] XXV.

"Warder," the younger stranger said,
"Thine erring guess some mirth had made
In mirthful hour; but nights like these,
When the rough winds wake western seas,
Brook not of glee. We crave some aid
And needful shelter for this maid

* See Note 9.

Until the break of day;
 For, to ourselves, the deck's rude plank
 Is easy as the mossy bank:
 That's breathed upon by May;
 And for our storm-tossed skiff we seek
 Short shelter in this leeward creek,
 Prompt when the dawn the east shall streak,
 Again to bear away."—
 Answered the Warder, "In what name
 Assert ye hospitable claim?
 Whence come, or whither bound?
 Hath Erin seen your parting sails?
 Or come ye on Norweyan gales?
 And seek ye England's fertile vales,
 Or Scotland's mountain ground?"—

XXVI.

"Warriors—for other title none
 For some brief space we list to own,
 Bound by a vow—warriors are we;
 In strife by land, and storm by sea,
 We have been known to fame:
 And these brief words have import dear,
 When sounded in a noble ear,
 To harbour safe, and friendly cheer,
 That gives us rightful claim.
 Grant us the trivial boon we seek,
 And we in other realms will speak
 Fair of your courtesy;
 Deny, and be your niggard Hold
 Scorned by the noble and the bold,
 Shunned by the pilgrim on the wold,
 And wanderer on the lea!"

XXVII.

"Bold stranger, no; 'gainst claim like thine,
 No bolt revolves by hand of mine,
 Though urged in tone that more expressed
 A monarch than a suppliant guest.
 Be what ye will, Artornish Hall
 On this glad eve is free to all.

Though ye had drawn a hostile sword
'Gainst our great ally, England's Lord,
Or mail upon your shoulders borne
To battle with the Lord of Lorn,
Or, outlawed, dwelt by greenwood tree
With the fierce Knight of Ellerslie,
Or aided even the murderous strife
When Comyn fell beneath the knife
Of that fell homicide The Bruce,*
This night had been a term of truce.—
Ho, vassals ! give these guests your care,
And show the narrow postern stair."

XXVIII.

To land these two bold brethren leapt
(The weary crew their vessel kept),
And, lighted by the torches' flare
That seaward flung their smoky glare,
The younger knight that maiden bare
Half lifeless up the rock ;
On his strong shoulder leaned her head,
And down her long dark tresses shed,
As the wild vine, in tendrils spread,
Droops from the mountain oak.
Him followed close that elder Lord,
And in his hand a sheathèd sword,
Such as few arms could wield ;
But when he bouned him to such task,
Well could it cleave the strongest casque,
And rend the surest shield.

XXIX.

The raised portcullis' arch they pass,
The wicket with its bars of brass,
The entrance long and low,
Flanked at each turn by loopholes strait,
Where bowmen might in ambush wait
(If force or fraud should burst the gate),
To gall an entering foe.

* See Note 15.

But every jealous post of ward
 Was now defenceless and unbarred,
 And all the passage free
 To one low-browed and vaulted room,
 Where squire and yeoman, page and groom,
 Plied their loud revelry.

xxx.

And "Rest ye here," the Warder bade,
 "Till to our Lord your suit is said.—
 And, comrades, gaze not on the maid,
 And on these men who ask our aid,
 As if ye ne'er had seen
 A damsel tired of midnight bark,
 Or wanderers of a moulding stark,
 And bearing martial mien."
 But not for Eachin's reproof
 Would page or vassal stand aloof,
 But crowded on to stare,
 As men of courtesy untaught,
 Till fiery Edward roughly caught,
 From one the foremost there,
 His checkered plaid, and in its shroud,
 To hide her from the vulgar crowd,
 Involved his sister fair.
 His brother, as the clansman bent
 His sullen brow in discontent,
 Made brief and stern excuse :—
 "Vassal, were thine the cloak of pall
 That decks thy Lord in bridal hall,
 'Twere honoured by her use."

xxxI.

Proud was his tone, but calm ; his eye
 Had that compelling dignity,
 His mien that bearing haught and high,
 Which common spirits fear !
 Needed nor word nor signal more ;
 Nod, wink, and laughter all were o'er ;
 Upon each other back they bore,
 And gazed like startled deer.

But now appeared the Seneschal,
Commissioned by his lord to call
The strangers to the Baron's hall,
Where feasted fair and free
That Island Prince in nuptial tide,
With Edith there his lovely bride,
And her bold brother by her side,
And many a chief, the flower and pride
Of Western land and sea.

Here pause we, gentles, for a space ;
And, if our tale hath won your grace,
Grant us brief patience, and again
We will renew the minstrel strain.

CANTO SECOND.

I.

FILL the bright goblet, spread the festive board !
Summon the gay, the noble, and the fair !
Through the loud hall in joyous concert poured,
Let mirth and music sound the dirge of Care !
But ask thou not if happiness be there,
If the loud laugh disguise convulsive throe,
Or if the brow the heart's true livery wear ;
Lift not the festal mask !—enough to know,
No scene of mortal life but teems with mortal woe.*

II.

With beakers' clang, with harpers' lay,
With all that olden time deemed gay,
The Island Chieftain feasted high ;
But there was in his troubled eye
A gloomy fire, and on his brow
Now sudden flushed, and faded now,
Emotions such as draw their birth
From deeper source than festal mirth.

* "Even in laughter the heart is sorrowful ; and the end of that mirth is heaviness."—Prov. xiv. 13.

By fits he paused, and harper's strain
 And jester's tale went round in vain,
 Or fell but on his idle ear
 Like distant sounds which dreamers hear.
 Then would he rouse him, and employ
 Each art to aid the clamorous joy,
 And call for pledge and lay,
 And, for brief space, of all the crowd,
 As he was loudest of the loud,
 Seem gayest of the gay.

III.

Yet nought amiss the bridal throng
 Marked in brief mirth, or musing long ;
 The vacant brow, the unlistening ear,
 They gave to thoughts of raptures near,
 And his fierce starts of sudden glee
 Seemed bursts of bridegroom's ecstasy.
 Nor thus alone misjudged the crowd,
 Since lofty Lorn, suspicious, proud,
 And jealous of his honoured line,
 And that keen knight, De Argentine,*
 (From England sent on errand high,
 The western league more firm to tie),
 Both deemed in Ronald's mood to find
 A lover's transport-troubled mind.
 But one sad heart, one tearful eye,
 Pierced deeper through the mystery,
 And watched, with agony and fear,
 Her wayward bridegroom's varied cheer.

IV.

She watched—yet feared to meet his glance,
 And he shunned hers ; till when by chance
 They met, the point of foeman's lance
 Had given a milder pang !
 Beneath the intolerable smart
 He writhed ; then sternly manned his heart
 To play his hard but destined part,
 And from the table sprang.

* See Note 10.

“ Fill me the mighty cup ! ” he said,
“ Erst owned by royal Somerled.*
Fill it, till on the studded brim
In burning gold the bubbles swim,
And every gem of varied shine
Glow doubly bright in rosy wine !
To you, brave lord, and brother mine,
Of Lorn, this pledge I drink—
The union of Our House with Thine,
By this fair bridal-link ! ”

V.

“ Let it pass round ! ” quoth He of Lorn,
“ And in good time—that winded horn
Must of the Abbot tell ;
The laggard monk is come at last.”
Lord Ronald heard the bugle-blast,
And on the floor at random cast
The untasted goblet fell:
But when the Warder in his ear
Tells other news, his blither cheer
Returns like sun of May,
When through a thunder-cloud it beams !—
Lord of two hundred isles, he seems
As glad of brief delay,
As some poor criminal might feel
When from the gibbet or the wheel
Respited for a day.

VI.

“ Brother of Lorn,” with hurried voice
He said, “ and you, fair lords, rejoice !
Here, to augment our glee,
Come wandering knights from travel far,
Well proved, they say, in strife of war,
And tempest on the sea.—
Ho ! give them at your board such place
As best their presences may grace,
And bid them welcome free ! ”

* See Note II.

With solemn step, and silver wand,
 The Seneschal the presence scanned
 Of these strange guests ; and well he knew
 How to assign their rank its due.

For though the costly furs
 That erst had decked their caps were torn,
 And their gay robes were overworn,
 And soiled their gilded spurs,
 Yet such a high commanding grace
 Was in their mien and in their face,
 As suited best the princely dais,
 And royal canopy ;
 And there he marshalled them their place,
 First of that company.

VII.

Then lords and ladies spake aside,
 And angry looks the error chide,
 That gave to guests unnamed, unknown,
 A place so near their prince's throne.

But Owen Erraught said :

" For forty years a seneschal,
 To marshal guests in bower and hall
 Has been my honoured trade.
 Worship and birth to me are known,
 By look, by bearing, and by tone,
 Not by furred robe or broidered zone ;
 And 'gainst an oaken bough
 I'll gage my silver wand of state,
 That these three strangers oft have sate
 In higher place than now."

VIII.

" I, too," the aged Ferrand said,
 " Am qualified by minstrel trade
 Of rank and place to tell ;—
 Marked ye the younger stranger's eye,
 My mates, how quick, how keen, how high,
 How fierce its flashes fell,
 Glancing among the festal rout
 As if to seek the noblest out,

Because the owner might not brook
On any save his peers to look?

And yet it moves me more,
That steady, calm, majestic brow,
With which the elder chief even now
Scanned the gay presence o'er,
Like being of superior kind,
In whose high-toned impartial mind
Degrees of mortal rank and state
Seem objects of indifferent weight.

The lady too—though closely tied
The mantle veil both face and eye,
Her motions' grace it could not hide,
Nor cloud her form's fair symmetry."

IX.

Suspicious doubt and lordly scorn
Lowered on the haughty front of Lorn.
From underneath his brows of pride,
The stranger guests he sternly eyed,
And whispered closely what the ear
Of Argentine alone might hear;

Then questioned, high and brief,
If, in their voyage, aught they knew
Of the rebellious Scottish crew,
Who to Rath-Erin's shelter drew,
With Carrick's outlawed Chief? *
And if, their winter's exile o'er,
They harboured still by Ulster's shore,
Or launched their galleys on the main,
To vex their native land again?

X. Ed. 16. mist. add. l. 11

That younger stranger, fierce and high,
At once confronts the Chieftain's eye
With look of equal scorn:—

"Of rebels have we nought to show;
But if of Royal Bruce thou'dst know,
I warn thee he has sworn,

* See Note 12.

Ere thrice three days shall come and go,
 His banner Scottish winds shall blow,
 Despite each mean or mighty foe,
 From England's every bill and bow,
 To Allaster of Lorn."

Kindled the mountain Chieftain's ire,
 But Ronald quenched the rising fire :
 "Brother, it better suits the time
 To chase the night with Ferrand's rhyme,
 Than wake, 'midst mirth and wine, the jars
 That flow from these unhappy wars."—
 "Content," said Lorn ; and spoke apart
 With Ferrand, master of his art,
 Then whispered Argentine,—
 "The lay I named will carry smart
 To these bold strangers' haughty heart,
 If right this guess of mine."
 He ceased, and it was silence all,
 Until the Minstrel waked the hall.

XI.

*The Brooch of Lorn.

"Whence the brooch of burning gold
 That clasps the Chieftain's mantle-fold,
 Wrought and chased with rare device,
 Studded fair with gems of price,
 On the varied tartans beaming,
 As, through night's pale rainbow gleaming,
 Fainter now, now seen afar,
 Fitful shines the northern star ?
 "Gem ! ne'er wrought on Highland mountain,
 Did the fairy of the fountain,
 Or the mermaid of the wave,
 Frame thee in some coral cave ?
 Did in Iceland's darksome mine
 Dwarf's swart hands thy metal twine ?
 Or, mortal-moulded, com'st thou here,
 From England's love, or France's fear ?

* See Note 13.

XII.

Song continued.

- "No!—thy splendours nothing tell
Foreign art or faëry spell.
Moulded thou for monarch's use,
By the overweening Bruce,
When the royal robe he tied
O'er a heart of wrath and pride;
Thence in triumph wert thou torn,
By the victor hand of Lorn!
- "When the gem was won and lost,
Widely was the war-cry tossed!
Rung aloud Bendourish fell,
Answered Douchart's sounding dell,
Fled the deer from wild Teyndrum,
When the homicide, o'ercome,
Hardly 'scaped with scathe and scorn,
Left the pledge with conquering Lorn!

XIII.

Song concluded.

- "Vain was then the Douglas brand,
Vain the Campbell's vaunted hand,*
Vain Kirkpatrick's bloody dirk,
Making sure of murder's work;†
Barendown fled fast away,
Fled the fiery De la Haye,‡
When this brooch, triumphant borne,
Beamed upon the breast of Lorn.
- "Farthest fled its former Lord,
Left his men to brand and cord,
Bloody brand of Highland steel,
English gibbet, axe, and wheel.
Let him fly from coast to coast,
Dogged by Comyn's vengeful ghost,

While his spoils, in triumph worn,
Long shall grace victorious Lorn !”

XIV.

As glares the tiger on his foes,
Hemmed in by hunters, spears, and bows,
And, ere he bounds upon the ring,
Selects the object of his spring,—
Now on the Bard, now on his Lord,
So Edward glared and grasped his sword.
But stern his brother spoke,—“ Be still.
What ! art thou yet so wild of will,
After high deeds and sufferings long,
To chafe thee for a menial’s song ?—
Well hast thou framed, old man, thy strains,
To praise the hand that pays thy pains !
Yet something might thy song have told
Of Lorn’s three vassals, true and bold,
Who rent their Lord from Bruce’s hold,
As underneath his knee he lay,
And died to save him in the fray.
I’ve heard the Bruce’s cloak and clasp
Was clenched within their dying grasp,
What time a hundred foemen more
Rushed in, and back the victor bore,
Long after Lorn had left the strife,
Full glad to ’scape with limb and life.—
Enough of this—and, Minstrel, hold,
As minstrel-hire, this chain of gold,
For future lays a fair excuse
To speak more nobly of the Bruce.”—

XV.

“ Now, by Columba’s shrine, I swear,
And every saint that’s buried there,
’Tis he himself !” Lorn sternly cries,
“ And for my kinsman’s death he dies.”
As loudly Ronald calls, “ Forbear !
Not in my sight while brand I wear,

O'ermatched by odds, shall warrior fall,
Or blood of stranger stain my hall !
This ancient fortress of my race
Shall be misfortune's resting-place,
Shelter and shield of the distressed,
No slaughter-house for shipwrecked guest." —
"Talk not to me," fierce Lorn replied,
"Of odds or match !—when Comyn died,
Three daggers clashed within his side !
Talk not to me of sheltering hall,
The Church of GOD saw Comyn fall !
On God's own altar streamed his blood,
While o'er my prostrate kinsman stood
The ruthless murderer—e'en as now—
With armèd hand and scornful brow.—
Up, all who love me ! blow on blow !
And lay the outlawed felons low !"

XVI.

Then up sprang many a mainland lord,
Obedient to their Chieftain's word.
Barcaldine's arm is high in air,
And Kinloch-Alline's blade is bare,
Black Murthok's dirk has left its sheath,
And clenched is Dermid's hand of death.
Their muttered threats of vengeance swell
Into a wild and warlike yell ;
Onward they press with weapons high,
The affrighted females shriek and fly ;
And, Scotland, then thy brightest ray
Had darkened ere its noon of day,
But every chief of birth and fame
That from the Isles of Ocean came,
At Ronald's side that hour withstood
Fierce Lorn's relentless thirst for blood.

. XVII.

Brave Torquil from Dunvegan high,
Lord of the misty hills of Skye,

Mac-Niel, wild Bara's ancient thane,
Duart, of bold Clan Gillian's strain,
Fergus, of Canna's castled bay,
Mac-Duffith, Lord of Colonsay,
Soon as they saw the broadswords glance,
With ready weapons rose at once—
More prompt, that many an ancient feud,
Full oft suppressed, full oft renewed,
Glowed 'twixt the chieftains of Argyle
And many a lord of ocean's isle.
Wild was the scene—each sword was bare,
Back streamed each chieftain's shaggy hair,
In gloomy opposition set,
Eyes, hands, and brandished weapons met;
Blue gleaming o'er the social board,
Flashed to the torches many a sword;
And soon those bridal lights may shine
On purple blood for rosy wine.

XVIII.

While thus for blows and death prepared,
Each heart was up, each weapon bared,
Each foot advanced, a surly pause
Still revered hospitable laws.
All menaced violence, but alike
Reluctant each the first to strike
(For aye accursed in minstrel line
Is he who brawls 'mid song and wine),
And, matched in numbers and in might,
Doubtful and desperate seemed the fight.
Thus threat and murmur died away,
Till on the crowded hall there lay
Such silence as the deadly still
Ere bursts the thunder on the hill.
With blade advanced, each Chieftain bold
Showed like the Sworder's form of old,
As wanting still the torch of life,
To wake the marble into strife.

XIX.

That awful pause the stranger maid,
And Edith, seized to pray for aid.
As to De Argentine they clung,
Away her veil the stranger flung,
And, lovely 'mid her wild despair,
Fast streamed her eyes, wide flowed her hair :
“ O thou, of knighthood once the flower,
Sure refuge in distressful hour,
Thou, who in Judah well hast fought
For our dear faith, and oft has sought
Renown in knightly exercise
When this poor hand has dealt the prize,
Say, can thy soul of honour brook
On the unequal strife to look,
When, butchered thus in peaceful hall,
Those once thy friends, my brethren, fall ! ”
To Argentine she turned her word,
But her eye sought the Island Lord.
A flush like evening's setting flame
Glowed on his cheek ; his hardy frame,
As with a brief convulsion, shook :
With hurried voice and eager look,
“ Fear not,” he said, “ my Isabel !
What said I—Edith !—all is well—
Nay, fear not—I will well provide
The safety of my lovely bride—
My bride ? ”—but there the accents clung
In tremor to his faltering tongue.

XX.

Now rose De Argentine, to claim
The prisoners in his sovereign's name,
To England's crown, who, vassals sworn,
'Gainst their liege lord had weapon borne—
(Such speech, I ween, was but to hide
His care their safety to provide ;
For knight more true in thought and deed
Than Argentine ne'er spurred a steed)—

And Ronald, who his meaning guessed,
 Seemed half to sanction the request.
 This purpose fiery Torquil broke :—
 “Somewhat we’ve heard of England’s yoke,”
 He said, “and, in our islands, Fame
 Hath whispered of a lawful claim,
 That calls the Bruce fair Scotland’s Lord,
 Though dispossessed by foreign sword.
 This craves reflection ; but though right
 And just the charge of England’s Knight,
 Let England’s crown her rebels seize
 Where she has power ;—in towers like these,
 ’Midst Scottish Chieftains summoned here
 To bridal mirth and bridal cheer,
 Be sure, with no consent of mine,
 Shall either Lorn or Argentine
 With chains or violence, in our sight,
 Oppress a brave and banished Knight.”

XXI.

Then waked the wild debate again,
 With brawling threat and clamour vain.
 Vassals and menials, thronging in,
 Lent their brute rage to swell the din ;
 When, far and wide, a bugle-clang
 From the dark ocean upward rang.
 “The Abbot comes !” they cry at once,
 “The holy man, whose favoured glance
 Hath sainted visions known ;
 Angels have met him on the way,
 Beside the blessed martyrs’ bay,
 And by Columba’s stone.
 His monks have heard their hymnings high
 Sound from the summit of Dun-Y,
 To cheer his penance lone,
 When at each cross, on girth and wold
 (Their number thrice a hundred-fold),
 His prayer he made, his beads he told,
 With Aves many a one—

He comes our feuds to reconcile,
 A sainted man from sainted isle ;
 We will his holy doom abide,
 The Abbot shall our strife decide."

XXII.

Scarcely this fair accord was o'er,
 When through the wide-revolving door
 The black-stoled brethren wind ;
 Twelve sandalled monks, who relics bore,
 With many a torch-bearer before,
 And many a cross behind.
 Then sunk each fierce uplifted hand,
 And dagger bright and flashing brand
 Dropped swiftly at the sight ;
 They vanished from the Churchman's eye,
 As shooting stars, that glance and die,
 Dart from the vault of night.

XXIII.

The Abbot on the threshold stood,
 And in his hand the holy rood ;
 Back on his shoulders flowed his hood,
 The torch's glaring ray
 Showed, in its red and flashing light,
 His withered cheek and amice white,
 His blue eye glistening cold and bright,
 His tresses scant and grey.
 " Fair lords," he said, " Our Lady's love,
 And peace be with you from above,
 And Benedicite !—
 But what means this ? no peace is here !
 Do dirks unsheathed suit bridal cheer ?
 Or are these naked brands
 A seemly show for Churchman's sight,
 When he comes summoned to unite
 Betrothèd hearts and hands ? "

XXIV.

Then, cloaking hate with fiery zeal,
 Proud Lorn first answered the appeal :—

“Thou com'st, O holy Man,
True sons of blessèd Church to greet,
But little deeming here to meet
 A wretch, beneath the ban
Of Pope and Church, for murder done
Even on the sacred altar-stone!—
Well mayst thou wonder we should know
Such miscreant here, nor lay him low,
Or dream of greeting, peace, or truce
With excommunicated Bruce!
Yet well I grant, to end debate,
Thy sainted voice decide his fate.”

XXV.

Then Ronald pled the stranger's cause,
And knighthood's oath and honour's laws;
And Isabel, on bended knee,
Brought prayers and tears to back the plea;
And Edith lent her generous aid,
And wept, and Lorn for mercy prayed.
“Hence,” he exclaimed, “degenerate maid!
Was't not enough to Ronald's bower
I brought thee, like a paramour,*
Or bondmaid at her master's gate,
His careless cold approach to wait?—
But the bold Lord of Cumberland,
The gallant Clifford, seeks thy hand;
His it shall be—Nay; no reply!
Hence! till those rebel eyes be dry.”—
With grief the Abbot heard and saw,
Yet nought relaxed his brow of awe.

XXVI.

Then Argentine, in England's name,
So highly urged his sovereign's claim,
He waked a spark that, long suppressed,
Had smouldered in Lord Ronald's breast;
And now, as from the flint the fire,
Flashed forth at once his generous ire.

* See Note 17.

"Enough of noble blood," he said,
 "By English Edward had been shed,
 Since matchless Wallace first had been
 In mock'ry crowned with wreaths of green,*
 And done to death by felon hand,
 For guarding well his father's land.
 Where's Nigel Bruce? and De la Haye,
 And valiant Seton—where are they?
 Where Somerville, the kind and free?
 And Fraser, flower of chivalry? †
 Have they not been on gibbet bound,
 Their quarters flung to hawk and hound?
 And hold we here a cold debate,
 To yield more victims to their fate?
 What! can the English Leopard's mood
 Never be gorged with northern blood?
 Was not the life of Athole shed
 To soothe the tyrant's sickened bed? ‡
 And must his word, till dying day,
 Be nought but quarter, hang, and slay!—§
 Thou frown'st, De Argentine—my gage
 Is prompt to prove the strife I wage."—

XXVII.

"Nor deem," said stout Dunvegan's knight,
 "That thou shalt brave alone the fight!
 By saints of isle and mainland both,
 By Woden wild (my grandsire's oath), ||
 Let Rome and England do their worst,
 Howe'er attainted or accursed,
 If Bruce shall e'er find friends again
 Once more to brave a battle-plain,
 If Douglas couch again his lance,
 Or Randolph dare another chance,
 Old Torquil will not be to lack
 With twice a thousand at his back.—

* See Note 18. † See Note 19. ‡ See Note 20. § See Note 21.

|| The MacLeods, and most other distinguished Hebridean families, were of Scandinavian extraction. The family names of Torquil, Thor-mod, etc., are all Norwegian.¹¹

Nay, chafe not at my bearing bold;
 Good Abbot ! for thou know'st of old,
 Torquil's rude thought and stubborn will
 Smack of the wild Norwegian still ;
 Nor will I barter Freedom's cause
 For England's wealth or Rome's applause."

XXVIII.

The Abbot seemed with eye severe
 The hardy Chieftain's speech to hear ;
 Then on King Robert turned the Monk,
 But twice his courage came and sunk,
 Confronted with the hero's look—
 Twice fell his eye, his accents shook.
 At length, resolved in tone and brow,
 Sternly he questioned him—"And thou,
 Unhappy ! what hast thou to plead
 Why I denounce not on thy deed
 That awful doom which canons tell
 Shuts paradise and opens hell ?
 Anathema of power so dread
 It blends the living with the dead
 Bids each good angel soar away,
 And every ill one claim his prey ;
 Expels thee from the Church's care,
 And deafens Heaven against thy prayer ;
 Arms every hand against thy life,
 Bans all who aid thee in the strife,
 Nay, each whose succour, cold and scant,
 With meanest alms relieves thy want ;
 Haunts thee while living, and, when dead,
 Dwells on thy yet devoted head,
 Rends Honour's scutcheon from thy hearse,
 Stills o'er thy bier the holy verse,
 And spurns thy corpse from hallowed ground,
 Flung like vile carrion to the hound !
 Such is the dire and desperate doom
 For sacrilege, decreed by Rome ;
 And such the well-deservèd meed
 Of thine unhallowed, ruthless deed."—

XXIX.

"Abbot!" the Bruce replied, "thy charge
 It boots not to dispute at large.
 This much, howe'er, I bid thee know,
 No selfish vengeance dealt the blow,
 For Comyn died his country's foe.
 Nor blame I friends whose ill-timed speed
 Fulfilled my soon-repented deed;
 Nor censure those from whose stern tongue
 The dire anathema has rung.
 I only blame mine own wild ire,
 By Scotland's wrongs incensed to fire.
 Heaven knows my purpose to atone,
 Far as I may, the evil done,
 And hears a penitent's appeal
 From papal curse and prelate's zeal.
 My first and dearest task achieved,
 Fair Scotland from her thrall relieved,
 Shall many a priest in cope and stole
 Say requiem for Red Comyn's soul;
 While I the blessed cross advance,
 And expiate this unhappy chance,
 In Palestine, with sword and lance.*
 But, while content the Church should know
 My conscience owns the debt I owe,
 Unto De Argentine and Lorn
 The name of traitor I return,
 Bid them defiance stern and high,
 And give them in their throats the lie!
 These brief words spoke, I speak no more.
 Do what thou wilt; my shrift is o'er."

XXX.

Like man by prodigy amazed,
 Upon the King the Abbot gazed;
 Then o'er his pallid features glance
 Convulsions of ecstatic trance.
 His breathing came more thick and fast,
 And from his pale blue eyes were cast

* See Note 22.

Strange rays of wild and wandering light ;
 Uprise his locks of silver white,
 Flushed is his brow, through every vein
 In azure tide the currents strain,
 And undistinguished accents broke
 The awful silence ere he spoke :—

XXXI.

“ De Bruce ! I rose with purpose dread
 To speak my curse upon thy head,*
 And give thee as an outcast o’er
 To him who burns to shed thy gore.
 But, like the Midianite of old,
 Who stood on Zophim, Heaven-controlled,
 I feel within mine aged breast
 A power that will not be repressed ;
 It prompts my voice, it swells my veins,
 It burns, it maddens, it constrains !—
 De Bruce, thy sacrilegious blow
 Hath at God’s altar slain thy foe :—
 O’ermastered yet by high behest,
 I bless thee, and thou shalt be bless’d !”
 He spoke, and o’er the astonished throng
 Was silence awful, deep, and long.

XXXII.

Again that light has fired his eye,
 Again his form swells bold and high ;
 The broken voice of age is gone,
 ’Tis vigorous manhood’s lofty tone :—
 “ Thrice vanquished on the battle-plain,
 Thy followers slaughtered, fled, or ta’en,
 A hunted wanderer on the wild,
 On foreign shores a man exiled,†
 Disowned, deserted, and distressed,—
 I bless thee, and thou shalt be bless’d ;
 Bless’d in the hall and in the field,
 Under the mantle as the shield.

* See Note 23. † See Note 24.

Avenger of thy country's shame,
Restorer of her injured fame,
Bless'd in thy sceptre and thy sword,
De Bruce, fair Scotland's rightful Lord,
Bless'd in thy deeds and in thy fame,
What lengthened honours wait thy name !
In distant ages, sire to son
Shall tell thy tale of freedom won,
And teach his infants, in the use
Of earliest speech, to falter Bruce.
Go, then, triumphant ! sweep along
Thy course, the theme of many a song !
The Power, whose dictates swell my breast,
Hath bless'd thee, and thou shalt be bless'd !—
Enough ! my short-lived strength decays,
And sinks the momentary blaze.
Heaven hath our destined purpose broke,
Not here must nuptial vow be spoke ;
Brethren, our errand here is o'er,
Our task discharged.—Unmoor, unmoor ! ”
His priests received the exhausted Monk,
As breathless in their arms he sunk.
Punctual his orders to obey,
The train refused all longer stay,
Embarked, raised sail, and bore away.

CANTO THIRD.

I.

HAST thou not marked, when o'er thy startled head
Sudden and deep the thunder-peal has rolled,
How, when its echoes fell, a silence dead
Sunk on the wood, the meadow, and the wold ?
The rye-grass shakes not on the sod-built fold,
The rustling aspen's leaves are mute and still,
The wall-flower waves not on the ruined hold,
Till, murmuring distant first, then near and shrill,
The savage whirlwind wakes, and sweeps the groaning hill.

II.

Artornish ! such a silence sunk
 Upon thy halls, when that grey Monk
 His prophet-speech had spoke ;
 And his obedient brethren's sail
 Was stretched to meet the southern gale
 Before a whisper woke.
 Then murmuring sounds of doubt and fear,
 Close poured in many an anxious ear,
 The solemn stillness broke ;
 And still they gazed with eager guess,
 Where, in an oriel's deep recess,
 The Island Prince seemed bent to press
 What Lorn, by his impatient cheer,
 And gesture fierce, scarce deigned to hear.

III. TWO MEN

Starting at length with frowning look,
 His hand he clenched, his head he shook,
 And sternly flung apart ;—
 “ And deem'st thou me so mean of mood
 As to forget the mortal feud,
 And clasp the hand with blood embrued
 From my dear kinsman's heart ?
 Is this thy rede ?—a due return
 For ancient league and friendship sworn !
 But well our mountain proverb shows
 The faith of Islesmen ebbs and flows.
 Be it even so—believe, ere long,
 He that now bears shall wreak the wrong.—
 Call Edith—call the Maid of Lorn !
 My sister, slaves !—for further scorn,
 Be sure nor she nor I will stay.—
 Away, De Argentine, away !
 We nor ally nor brother know
 In Bruce's friend, or England's foe.”

IV.

But who the Chieftain's rage can tell,
 When, sought from lowest dungeon cell

To highest tower the castle round,
 No Lady Edith was there found !
 He shouted, " Falsehood !—treachery !—
 Revenge and blood !—a lordly meed
 To him that will avenge the deed !
 A Baron's lands !"—His frantic mood
 Was scarcely by the news withstood,
 That Morag shared his sister's flight,
 And that, in hurry of the night,
 'Scaped noteless, and without remark,
 Two strangers sought the Abbot's bark.—
 " Man every galley !—fly—pursue !
 The priest his treachery shall rue !
 Ay, and the time shall quickly come
 When we shall hear the thanks that Róme
 Will pay his feignèd prophecy !"
 Such was fierce Lorn's indignant cry ;
 And Cormac Doil in haste obeyed,
 Hoisted his sail, his anchor weighed
 (For, glad of each pretext for spoil,
 A pirate sworn was Cormac Doil).
 But others, lingering, spoke apart,—
 " The Maid has given her maiden heart
 To Ronald of the Isles ;
 And, fearful lest her brother's word
 Bestow her on that English lord,
 She seeks Iona's piles,
 And wisely deems it best to dwell
 A votaress in the holy cell,
 Until these feuds, so fierce and fell,
 The Abbot reconciles."

v.

As, impotent of ire, the hall
 Echoed to Lorn's impatient call,
 " My horse, my mantle, and my train !
 Let none who honours Lorn remain !"
 Courteous, but stern, a bold request
 To Bruce De Argentine addressed.

"Lord Earl," he said—"I cannot chuse
 But yield such title to the Bruce,
 Though name and earldom both are gone
 Since he braced rebel's armour on—
 But, Earl or Serf, rude phrase was thine
 Of late, and launched at Argentine ;
 Such as compels me to demand
 Redress of honour at thy hand.
 We need not to each other tell
 That both can wield their weapons well ;
 Then do me but the soldier grace,
 This glove upon thy helm to place
 Where we may meet in fight.
 And I will say, as still I've said,
 Though by ambition far misled,
 Thou art a noble knight."

VI.

"And I," the princely Bruce replied,
 "Might term it stain on knighthood's pride,
 That the bright sword of Argentine
 Should in a tyrant's quarrel shine ;—
 But, for your brave request,
 Be sure the honoured pledge you gave
 In every battlefield shall wave
 Upon my helmet-crest ;
 Believe, that if my hasty tongue
 Hath done thine honour causeless wrong,
 It shall be well redressed.
 Nor dearer to my soul was glove
 Bestowed in youth by lady's love,
 Than this which thou hast given !
 Thus, then, my noble foe I greet :
 Health and high fortune till we meet,
 And then—what pleases Heaven."

VII.

Thus parted they—for now, with sound
 Like waves rolled back from rocky ground,
 The friends of Lorn retire ;

Each mainland chieftain, with his train,
Draws to his mountain towers again,
Pondering how mortal schemes prove vain,
 And mortal hopes expire.
But through the castle double guard,
By Ronald's charge, kept wakeful ward,
Wicket and gate were trebly barred,
 By beam and bolt and chain ;
Then of the guests, in courteous sort,
He prayed excuse for mirth broke short,
And bade them in Artornish fort
 In confidence remain.
Now torch and menial tendance led
Chieftain and knight to bower and bed,
And beads were told, and Aves said,
 And soon they sank away
Into such sleep, as wont to shed
Oblivion on the weary head,
 After a toilsome day.

VIII.

But soon uproused, the Monarch cried
To Edward slumbering by his side,
 "Awake, or sleep for aye !
Even now there jarred a secret door—
A taper-light gleams on the floor—
 Up, Edward, up, I say !
Some one glides in like midnight ghost—
Nay, strike not ! 'tis our noble Host."
Advancing then his taper's flame,
Ronald stepped forth, and with him came
Dunvegan's chief : each bent the knee
To Bruce, in sign of fealty,
 And proffered him his sword,
And hailed him, in a monarch's style,
As King of mainland and of isle,
 And Scotland's rightful Lord.
"And O," said Ronald, "Owned of Heaven !
Say, is my erring youth forgiven,
By falsehood's arts from duty driven,

Who rebel falchion drew,
 Yet ever to thy deeds of fame,
 Even while I strove against thy claim,
 Paid homage just and true?"—
 "Alas! dear youth, the unhappy time,"
 Answered the Bruce, "must bear the crime,
 Since, guiltier far than you,
 Even I"—he paused, for Falkirk's woes
 Upon his conscious soul arose.*
 The Chieftain to his breast he pressed,
 And in a sigh concealed the rest.

IX.

They proffered aid, by arms and might,
 To repossess him in his right.
 But well their counsels must be weighed,
 Ere banners raised and musters made;
 For English hire and Lorn's intrigues
 Bound many chiefs in southern leagues.
 In answer, Bruce his purpose bold
 To his new vassals frankly told:—
 "The winter worn in exile o'er,
 I longed for Carrick's kindred shore;
 I thought upon my native Ayr,
 And longed to see the burly fare
 That Clifford makes, whose lordly call
 Now echoes through my father's hall.
 But first my course to Arran led,
 Where valiant Lennox gathers head;
 And on the sea, by tempest tossed,
 Our barks dispersed, our purpose crossed,
 Mine own, a hostile sail to shun,
 Far from her destined course had run,
 When that wise will, which masters ours,
 Compelled us to your friendly towers."

X.

Then Torquil spoke:—"The time craves speed!
 We must not linger in our deed,

* See Note 25.

But instant pray our Sovereign Liege
To shun the perils of a siege.
The vengeful Lorn, with all his powers;
Lies but too near Artornish towers,
And England's light-armed vessels ride,
Not distant far, the waves of Clyde,
Prompt at these tidings to unmoor,
And sweep each strait and guard each shore.
Then, till this fresh alarm pass by,
Secret and safe my Liege must lie
In the far bounds of friendly Skye,
Torquil thy pilot and thy guide."—
"Not so, brave Chieftain," Ronald cried.
"Myself will on my Sovereign wait,
And raise in arms the men of Sleate;
Whilst thou, renowned where chiefs debate,
Shalt sway their souls by counsel sage,
And awe them by thy locks of age."—
"And if my words in weight shall fail,
This ponderous sword shall turn the scale."—

XI.

"The scheme," said Bruce, "contents me well.
Meantime, 'twere best that Isabel,
For safety, with my bark and crew,
Again to friendly Erin drew.
There, Edward, too, shall with her wend,
In need to cheer her and defend,
And muster up each scattered friend."
Here seemed it as Lord Ronald's ear
Would other counsel gladlier hear;
But, all achieved as soon as planned,
Both barks, in secret armed and manned,
From out the haven bore;
On different voyage forth they ply,
This for the coast of wingèd Skye,
And that for Erin's shore.

XII.

With Bruce and Ronald bides the tale.—
To favouring winds they gave the sail,

Till Mull's dark headlands scarce they knew,
 And Ardnamurchan's hills were blue.
 But then the squalls blew close and hard,
 And, fain to strike the galley's yard,
 And take them to the oar,
 With these rude seas, in weary plight,
 They strove the livelong day and night,
 Nor till the dawning had a sight
 Of Skye's romantic shore.
 Where Coolin stoops him to the west,
 They saw upon his shivered crest
 The sun's arising gleam;
 But such the labour and delay,
 Ere they were moored in Scavigh bay
 (For calmer heaven compelled to stay)
 He shot a western beam.
 Then Ronald said, "If true mine eye,
 These are the savage wilds that lie
 North of Strathnardill and Dunsbye;*
 No human foot comes here,
 And, since these adverse breezes blow,
 If my good Liege love hunter's bow,
 What hinders that on land we go,
 And strike a mountain deer?
 Allan, my page, shall with us wend;
 A bow full deftly can he bend,
 And, if we meet a herd, may send
 A shaft shall mend our cheer."
 Then each took bow and bolts in hand,
 Their row-boat launched and leapt to land,
 And left their skiff and train,
 Where a wild stream, with headlong shock,
 Came brawling down its bed of rock,
 To mingle with the main.

XIII.

Awhile their route they silent made,
 As men who stalk for mountain deer,

* See Note 26.

Till the good Bruce to Ronald said,
 "St. Mary! what a scene is here!
I've traversed many a mountain-strand,
Abroad and in my native land,
And it has been my lot to tread
Where safety more than pleasure led;
Thus, many a waste I've wandered o'er,
Clomb many a crag, crossed many a moor;
 But, by my halidome,
A scene so rude, so wild as this,
Yet so sublime in barrenness,
Ne'er did my wandering footsteps press,
 Where'er I happed to roam."

XIV.

No marvel thus the Monarch spake;
 For rarely human eye has known
A scene so stern as that dread lake,
 With its dark ledge of barren stone.
Seems that primeval earthquake's sway
Hath rent a strange and shattered way
 Through the rude bosom of the hill,
And that each naked precipice,
Sable ravine, and dark abyss,
 Tells of the outrage still.
The wildest glen, but this, can show
Some touch of Nature's genial glow:
On high Benmore green mosses grow,
And heath-bells bud in deep Glencroe,
 And copse on Cruchan-Ben;
But here, above, around, below,
 On mountain or in glen,
Nor tree, nor shrub, nor plant, nor flower,
Nor aught of vegetative power,
 The weary eye may ken.
For all is rocks at random thrown,
Black waves, bare crags, and banks of stone,
 As if were here denied
The summer sun, the spring's sweet dew,
That clothe with many a varied hue
 The bleakest mountain side.

XV.

And wilder, forward as they wound,
 Were the proud cliffs and lake profound.
 Huge terraces of granite black
 Afforded rude and cumbered track ;
 For from the mountain hoar,
 Hurl'd headlong in some night of fear,
 When yelled the wolf and fled the deer,
 Loose crags had toppled o'er,
 And some, chance-poised and balanced, lay,
 So that a stripling arm might sway
 A mass no host could raise,
 In Nature's rage at random thrown,
 Yet trembling like the Druid's stone
 On its precarious base.
 The evening mists, with ceaseless change,
 Now clothed the mountains' lofty range,
 Now left their foreheads bare,
 And round the skirts their mantle furled,
 Or on the sable waters curled,
 Or, on the eddy breezes whirled,
 Dispersed in middle air,
 And oft, condensed, at once they lower,
 When, brief and fierce, the mountain shower
 Pours like a torrent down ;
 And when return the sun's glad beams,
 Whitened with foam a thousand streams
 Leap from the mountain's crown.

XVI.

"This lake," said Bruce, "whose barriers drear
 Are precipices sharp and sheer,
 Yielding no track for goat or deer,
 Save the black shelves we tread,
 How term you its dark waves? and how
 Yon northern mountain's pathless brow,
 And yonder peak of dread,
 That to the evening sun uplifts
 The griesly gulfs and slaty rifts,
 Which seam its shivered head?"—

"Coriskin call the dark lake's name,
 Coolin the ridge, as bards proclaim,
 From old Cuchullin, chief of fame.
 But bards, familiar in our isles
 Rather with Nature's frowns than smiles,
 Full oft their careless humours please
 By sportive names for scenes like these.
 I would old Torquil were to show
 His Maidens with their breasts of snow;
 Or that my noble Liege were nigh
 To hear his Nurse sing lullaby!
 (The Maids—tall cliffs with breakers white,
 The Nurse—a torrent's roaring might);
 Or that your eye could see the mood
 Of Corrievrekin's whirlpool rude,
 When dons the Hag her whitened hood—
 'Tis thus our islesmen's fancy frames,
 For scenes so stern, fantastic names."

XVII.

Answered the Bruce: "And musing mind
 Might here a graver moral find.
 These mighty cliffs, that heave on high
 Their naked brows to middle sky,
 Indifferent to the sun or snow,
 Where nought can fade and nought can blow,
 May they not mark a Monarch's fate—
 Raised high 'mid storms of strife and state,
 Beyond life's lowlier pleasures placed,
 His soul a rock, his heart a waste?
 O'er hope and love and fear aloft
 High rears his crownèd head—But soft!
 Look, underneath yon jutting crag
 Are hunters and a slaughtered stag.
 Who may they be? But late you said
 No steps these desert regions tread."—

XVIII.

"So said I—and believed in sooth,"
 Ronald replied, "I spoke the truth.

Yet now I spy, by yonder stone,
Five men—they mark us, and come on ;
And by their badge on bonnet borne,
I guess them of the land of Lorn,
Foes to my Liege.”—“So let it be ;
I’ve faced worse odds than five to three.
But the poor page can little aid ;
Then be our battle thus arrayed :
If our free passage they contest,
Cope thou with two, I’ll match the rest.”—
“Not so, my Liege ; for, by my life,
This sword shall meet the treble strife.
My strength, my skill in arms, more small,
But less the loss should Ronald fall.
But islesmen soon to soldiers grow,—
Allan has sword as well as bow ;
And were my Monarch’s order given,
Two shafts should make our numbers even.”—
“No ! not to save my life !” he said ;
“Enough of blood rests on my head,
Too rashly spilled—we soon shall know,
Whether they come as friend or foe.”

XIX.

Nigh came the strangers—and more nigh,
Still less they pleased the Monarch’s eye.
Men were they all of evil mien,
Down-looked, unwilling to be seen ;
They moved with half-resolvèd pace,
And bent on earth each gloomy face.
The foremost two were fair arrayed
With brogue and bonnet, trews and plaid,
And bore the arms of mountaineers,
Daggers and broadswords, bows and spears.
The three, that lagged small space behind,
Seemed serfs of more degraded kind ;
Goat-skins or deer-hides o’er them cast,
Made a rude fence against the blast ;
Their arms and feet and heads were bare,
Matted their beards, unshorn their hair ;

For arms, the caitiffs bore in hand
A club, an axe, a rusty brand.

XX.

Onward, still mute, they kept the track ;—
“ Tell who ye be, or else stand back,”
Said Bruce. “ In deserts when they meet,
Men pass not as in peaceful street.”
Still, at his stern command, they stood,
And proffered greeting brief and rude,
But acted courtesy so ill,
As seemed of fear, and not of will.
“ Wand’rers we are, as you may be,
Men hither driven by wind and sea ;
Who, if you list to taste our cheer,
Will share with you this fallow deer.”—
“ If from the sea, where lies your bark ? ”—
“ Ten fathom deep in ocean dark !
Wrecked yesternight ; but we are men
Who little sense of peril ken.
The shades come down—the day is shut—
Will you go with us to our hut ? ”—
“ Our vessel waits us in the bay ;
Thanks for your proffer—have good-day.”—
“ Was that your galley, then, which rode
Not far from shore when evening glowed ? ”—
“ It was.”—“ Then spare your needless pain,
There will she now be sought in vain.
We saw her from the mountain head,
When, with St. George’s blazon red,
A southern vessel bore in sight,
And yours raised sail, and took to flight.”—

XXI.

“ Now, by the rood, unwelcome news ! ”
Thus with Lord Ronald communed Bruce ;
“ Nor rests there light enough to show
If this their tale be true or no.
The men seem bred of churlish kind,
Yet mellow nuts have hardest rind ;

We will go with them—food and fire
 And sheltering roof our wants require.
 Sure guard 'gainst treachery will we keep,
 And watch by turns our comrades' sleep.—
 Good fellows, thanks ; your guests we'll be,
 And well will pay the courtesy.
 Come, lead us where your lodging lies,—
 Nay, soft ! we mix not companies.
 Show us the path o'er crag and stone,
 And we will follow you ;—lead on."

XXII.

They reached the dreary cabin, made
 Of sails against a rock displayed ;
 And there, on entering, found
 A slender boy, whose form and mien
 Ill suited with such savage scene,
 In cap and cloak of velvet green,
 Low seated on the ground.
 His garb was such as minstrels wear ;
 Dark was his hue, and dark his hair ;
 His youthful cheek was marred by care,
 His eyes in sorrow drowned.
 " Whence this poor boy ? "—As Ronald spoke,
 The voice his trance of anguish broke ;
 As if awaked from ghastly dream,
 He raised his head with start and scream,
 And wildly gazed around ;
 Then to the wall his face he turned,
 And his dark cheek with blushes burned.

XXIII.

" Whose is the boy ? " again he said.—
 " By chance of war our captive made.
 He may be yours, if you should hold
 That music has more charms than gold ;
 For, though from earliest childhood mute,
 The lad can deftly touch the lute,
 And on the rote and viol play,
 And well can drive the time away

For those who love such glee ;
For me, the favouring breeze, when loud
It pipes upon the galley's shroud,
Makes blither melody."—

"Hath he, then, sense of spoken sound ?"—

"Ay ; so his mother bade us know,
A crone in our late shipwreck drowned,

And hence the silly stripling's woe.

More of the youth I cannot say,
Our captive but since yesterday ;
When wind and weather waxed so grim,
We little listed think of him.—

But why waste time in idle words ?
Sit to your cheer—unbelt your swords."

Sudden the captive turned his head,
And one quick glance to Ronald sped.

It was a keen and warning look,
And well the Chief the signal took.

XXIV.

"Kind host," he said, "our needs require

A separate board and separate fire ;

For know, that on a pilgrimage

Wend I, my comrade, and this page.

And, sworn to vigil and to fast,

Long as this hallowed task shall last,

We never doff the plaid or sword,

Or feast us at a stranger's board ;

And never share one common sleep,

But one must still his vigil keep.

Thus, for our separate use, good friend,

We'll hold this hut's remoter end."—

"A churlish vow," the eldest said,

"And hard, methinks, to be obeyed.

How say you, if, to wreak the scorn

That pays our kindness harsh return,

We should refuse to share our meal ?"—

"Then say we, that our swords are steel !

And our vow binds us not to fast

Where gold or force may buy repast."

Their host's dark brow grew keen and fell,
His teeth are clenched, his features swell ;
Yet sunk the felon's moody ire
Before Lord Ronald's glance of fire,
Nor could his craven courage brook
The Monarch's calm and dauntless look.
With laugh constrained,—“ Let every man
Follow the fashion of his clan !
Each to his separate quarters keep,
And feed or fast, or wake or sleep.”

XXV.

Their fire at separate distance burns ;
By turns they eat, keep guard by turns :
For evil seemed that old man's eye,
Dark and designing, fierce yet shy.
Still he avoided forward look,
But slow and circumspectly took
A circling, never-ceasing glance,
By doubt and cunning marked at once,
Which shot a mischief-boding ray
From under eyebrows shagged and grey.
The younger, too, who seemed his son,
Had that dark look the timid shun.
The half-clad serfs behind them sate,
And scowled a glare 'twixt fear and hate—
Till all, as darkness onward crept,
Couched down, and seemed to sleep or slept.
Nor he, that boy, whose powerless tongue
Must trust his eyes to wail his wrong,
A longer watch of sorrow made,
But stretched his limbs to slumber laid.

XXVI.

Not in his dangerous host confides
The King, but wary watch provides.
Ronald keeps ward till midnight past,
Then wakes the King, young Allan last ;

Thus ranked, to give the youthful page
The rest required by tender age.—
What is Lord Ronald's wakeful thought,
To chase the languor toil had brought?—
(For deem not that he deigned to throw
Much care upon such coward foe)—
He thinks of lovely Isabel;
When at her foeman's feet she fell,
Nor less when, placed in princely selle,
She glanced on him with favouring eyes,
At Woodstock when he won the prize.
Nor, fair in joy, in sorrow fair,
In pride of place as 'mid despair,
Must she alone engross his care.
His thoughts to his betrothèd bride,
To Edith, turn—O how decide,
When here his love and heart are given,
And there his faith stands plight to Heaven!
No drowsy ward 'tis his to keep,
For seldom lovers long for sleep.
Till sung his midnight hymn the owl,
Answered the dog-fox with his howl,
Then waked the King—at his request,
Lord Ronald stretched himself to rest.

XXVII.

What spell was good King Robert's, say,
To drive the weary night away?—
His was the patriot's burning thought,
Of Freedom's battle bravely fought,
Of castles stormed, of cities freed,
Of deep design and daring deed,
Of England's roses reft and torn,
And Scotland's cross in triumph worn,
Of rout and rally, war and truce,—
As heroes think, so thought the Bruce.
No marvel, 'mid such musings high,
Sleep shunned the Monarch's thoughtful eye.
Now over Coolin's eastern head
The greyish light begins to spread,

The otter to his cavern drew,
 And clamoured shrill the wakening mew;
 Then watched the page—to needful rest
 The King resigned his anxious breast.

XXVIII.

To Allan's eyes was harder task,
 The weary watch their safeties ask.
 He trimmed the fire, and gave to shine
 With bickering light the splintered pine;
 Then gazed awhile, where silent laid
 Their hosts were shrouded by the plaid.
 But little fear waked in his mind,
 For he was bred of martial kind,
 And, if to manhood he arrive,
 May match the boldest knight alive.
 Then thought he of his mother's tower,
 His little sisters' greenwood bower,
 How there the Easter gambols pass,
 And of Dan Joseph's lengthened mass.
 But still before his weary eye
 In rays prolonged the blazes die—
 Again he roused him—on the lake
 Looked forth, where now the twilight-flake
 Of pale cold dawn began to wake.
 On Coolin's cliffs the mist lay furled,
 The morning breeze the lake had curled,
 The short dark waves, heaved to the land,
 With ceaseless plash kissed cliff or sand;—
 It was a slumbrous sound—he turned
 To tales at which his youth had burned,
 Of pilgrim's path by demon crossed,
 Of sprightly elf or yelling ghost,
 Of the wild witch's baneful cot,
 And mermaid's alabaster grot,
 Who bathes her limbs in sunless well
 Deep in Strathaird's enchanted cell.*
 Thither in fancy rapt he flies,
 And on his sight the vaults arise:

* See Note 27.

That hut's dark walls he sees no more,
 His foot is on the marble floor,
 And o'er his head the dazzling spars
 Gleam like a firmament of stars !—
 Hark ! hears he not the sea-nymph speak
 Her anger in that thrilling shriek ?—
 No ! all too late, with Allan's dream
 Mingled the captive's warning scream.
 As from the ground he strives to start,
 A ruffian's dagger finds his heart !
 Upward he casts his dizzy eyes,—
 Murmurs his master's name,—and dies !

XXIX.

Not so awoke the King ! His hand
 Snatched from the flame a knotted brand,
 The nearest weapon of his wrath ;
 With this he crossed the murderer's path,
 And venged young Allan well !
 The spattered brain and bubbling blood
 Hissed on the half-extinguished wood,—
 The miscreant gasped and fell !
 Nor rose in peace the Island Lord ;
 One caitiff died upon his sword,
 And one beneath his grasp lies prone,
 In mortal grapple overthrown.
 But while Lord Ronald's dagger drank
 The life-blood from his panting flank,
 The father-ruffian of the band
 Behind him rears a coward hand !—
 Oh for a moment's aid,
 Till Bruce, who deals no double blow,
 Dash to the earth another foe,
 Above his comrade laid !—
 And it is gained—the captive sprung
 On the raised arm, and closely clung,
 And, ere he shook him loose,
 The mastered felon pressed the ground,
 And gasped beneath a mortal wound,
 While o'er him stands the Bruce.

XXX.

- “ Miscreant ! while lasts thy flitting spark,
 Give me to know the purpose dark
 That armed thy hand with murderous knife
 Against offenceless stranger’s life ? ”—
- “ No stranger thou ! ” with accent fell,
 Murmured the wretch ; “ I know thee well ;
 And know thee for the foeman sworn
 Of my high Chief, the mighty Lorn. ”—
- “ Speak yet again, and speak the truth
 For thy soul’s sake !—from whence this youth ?
 His country, birth, and name declare,
 And thus one evil deed repair. ”—
- “ Vex me no more !.....my blood runs cold.....
 No more I know than I have told.
 We found him in a bark we sought
 With different purpose.....and I thought.....”
 Fate cut him short ; in blood and broil,
 As he had lived, died Cormac Doil.

XXXI.

- Then resting on his bloody blade,
 The valiant Bruce to Ronald said,
 “ Now shame upon us both !—that boy
 Lifts his mute face to heaven,
 And clasps his hands, to testify
 His gratitude to God on high
 For strange deliverance given.
 His speechless gesture thanks hath paid,
 Which our free tongues have left unsaid ! ”
 He raised the youth with kindly word,
 But marked him shudder at the sword ;
 He cleansed it from its hue of death,
 And plunged the weapon in its sheath.
- “ Alas, poor child ! unfitting part
 Fate doomed, when with so soft a heart,
 And form so slight as thine, (11)
 She made thee first a pirate’s slave,
 Then, in his stead, a patron gave
 Of wayward lot like mine ;

A landless prince, whose wandering life
Is but one scene of blood and strife ;
Yet scant of friends the Bruce shall be,
But he'll find resting-place for thee.—
Come, noble Ronald ! o'er the dead
Enough thy generous grief is paid,
And well has Allan's fate been wroke ;—
Come, wend we hence—the day has broke.
Seek we our bark—I trust the tale
Was false that she had hoisted sail.”

XXXII.

Yet, ere they left that charnel-cell,
The Island Lord bade sad farewell
To Allan :—“ Who shall tell this tale,”
He said, “ in halls of Donagaile !
Oh, who his widowed mother tell,
That, ere his bloom, her fairest fell !—
Rest thee, poor youth ! and trust my care
For mass and knell and funeral prayer ;
While o'er those caitiffs, where they lie,
The wolf shall snarl, the raven cry ! ”
And now the eastern mountain's head
On the dark lake threw lustre red ;
Bright gleams of gold and purple streak
Ravine and precipice and peak
(So earthly power at distance shows—
Reveals his splendour, hides his woes).
O'er sheets of granite dark and broad,
Rent and unequal, lay the road.
In sad discourse the warriors wind,
And the mute captive moves behind.

CANTO FOURTH.

I

STRANGER ! if e'er thine ardent step hath traced
The northern realms of ancient Caledon,

Where the proud Queen of Wilderness hath placed,
 By lake and cataract, her lonely throne ;
 Sublime but sad delight thy soul hath known,
 Gazing on pathless glen and mountain high,
 Listing where from the cliffs the torrents thrown
 Mingle their echoes with the eagle's cry,
 And with the sounding lake, and with the moaning sky.

Yes ! 'twas sublime, but sad. The loneliness
 Loaded thy heart, the desert tired thine eye ;
 And strange and awful fears began to press
 Thy bosom with a stern solemnity.
 Then hast thou wished some woodman's cottage nigh,
 Something that showed of life, though low and mean ;
 Glad sight its curling wreath of smoke to spy,
 Glad sound its cock's blithe carol would have been,
 Or children whooping wild beneath the willows green.

Such are the scenes where savage grandeur wakes
 An awful thrill that softens into sighs ;
 Such feelings rouse them by dim Rannoch's lakes,
 In dark Glencoe such gloomy raptures rise ;
 Or farther, where, beneath the northern skies,
 Chides wild Loch Eribol his caverns hoar :
 But, be the minstrel judge, they yield the prize
 Of desert dignity to that dread shore
 That sees grim Coolin rise, and hears Coriskin roar.

II.

Through such wild scenes the champions passed,
 When bold halloo and bugle-blast
 Upon the breeze came loud and fast.
 "There," said the Bruce, "rung Edward's horn !
 What can have caused such brief return ?
 And see, brave Ronald—see him dart
 O'er stock and stone like hunted hart
 Precipitate, as is the use,
 In war or sport, of Edward Bruce.—
 He marks us, and his eager cry
 "Will tell his news ere he be nigh."

III.

Loud Edward shouts, "What make ye here,
 Warring upon the mountain deer,
 When Scotland wants her King?
 A bark from Lennox crossed our track,
 With her in speed I hurried back,
 These joyful news to bring—
 The Stuart stirs in Teviotdale,
 And Douglas wakes his native vale;
 Thy storm-tossed fleet hath won its way
 With little loss to Brodick Bay;
 And Lennox, with a gallant band,
 Waits but thy coming and command
 To waft them o'er to Carrick strand.
 There are blithe news!—but mark the close:
 Edward, the deadliest of our foes,
 As with his host he northward passed,
 Hath on the Borders breathed his last."

IV.

Still stood the Bruce—his steady cheek
 Was little wont his joy to speak;
 But then his colour rose:
 "Now, Scotland! shortly shalt thou see,
 With God's high will, thy children free,
 And vengeance on thy foes!
 Yet to no sense of selfish wrongs,
 Bear witness with me, Heaven, belongs
 My joy o'er Edward's bier;*
 I took my knighthood at his hand,
 And lordship held of him, and land,
 And well may vouch it here,
 That, blot the story from his page
 Of Scotland ruined in his rage,
 You read a monarch brave and sage,
 And to his people dear."
 "Let London's burghers mourn her Lord,
 And Croydon monks his praise record,"

* See Note 28.

The eager Edward said ;
 " Eternal as his own, my hate
 Surmounts the bounds of mortal fate,
 And dies not with the dead !
 Such hate was his on Solway's strand,
 When vengeance clenched his palsied hand,
 That pointed yet to Scotland's land,
 As his last accents prayed
 Disgrace and curse upon his heir,
 If he one Scottish head should spare,
 Till stretched upon the bloody lair
 Each rebel corpse was laid !
 Such hate was his, when his last breath
 Renounced the peaceful house of death,
 And bade his bones to Scotland's coast
 Be borne by his remorseless host,—
 As if his dead and stony eye
 Could still enjoy her misery !
 Such hate was his—dark, deadly, long ;
 Mine—as enduring, deep, and strong ! ”—

v.

" Let women, Edward, war with words,
 With curses monks, but men with swords ;
 Nor doubt of living foes, to sate
 Deepest revenge and deadliest hate.
 Now, to the sea ! behold the beach,
 And see the galleys' pendants stretch
 Their fluttering length down favouring gale !
 Aboard, aboard ! and hoist the sail.
 Hold we our way for Arran first,
 Where meet in arms our friends dispersed—
 Lennox the loyal, De la Haye,
 And Boyd the bold in battle fray.
 I long the hardy band to head,
 And see once more my standard spread.—
 Does noble Ronald share our course,
 Or stay to raise his island force ? ”—
 " Come weal, come woe, by Bruce's side,"
 Replied the Chief, " will Ronald bide.

And since two galleys yonder ride,
Be mine, so please my liege, dismissed
To wake to arms the clans of Uist,
And all who hear the Minche's roar
On the Long Island's lonely shore.
The nearer Isles, with slight delay,
Ourselves may summon in our way ;
And soon on Arran's shore shall meet,
With Torquil's aid, a gallant fleet,
If aught avails their Chieftain's hest
Among the islesmen of the west."

VI.

Thus was their venturous counsel said.
But, ere their sails the galleys spread,
Coriskin dark and Coolin high
Echoed the dirge's doleful cry ;
Along that sable lake passed slow—
Fit scene for such a sight of woe—
The sorrowing islesmen, as they bore
The murdered Allan to the shore.
At every pause, with dismal shout,
Their coronach of grief rung out,
And ever, when they moved again,
The pipes resumed their clamorous strain,
And, with the pibroch's shrilling wail,
Mourned the young heir of Donagaile.
Round and around, from cliff and cave,
His answer stern old Coolin gave,
Till high upon his misty side
Languished the mournful notes, and died.
For never sounds by mortal made
Attained his high and haggard head ;
That echoes but the tempest's moan,
Or the deep thunder's rending groan.

VII.

Merrily, merrily bounds the bark,
She bounds before the gale,
The mountain breeze from Ben-na-darch
Is joyous in her sail !

With fluttering sound like laughter hoarse,
 The cords and canvas strain;
 The waves, divided by her force,
 In rippling eddies chased her course,
 As if they laughed again.
 Not down the breeze more blithely flew,
 Skimming the wave, the light sea-mew,
 Than that gay galley bore
 Her course upon that favouring wind,
 And Coolin's crest has sunk behind,
 And Slapin's caverned shore.
 'Twas then that warlike signals wake
 Dunscaith's dark towers and Eisord's lake,
 And soon, from Cavilgarrigh's head,
 Thick wreaths of eddying smoke were spread—
 A summons these of war and wrath
 To the brave clans of Sleat and Strath;
 And, ready at the sight,
 Each warrior to his weapons sprung,
 And targe upon his shoulder flung,
 Impatient for the fight.
 Mac-Kinnon's chief, in warfare grey,
 Had charge to muster their array,
 And guide their barks to Brodick Bay.

VIII.

Signal of Ronald's high command,
 A beacon gleamed o'er sea and land,
 From Canna's tower, that, steep and grey,
 Like falcon-nest o'erhangs the bay.*
 Seek not the giddy crag to climb,
 To view the turret scathed by time;
 It is a task of doubt and fear
 To aught but goat or mountain deer.
 But rest thee on the silver beach,
 And let the aged herdsman teach
 His tale of former day;
 His cur's wild clamour he shall chide,

* See Note 29: 2.

And for thy seat by ocean's side,
His varied plaid display;
Then tell, how with their Chieftain came,
In ancient times, a foreign dame
To yonder turret grey.
Stern was her lord's suspicious mind,
Who in so rude a jail confined
So soft and fair a thrall!
And oft, when moon on ocean slept,
That lovely lady sat and wept
Upon the castle wall,
And turned her eye to southern climes,
And thought perchance of happier times,
And touched her lute by fits, and sung
Wild ditties in her native tongue.
And still, when on the cliff and bay
Placid and pale the moonbeams play,
And every breeze is mute,
Upon the lone Hebridean's ear
Steals a strange pleasure mixed with fear,
While from that cliff he seems to hear
The murmur of a lute,
And sounds, as of a captive lone,
That mourns her woes in tongue unknown.
Strange is the tale—but all too long
Already hath it stayed the song—
Yet who may pass them by,
That crag and tower in ruins grey,
Nor to their hapless tenant pay
The tribute of a sigh!

IX.

Merrily, merrily bounds the bark
O'er the broad ocean driven,
Her path by Ronin's mountains dark
The steersman's hand has given.
And Ronin's mountains dark have sent
Their hunters to the shore,*

* See Note 30.

And each his ashen bow unbent,
 And gave his pastime o'er,
 And at the Island Lord's command,
 For hunting-spear took warrior's brand.
 On Scooreigg next a warning light
 Summoned her warriors to the fight ;
 A numerous race, ere stern MacLeod
 O'er their bleak shores in vengeance strode,*
 When all in vain the ocean-cave
 Its refuge to his victims gave.
 The Chief, relentless in his wrath,
 With blazing heath blockades the path ;
 In dense and stifling volumes rolled,
 The vapour filled the caverned hold !
 The warrior-threat, the infant's plain,
 The mother's screams, were heard in vain !
 The vengeful Chief maintains his fires,
 Till in the vault a tribe expires !
 The bones which strew that cavern's gloom,
 Too well attest their dismal doom.

x.

Merrily, merrily goes the bark
 On a breeze from the northward free,
 So shoots through the morning sky the lark,
 Or the swan through the summer sea.
 The shores of Mull on the eastward lay,
 And Ulva dark and Colonsay,
 And all the group of islets gay
 That guard famed Staffa round.
 Then all unknown its columns rose,
 Where dark and undisturbed repose
 The cormorant had found,
 And the shy seal had quiet home,
 And weltered in that wondrous dome,
 Where, as to shame the temples decked
 By skill of earthly architect,
 Nature herself, it seemed, would raise
 A Minster to her Maker's praise !

* See Note 31.

Not for a meaner use ascend
Her columns, or her arches bend ;
Nor of a theme less solemn tells
That mighty surge that ebbs and swells,
And still, between each awful pause,
From the high vault an answer draws,
In varied tone prolonged and high,
That mocks the organ's melody.
Nor doth its entrance front in vain
To old Iona's holy fane,
That Nature's voice might seem to say,
" Well hast thou done, frail Child of clay !
Thy humble powers that stately shrine
Tasked high and hard—but witness mine ! "

XI.

Merrily, merrily goes the bark,
 Before the gale she bounds ;
So darts the dolphin from the shark,
 Or the deer before the hounds.
They left Loch Tua on their lee,
And they wakened the men of the wild Tiree,
 And the Chief of the sandy Coll ;
They paused not at Columba's isle,
Though pealed the bells from the holy pile
 With long and measured toll ;
No time for matin or for mass,
And the sounds of the holy summons pass
 Away in the billows' roll.
Lochbuie's fierce and warlike lord
Their signal saw, and grasped his sword ;
And verdant Ilay called her host,
And the clans of Jura's rugged coast
 Lord Ronald's call obey ;
And Scarba's isle, whose tortured shore
Still rings to Corrievrekin's roar,
 And lonely Colonsay ;—
Scenes sung by him who sings no more ! *
His bright and brief career is o'er,

* See Note 32.

And mute his tuneful strains ;
 Quenched is his lamp of varied lore,
 That loved the light of song to pour,—
 A distant and a deadly shore
 Has LEYDEN'S cold remains !

XII.

Ever the breeze blows merrily,
 But the galley ploughs no more the sea.
 Lest, rounding wild Cantire, they meet
 The southern foemen's watchful fleet,
 They held unwonted way ;
 Up Tarbat's western lake they bore,
 Then dragged their bark the isthmus o'er,*
 As far as Kilmaconnel's shore,
 Upon the eastern bay.
 It was a wondrous sight to see
 Topmast and pennon glitter free,
 High raised above the greenwood tree,
 As on dry land the galley moves,
 By cliff and copse and alder groves.
 Deep import from that selcouth sign
 Did many a mountain seer divine ;
 For ancient legends told the Gael,
 That when a royal bark should sail
 O'er Kilmaconnel moss,
 Old Albyn should in fight prevail,
 And every foe should faint and quail
 Before her silver Cross.

XIII.

Now launched once more, the inland sea
 They furrow with fair augury,
 And steer for Arran's isle ;
 The sun, ere yet he sunk behind
 Ben-Ghoil, " The Mountain of the Wind,"
 Gave his grim peaks a greeting kind,
 And bade Loch Ranza smile.†

* See Note 33. † See Note 34.

Thither their destined course they drew :
It seemed the isle her Monarch knew,
So brilliant was the landward view,
 The ocean so serene ;
Each puny wave in diamonds rolled
O'er the calm deep, where hues of gold
 With azure strove and green.
The hill, the vale, the tree, the tower,
Glowed with the tints of evening's hour,
 The beach was silver sheen,
The wind breathed soft as lover's sigh,
And, oft renewed, seemed oft to die,
 With breathless pause between.
O who, with speech of war and woes,
Would wish to break the soft repose
 Of such enchanting scene !

XIV.

Is it of war Lord Ronald speaks ?
The blush that dyes his manly cheeks,
The timid look, and downcast eye,
And faltering voice, the theme deny.
 And good King Robert's brow expressed,
He pondered o'er some high request,
 As doubtful to approve ;
Yet in his eye and lip the while
Dwelt the half-pitying glance and smile,
Which manhood's graver mood beguile,
 When lovers talk of love.
Anxious his suit Lord Ronald pled ;—
“ And for my bride betrothed,” he said,
“ My Liege has heard the rumour spread
Of Edith from Artornish fled.
Too hard her fate—I claim no right
To blame her for her hasty flight ;
Be joy and happiness her lot !—
But she hath fled the bridal-knot,
And Lorn recalled his promised plight,
In the assembled chieftains' sight.—

When, to fulfil our fathers' band,
I proffered all I could—my hand—
I was repulsed with scorn :
Mine honour I should ill assert,
And worse the feelings of my heart,
If I should play a suitor's part
Again, to pleasure Lorn."

XV.

"Young Lord," the royal Bruce replied,
"That question must the Church decide ;
Yet seems it hard, since rumours state
Edith takes Clifford for her mate,
The very tie, which she hath broke,
To thee should still be binding yoke.
But, for my sister Isabel—
The mood of woman who can tell ?
I guess the Champion of the Rock,
Victorious in the tourney shock,
That knight unknown to whom the prize
She dealt, had favour in her eyes ;
But since our brother Nigel's fate,
Our ruined house and hapless state,
From worldly joy and hope estranged,
Much is the hapless mourner changed.
Perchance," here smiled the noble King,
"This tale may other musings bring.
Soon shall we know—yon mountains hide
The little convent of Saint Bride ;
There, sent by Edward, she must stay,
Till fate shall give more prosperous day ;
And thither will I bear thy suit,
Nor will thine advocate be mute."

XVI.

As thus they talked in earnest mood,
That speechless boy beside them stood.
He stooped his head against the mast,
And bitter sobs came thick and fast—

A grief that would not be repressed,
But seemed to burst his youthful breast.
His hands, against his forehead held,
As if by force his tears repelled ;
But through his fingers, long and slight,
Fast trilled the drops of crystal bright.
Edward, who walked the deck apart,
First spied this conflict of the heart.
Thoughtless as brave, with bluntness kind
He sought to cheer the sorrower's mind ;
By force the slender hand he drew
From those poor eyes that streamed with dew.
As in his hold the stripling strove
('Twas a rough grasp, though meant in love),
Away his tears the warrior swept,
And bade shame on him that he wept.
" I would to Heaven thy helpless tongue
Could tell me who hath wrought thee wrong !
For, were he of our crew the best,
The insult went not unredressed.
Come, cheer thee ; thou art now of age
To be a warrior's gallant page ;
Thou shalt be mine !—a palfrey fair
O'er hill and holt my boy shall bear,
To hold my bow in hunting grove,
Or speed on errand to my love ;
For well I wot thou wilt not tell
The temple where my wishes dwell."

XVII.

Bruce interposed,—“ Gay Edward, no,
This is no youth to hold thy bow,
To fill thy goblet, or to bear
Thy message light to lighter fair.
Thou art a patron all too wild
And thoughtless, for this orphan child.
Seest thou not how apart he steals,
Keeps lonely couch, and lonely meals ?
Fitter by far in yon calm cell
To tend our sister Isabel,

With Father Augustin to share
 The peaceful change of convent prayer,
 Than wander wild adventures through,
 With such a reckless guide as you."—
 "Thanks, brother!" Edward answered gay,
 "For the high laud thy words convey!
 But we may learn some future day,
 If thou or I can this poor boy
 Protect the best, or best employ.
 Meanwhile, our vessel nears the strand;
 Launch we the boat, and seek the land."

XVIII.

To land King Robert lightly sprung,
 And thrice aloud his bugle rung
 With note prolonged and varied strain,
 Till bold Ben-Ghoil replied again.
 Good Douglas then, and De la Haye,
 Had in a glen a hart at bay,
 And Lennox cheered the laggard hounds,
 When waked that horn the greenwood bounds.
 "It is the foe!" cried Boyd, who came
 In breathless haste with eye on flame,—
 "It is the foe! Each valiant lord
 Fling by his bow, and grasp his sword!"—
 "Not so," replied the good Lord James;
 "That blast no English bugle claims.
 Oft have I heard it fire the fight,
 Cheer the pursuit, or stop the flight.
 Dead were my heart, and deaf mine ear,
 If Bruce should call, nor Douglas hear!
 Each to Loch Ranza's margin spring;
 That blast was winded by the King!" *

XIX.

Fast to their mates the tidings spread,
 And fast to shore the warriors sped.
 Bursting from glen and greenwood tree,
 High waked their loyal jubilee!

* See Note 35.

Around the royal Bruce they crowd;
 And clasped his hands, and wept aloud.
 Veterans of early fields were there,
 Whose helmets pressed their hoary hair,
 Whose swords and axes bore a stain
 From life-blood of the red-haired Dane;
 And boys, whose hands scarce brooked to wield
 The heavy sword or bossy shield.
 Men, too, were there that bore the scars
 Impressed in Albyn's woeful wars—
 At Falkirk's fierce and fatal fight,
 Teyndrum's dread rout, and Methven's flight.
 The might of Douglas there was seen;
 There Lennox with his graceful mien;
 Kirkpatrick, Closeburn's dreaded Knight;
 The Lindsay, fiery, fierce, and light;
 The heir of murdered De la Haye;
 And Boyd the grave, and Seton gay.
 Around their King regained they pressed,
 Wept, shouted, clasped him to their breast,
 And young and old, and serf and lord,
 And he who ne'er unsheathed a sword,
 And he in many a peril tried,
 Alike resolved the brunt to bide,
 And live or die by Bruce's side!

XX. to the warriors

O War! thou hast thy fierce delight,
 Thy gleams of joy, intensely bright!
 Such gleams, as from thy polished shield
 Fly dazzling o'er the battlefield!
 Such transports wake, severe and high,
 Amid the pealing conquest-cry;
 Scarce less, when, after battle lost,
 Muster the remnants of a host,
 And as each comrade's name they tell,
 Who in the well-fought conflict fell,
 Knitting stern brow o'er flashing eye,
 Vow to avenge them or to die!—
 Warriors!—and where are warriors found,

If not on martial Britain's ground?
 And who, when waked with note of fire,
 Love more than they the British lyre?—
 Know ye not,—hearts to honour dear!
 That joy, deep-thrilling, stern, severe,
 At which the heartstrings vibrate high;
 And wake the fountains of the eye?
 And blame ye then the Bruce, if trace
 Of tear is on his manly face,
 When, scanty relics of the train
 That hailed at Scone his early reign,
 This patriot band around him hung,
 And to his knees and bosom clung?
 Blame ye the Bruce?—his brother blamed,
 But shared the weakness, while, ashamed,
 With haughty laugh his head he turned,
 And dashed away the tear he scorned.*

XXI.

"Tis morning, and the convent bell
 Long time had ceased its matin knell,
 Within thy walls, Saint Bride!
 An aged sister sought the cell
 Assigned to Lady Isabel,
 And hurriedly she cried,
 "Haste, gentle Lady, haste!—there waits
 A noble stranger at the gates;
 Saint Bride's poor vot'ress ne'er has seen
 A Knight of such a princely mien.
 His errand, as he bade me tell,
 Is with the Lady Isabel."
 The princess rose, for on her knee
 Low bent she told her rosary,—
 "Let him by thee his purpose teach;
 I may not give a stranger speech."
 "Saint Bride forefend, thou royal Maid!"
 The portress crossed herself, and said,—
 "Not to be prioress might I Debate his will, his suit deny."

* See Note 36.

"Has earthly show then, simple fool,
Power o'er a sister of thy rule,
And art thou like the worldly train,
Subdued by splendours light and vain?"—

XXII.

"No, Lady! in old eyes like mine,
Gauds have no glitter, gems no shine;
Nor grace his rank attendants vain,
One youthful page is all his train.
It is the form, the eye, the word,
The bearing of that stranger Lord;
His stature, manly, bold, and tall,
Built like a castle's battled wall,
Yet moulded in such just degrees,
His giant strength seems lightsome ease.
Close as the tendrils of the vine
His locks upon his forehead twine,
Jet-black, save where some touch of grey
Has ta'en the youthful hue away.
Weather and war their rougher trace
Have left on that majestic face.
But 'tis his dignity of eye!
There, if a suppliant, would I fly,
Secure, 'mid danger, wrongs, and grief,
Of sympathy, redress, relief;
That glance, if guilty, would I dread
More than the doom that spoke me dead!"—
"Enough, enough," the princess cried,
"Tis Scotland's hope, her joy, her pride!
To meaner front was ne'er assigned
Such mastery o'er the common mind—
Bestowed Thy high designs to aid,
How long, O Heaven! how long delayed!—
Haste, Mona, haste, to introduce
My darling brother, royal Bruce!"

XXIII.

They met like friends who part in pain,
And meet in doubtful hope again.

But when subdued that fitful swell,
 The Bruce surveyed the humble cell :—
 “ And this is thine, poor Isabel !—
 That pallet-couch and naked wall,
 For room of state and bed of pall ;
 For costly robes and jewels rare,
 A string of beads and zone of hair ;
 And for the trumpet’s sprightly call
 To sport or banquet, grove or hall,
 The bell’s grim voice divides thy care,
 ’Twixt hours of penitence and prayer !—
 O ill for thee, my royal claim
 From the First David’s sainted name !
 O woe for thee, that while he sought
 His right, thy brother feebly fought ! ”—

XXIV.

“ Now lay these vain regrets aside,
 And be the unshaken Bruce ! ” she cried.
 “ For more I glory to have shared
 The woes thy venturous spirit dared,
 When raising first thy valiant band
 In rescue of thy native land,
 Than had fair Fortune set me down
 The partner of an empire’s crown.
 And grieve not that on Pleasure’s stream
 No more I drive in giddy dream ;
 For Heaven the erring pilot knew,
 And from the gulf the vessel drew ;
 Tried me with judgments stern and great,
 My house’s ruin, thy defeat,
 Poor Nigel’s death, till, tamed, I own,
 My hopes are fixed on Heaven alone,
 Nor e’er shall earthly prospects win
 My heart to this vain world of sin.”—

XXV. HODGKIN

“ Nay, Isabel, for such stern choice,
 First wilt thou wait thy brother’s voice ;
 Then ponder if in convent scene
 No softer thoughts might intervene—

Say they were of that unknown Knight,
Victor in Woodstock's tourney-fight—
Nay, if his name such blush you owe,
Victorious o'er a fairer foe!"

Truly his penetrating eye
Hath caught that blush's passing dye,
Like the last beam of evening thrown
On a white cloud—just seen and gone.
Soon with calm cheek and steady eye,
The princess made composed reply:—
"I guess my brother's meaning well;
For not so silent is the cell,
But we have heard the islesmen all
Arm in thy cause at Ronald's call,
And mine eye proves that Knight unknown
And the brave Island Lord are one.—
Had then his suit been earlier made,
In his own name, with thee to aid
(But that his plighted faith forbade),
I know not—But thy page so near?—
This is no tale for menial's ear."

XXVI.

Still stood that page, as far apart
As the small cell would space afford;
With dizzy eye and bursting heart,
He leant his weight on Bruce's sword,
The Monarch's mantle too he bore,
And drew the fold his visage o'er.

"Fear not for him: in murderous strife,"
Said Bruce, "his warning saved my life;
Full seldom parts he from my side;
And in his silence I confide,
Since he can tell no tale again.
He is a boy of gentle strain,
And I have purposed he shall dwell
In Augustin the chaplain's cell,
And wait on thee, my Isabel.—
Mind not his tears; I've seen them flow,
As in the thaw dissolves the snow.

'Tis a kind youth, but fanciful,
 Unfit against the tide to pull ;
 And those that with the Bruce would sail,
 Must learn to strive with stream and gale.—
 But forward, gentle Isabel,
 My answer for Lord Ronald tell.”—

XXVII.

“ This answer be to Ronald given—
 The heart he asks is fixed on Heaven.
 My love was like a summer flower,
 That withered in the wintry hour,
 Born but of vanity and pride,
 And with these sunny visions died.
 If further press his suit, then say,
 He should his plighted troth obey—
 Troth plighted both with ring and word,
 And sworn on crucifix and sword.
 Oh, shame thee, Robert ! I have seen
 Thou hast a woman's guardian been !
 Even in extremity's dread hour,
 When pressed on thee the Southern power,
 And safety, to all human sight,
 Was only found in rapid flight,
 Thou heardst a wretched female plain
 In agony of travail-pain,
 And thou didst bid thy little hand
 Upon the instant turn and stand,
 And dare the worst the foe might do,
 Rather than, like a knight untrue,
 Leave to pursuers merciless
 A woman in her last distress.*
 And wilt thou now deny thine aid
 To an oppressed and injured maid ;
 Even plead for Ronald's perfidy,
 And press his fickle faith on me?—
 So witness Heaven, as true I vow,
 Had I those earthly feelings now,

* See Note 37.

Which could my former bosom move
Ere taught to set its hopes above,
I'd spurn each proffer he could bring,
Till at my feet he laid the ring,
The ring and spousal contract both,
And fair acquittal of his oath,
By her who brooks his perjured scorn,
The ill-requited Maid of Lorn !”

XXVIII.

With sudden impulse forward sprung
The page, and on her neck he hung ;
Then, recollected instantly,
His head he stooped, and bent his knee,
Kissed twice the hand of Isabel,
Arose, and sudden left the cell.
The princess, loosened from his hold,
Blushed angry at his bearing bold ;
But good King Robert cried,
“ Chafe not ; by signs he speaks his mind :
He heard the plan my care designed,
Nor could his transports hide.
But, sister, now bethink thee well :
No easy choice the convent cell ;
Trust, I shall play no tyrant part,
Either to force thy hand or heart,
Or suffer that Lord Ronald scorn,
Or wrong for thee, the Maid of Lorn.
But think,—not long the time has been
That thou wert wont to sigh unseen,
And wouldst the ditties best approve
That told some lay of hapless love.
Now are thy wishes in thy power,
And thou art bent on cloister bower !
O ! if our Edward knew the change,
How would his busy satire range,
With many a sarcasm varied still
On woman's wish and woman's will !”—

XXIX.

"Brother, I well believe," she said,
 "Even so would Edward's part be played.
 Kindly in heart, in word severe,
 A foe to thought, and grief, and fear,
 He holds his humour uncontrolled ;
 But thou art of another mould.
 Say then to Ronald, as I say,
 Unless before my feet he lay
 The ring which bound the faith he swore,
 By Edith freely yielded o'er,
 He moves his suit to me no more.
 Nor do I promise, even if now
 He stood absolved of spousal vow,
 That I would change my purpose made,
 To shelter me in holy shade.—
 Brother, for little space, farewell !
 To other duties warns the bell."—

XXX.

"Lost to the world," King Robert said,
 When he had left the royal maid,
 "Lost to the world by lot severe,
 Oh what a gem lies buried here,
 Nipped by misfortune's cruel frost,
 The buds of fair affection lost !—
 But what have I with love to do ?
 Far sterner cares my lot pursue.
 Pent in this isle we may not lie,
 Nor would it long our wants supply.
 Right opposite, the mainland towers
 Of my own Turnberry court our powers.
 Might not my father's beadsman hoar,
 Cuthbert, who dwells upon the shore,
 Kindle a signal-flame, to show
 The time propitious for the blow ?—
 It shall be so ; some friend shall bear
 Our mandate with dispatch and care ;
 Edward shall find the messenger.

That fortress ours, the island fleet
May on the coast of Carrick meet.—
O Scotland ! shall it e'er be mine
To wreak thy wrongs in battle-line,
To raise my victor head, and see
Thy hills, thy dales, thy people free,—
That glance of bliss is all I crave
Betwixt my labours and my grave !”
Then down the hill he slowly went,
Oft pausing on the deep descent,
And reached the spot where his bold train
Held rustic camp upon the plain.

CANTO FIFTH.

I.

ON fair Loch Ranza streamed the early day,
Thin wreaths of cottage-smoke are upward curled
From the lone hamlet, which her inland bay
And circling mountains sever from the world.
And there the fisherman his sail unfurled,
The goatherd drove his kids to steep Ben-Ghoil,
Before the hut the dame her spindle twirled,
Courting the sunbeam as she plied her toil,—
For, wake where'er he may, Man wakes to care and coil.

But other duties called each convent maid,
Roused by the summons of the moss-grown bell ;
Sung were the matins, and the mass was said,
And every sister sought her separate cell,
Such was the rule, her rosary to tell.
And Isabel has knelt in lonely prayer ;
The sunbeam, through the narrow lattice, fell
Upon the snowy neck and long dark hair,
As stooped her gentle head in meek devotion there.

II.

She raised her eyes, that duty done,
When glanced upon the pavement stone,

Gemmed and enchased, a golden ring,
 Bound to a scroll with silken string,
 With few brief words inscribed to tell,
 "This for the Lady Isabel."
 Within, the writing further bore,—
 "'Twas with this ring his plight he swore,
 With this his promise I restore ;
 To her who can the heart command,
 Well may I yield the plighted hand,
 And oh ! for better fortune born,
 Grudge not a passing sigh to mourn
 Her who was Edith once of Lorn !"
 One single flash of glad surprise
 Just glanced from Isabel's dark eyes,
 But vanished in the blush of shame,
 That, as its penance, instant came.
 "O thought unworthy of my race !
 Selfish, ungenerous, mean, and base,
 A moment's throb of joy to own,
 That rose upon her hopes o'erthrown !—
 Thou pledge of vows too well believed,
 Of man ingrate and maid deceived,
 Think not thy lustre here shall gain
 Another heart to hope in vain !
 For thou shalt rest, thou tempting gaud,
 Where worldly thoughts are overawed,
 And worldly splendours sink debased."—
 Then by the cross the ring she placed.

III.

Next rose the thought : its owner far,
 How came it here through bolt and bar ?—
 But the dim lattice is ajar,^(and)
 She looks abroad—the morning dew
 A light short step had brushed anew,
 And there were footprints seen
 On the carved buttress rising still,
 Till on the mossy window-sill
 Their track effaced the green.

The ivy twigs were torn and frayed,
As if some climber's steps to aid.
But who the hardy messenger,
Whose venturous path these signs infer?—
"Strange doubts are mine!—Mona, draw nigh—
Nought 'scapes old Mona's curious eye.—
What strangers, gentle mother, say,
Have sought these holy walls to-day?"—
"None, Lady, none of note or name;
Only your brother's foot-page came,
At peep of dawn—I prayed him pass
To chapel where they said the mass;
But like an arrow he shot by,
And tears seemed bursting from his eye."

IV.

The truth at once on Isabel,
As darted by a sunbeam, fell.—
"Tis Edith's self!—her speechless woe,
Her form, her looks, the secret show!—
Instant, good Mona, to the bay,
And to my royal brother say,
I do conjure him seek my cell,
With that mute page he loves so well."—
"What! know'st thou not his warlike host
At break of day has left our coast?
My old eyes saw them from the tower.
At eve they couched in greenwood bower,
At dawn a bugle-signal, made
By their bold Lord, their ranks arrayed;
Up sprung the spears through bush and tree,—
No time for benedicite!
Like deer that, rousing from their lair,
Just shake the dewdrops from their hair,
And toss their armèd crests aloft,
Such matins theirs!"—"Good mother, soft—
Where does my brother bend his way?"—
"As I have heard, for Brodick Bay,
Across the isle—of barks a score

Lie there, 'tis said, to waft them o'er,
 On sudden news, to Carrick-shore."—
 "If such their purpose, deep the need,"
 Said anxious Isabel, "of speed!
 Call Father Augustin, good dame."
 The nun obeyed, the Father came.

V.

"Kind Father, hie without delay,
 Across the hills, to Brodick Bay!
 This message to the Bruce be given:
 I pray him, by his hopes of heaven,
 That, till he speak with me, he stay!
 Or, if his haste brook no delay,
 That he deliver, on my suit,
 Into thy charge that stripling mute.
 Thus prays his sister Isabel,
 For causes more than she may tell.
 Away, good Father!—take good heed
 That life and death are on thy speed."
 His cowl the good old priest did on,
 Took his piked staff and sandalled shoon,
 And, like a palmer bent by eld,
 O'er moss and moor his journey held.

VI.

Heavy and dull the foot of age,
 And rugged was the pilgrimage;
 But none was there beside, whose care
 Might such important message bear.
 Through birchen copse he wandered slow,
 Stunted and sapless, thin and low;
 By many a mountain stream he passed,
 From the tall cliffs in tumult cast,
 Dashing to foam their waters dun,
 And sparkling in the summer sun.
 Round his grey head the wild curlew
 In many a fearless circle flew.
 O'er chasms he passed, where fractures wide
 Craved wary eye and ample stride;*

* See Note 38.

He crossed his brow beside the stone
 Where Druids erst heard victims groan,
 And at the cairns upon the wild,
 O'er many a heathen hero piled,*
 He breathed a timid prayer for those
 Who died ere Shiloh's sun arose.
 Beside Macfarlane's Cross he stayed,
 There told his hours within the shade;
 And at the stream his thirst allayed.
 Thence onward journeying, slowly still,
 As evening closed he reached the hill,
 Where, rising through the woodland green,
 Old Brodick's Gothic towers were seen.
 From Hastings, late their English lord,
 Douglas had won them by the sword.†
 The sun that sunk behind the isle
 Now tinged them with a parting smile.

VII. Did not the rays of day

But though the beams of light decay,
 'Twas bustle all in Brodick Bay.
 The Bruce's followers crowd the shore,
 And boats and barges some unmoor,
 Some raise the sail, some seize the oar;
 Their eyes oft turned where glimmered far
 What might have seemed an early star
 On heaven's blue arch, save that its light
 Was all too flickering, fierce, and bright.

Far distant in the south, the ray
 Shone pale amid retiring day;

But as, on Carrick shore,
 Dim seem in outline faintly blue,
 The shades of evening closer drew,
 It kindled more and more.

The Monk's slow steps now press the sands,
 And now amid a scene he stands

Full strange to churchman's eye;
 Warriors, who, arming for the fight,
 Rivet and clasp their harness light,

* See Note 39. † See Note 40.

And twinkling spears, and axes bright,
 And helmets flashing high.
 Oft, too, with unaccustomed ears,
 A language much unmeet he hears,*
 While, hastening all on board,
 As stormy as the swelling surge
 That mixed its roar, the leaders urge
 Their followers to the ocean verge,
 With many a haughty word.

VIII.

Through that wild throng the Father passed,
 And reached the Royal Bruce at last.
 He leaned against a stranded boat
 That the approaching tide must float,
 And counted every rippling wave,
 As higher yet her sides they lave;
 And oft the distant fire he eyed,
 And closer yet his hauberk tied,
 And loosened in its sheath his brand.
 Edward and Lennox were at hand,
 Douglas and Ronald had the care
 The soldiers to the barks to share.—
 The Monk approached, and homage paid—
 “And art thou come,” King Robert said,
 “So far to bless us ere we part?”—
 “My Liege, and with a loyal heart!—
 But other charge I have to tell,”
 And spoke the hest of Isabel.
 “Now by Saint Giles,” the Monarch cried,
 “This moves me much!—this morning tide,
 I sent the stripling to Saint Bride,
 With my commandment there to bide.”—
 “Thither he came the portress showed;
 But there, my Liege, made brief abode.”—

IX.

“’Twas I,” said Edward, “found employ
 Of nobler import for the boy.

* See Note 41.

Deep pondering in my anxious mind
A fitting messenger to find
To bear thy written mandate o'er
To Cuthbert on the Carrick shore,
I chanced, at early dawn, to pass
The chapel gate to snatch a mass.
I found the stripling on a tomb
Low-seated, weeping for the doom
That gave his youth to convent-gloom.
I told my purpose, and his eyes
Flashed joyful at the glad surprise.
He bounded to the skiff, the sail
Was spread before a prosp'rous gale;
And well my charge he hath obeyed,
For, see! the ruddy signal made
That Clifford, with his merry-men all,
Guards carelessly our father's hall."—

X.

- "O wild of thought, and hard of heart!"
Answered the Monarch, "on a part
Of such deep danger to employ
A mute, an orphan, and a boy!
Unfit for flight, unfit for strife,
Without a tongue to plead for life!
Now, were my right restored by Heaven,
Edward, my crown I would have given,
Ere, thrust on such adventure wild,
I perilled thus the helpless child."
Offended half, and half submissive,
"Brother and Liege, of blame like this,"
Edward replied, "I little dreamed.
A stranger messenger, I deemed,
Might safest seek the beadsman's cell,
Where all thy squires are known so well.
Noteless his presence, sharp his sense,
His imperfection his defence.
If seen, none can his errand guess;
If ta'en, his words no tale express.

Methinks, too, yonder beacon's shine
 Might expiate greater fault than mine."—
 "Rash," said King Robert, "was the deed;
 But it is done. Embark with speed!—
 Good Father, say to Isabel
 How this unhappy chance befell;
 If well we thrive on yonder shore,
 Soon shall my care her page restore.
 Our greeting to our sister bear,
 And think of us in mass and prayer."—

XI. End of the second of

"Ay!" said the Priest,—“while this poor hand
 Can chalice raise or cross command,
 While my old voice has accents' use,
 Can Augustin forget the Bruce!”
 Then to his side Lord Ronald pressed,
 And whispered, “Bear thou this request,
 That when by Bruce's side I fight
 For Scotland's crown and freedom's right,
 The princess grace her knight to bear
 Some token of her favouring care;
 It shall be shown where England's best
 May shrink to see it on my crest.
 And for the boy—since weightier care
 For royal Bruce the times prepare,
 The helpless youth is Ronald's charge,
 His couch my plaid, his fence my targe.”
 He ceased; for many an eager hand
 Had urged the barges from the strand.
 Their number was a score and ten;
 They bore thrice threescore chosen men.
 With such small force did Bruce at last
 The die for death or empire cast!

XII.

Now on the darkening main afloat,
 Ready and manned, rocks every boat;
 Beneath their oars the ocean's might
 Was dashed to sparks of glimmering light.

Faint and more faint, as off they bore,
 Their armour glanced against the shore,
 And, mingled with the dashing tide,
 Their murmuring voices distant died.
 "God speed them!" said the Priest, as dark
 On distant billows glides each bark.
 "O Heaven! when swords for freedom shine,
 And monarch's right, the cause is Thine!
 Edge doubly every patriot blow!
 Beat down the banners of the foe!
 And be it to the nations known,
 That victory is from God alone!"
 As up the hill his path he drew,
 He turned his blessings to renew—
 Oft turned, till on the darkened coast
 All traces of their course were lost;
 Then slowly bent to Brodick tower,
 To shelter for the evening hour.

XIII.

In night the fairy prospects sink,
 Where Cumray's isles with verdant link
 Close the fair entrance of the Clyde;
 The woods of Bute, no more descried,
 Are gone; and on the placid sea
 The rowers ply their task with glee,
 While hands that knightly lances bore
 Impatient aid the labouring oar.
 The half-faced moon shone dim and pale,
 And glanced against the whitened sail;
 But on that ruddy beacon-light
 Each steersman kept the helm aright,
 And oft, for such the King's command,
 That all at once might reach the strand,
 From boat to boat loud shout and hail
 Warned them to crowd or slacken sail.
 South and by west the armada bore,
 And near at length the Carrick shore.
 As less and less the distance grows,
 High and more high the beacon rose;

The light, that seemed a twinkling star,
Now blazed portentous, fierce, and far.
Dark-red the heaven above it glowed,
Dark-red the sea beneath it flowed ;
Red rose the rocks on ocean's brim,
In blood-red light her islets swim ;
Wild scream the dazzled sea-fowl gave,
Dropped from their crags on plashing wave ;
The deer to distant covert drew,
The blackcock deemed it day, and crew.
Like some tall castle given to flame,
O'er half the land the lustre came.
" Now, good my Liege, and brother sage,
What think ye of mine elfin page ? "—
" Row on ! " the noble King replied,
" We'll learn the truth whate'er betide ;
Yet sure the beadsman and the child
Could ne'er have waked that beacon wild."

XIV.

With that the boats approached the land,
But Edward's grounded on the sand.
The eager Knight leaped in the sea
Waist-deep, and first on shore was he,
Though every barge's hardy band
Contended which should gain the land—
When that strange light, which, seen afar,
Seemed steady as the polar star,
Now, like a prophet's fiery chair,
Seemed travelling the realms of air.
Wide o'er the sky the splendour glows,
As that portentous meteor rose ;
Helm, axe, and falchion glittered bright,
And in the red and dusky light
His comrade's face each warrior saw,
Nor marvelled it was pale with awe.
Then high in air the beams were lost,
And darkness sunk upon the coast.—
Ronald to Heaven a prayer addressed,
And Douglas crossed his dauntless breast ;

"Saint James protect us!" Lennox cried;
But reckless Edward spoke aside,
"Deem'st thou, Kirkpatrick, in that flame
Red Comyn's angry spirit came;
Or would thy dauntless heart endure
Once more to make assurance sure?"—
"Hush!" said the Bruce, "we soon shall know
If this be sorcerer's empty show,
Or stratagem of southern foe.
The moon shines out—upon the sand
Let every leader rank his band."

XV.

Faintly the moon's pale beams supply
That ruddy light's unnatural dye;
The dubious cold reflection lay
On the wet sands and quiet bay.
Beneath the rocks King Robert drew
His scattered files to order due,
Till shield compact and serried spear
In the cool light shone blue and clear.
Then down a path that sought the tide
That speechless page was seen to glide;
He knelt him lowly on the sand,
And gave a scroll to Robert's hand.
"A torch!" the Monarch cried; "what, ho!
Now shall we Cuthbert's tidings know."
But evil news the letters bare:
The Clifford's force was strong and ware;
Augmented, too, that very morn,
By mountaineers who came with Lorn.
Long harrowed by oppressor's hand,
Courage and faith had fled the land,
And over Carrick, dark and deep,
Had sunk dejection's iron sleep.
Cuthbert had seen that beacon-flame,
Unwitting from what source it came.
Doubtful of perilous event,
Edward's mute messenger he sent,
If Bruce deceived should venture o'er,
To warn him from the fatal shore.

XVI.

As round the torch the leaders crowd,
Bruce read these chilling news aloud.
“What counsel, nobles, have we now?—
To ambush us in greenwood bough,
And take the chance which fate may send
To bring our enterprise to end;
Or shall we turn us to the main,
As exiles, and embark again?”
Answered fierce Edward, “Hap what may,
In Carrick, Carrick’s Lord must stay.
I would not minstrels told the tale,
Wild-fire or meteor made us quail.”
Answered the Douglas, “If my Liege
May win yon walls by storm or siege,
Then were each brave and patriot heart
Kindled of new for loyal part.”
Answered Lord Ronald, “Not for shame
Would I that aged Torquil came,
And found, for all our empty boast,
Without a blow we fled the coast.
I will not credit that this land,
So famed for warlike heart and hand,
The nurse of Wallace and of Bruce,
Will long with tyrants hold a truce.”—
“Prove we our fate—the brunt we’ll bide!”
So Boyd and Haye and Lennox cried;
So said, so vowed, the leaders all.
So Bruce resolved: “And in my hall,
Since the bold Southern make their home,
The hour of payment soon shall come,
When, with a rough and rugged host,
Clifford may reckon to his cost.
Meantime, through well-known bosk and dell,
I’ll lead where we may shelter well.”

XVII.

Now ask you whence that wondrous light,
Whose fairy glow beguiled their sight?—

It ne'er was known.* Yet grey-haired eld
 A superstitious credence held,
 That never did a mortal hand
 Wake its broad glare on Carrick strand;
 Nay, and that, on the self-same night
 When Bruce crossed o'er, still gleams the light.
 Yearly it gleams o'er mount and moor,
 And glittering wave and crimsoned shore;
 But whether beam celestial, lent
 By Heaven to aid the King's descent,
 Or fire hell-kindled from beneath
 To lure him to defeat and death,
 Or were it but some meteor strange,
 Of such as oft through midnight range,
 Startling the traveller late and lone,
 I know not—and it ne'er was known.

XVIII.

Now up the rocky pass they drew,
 And Ronald, to his promise true,
 Still made his arm the stripling's stay
 To aid him on the rugged way.
 "Now cheer thee, simple Amadine!
 Why throbs that silly heart of thine?"—
 That name the pirates to their slave
 (In Gaelic 'tis the Changeling) gave.
 "Dost thou not rest thee on my arm?
 Do not my plaid-folds hold thee warm?
 Hath not the wild bull's treble hide
 This targe for thee and me supplied?
 Is not Clan-Colla's sword of steel?
 And, trembler, canst thou terror feel?
 Cheer thee, and still that throbbing heart;
 From Ronald's guard thou shalt not part."—
 O! many a shaft, at random sent,
 Finds mark the archer little meant!
 And many a word, at random spoken,
 May soothe or wound a heart that's broken!

* See Note 42.

Half soothed, half grieved, half terrified,
Close drew the page to Ronald's side ;
A wild delirious thrill of joy
Was in that hour of agony,
As up the steepy pass he strove—
Fear, toil, and sorrow lost in love !

XIX.

The barrier of that iron shore,
The rock's steep ledge, is now climbed o'er ;
And from the castle's distant wall,
From tower to tower, the warders call :
The sound swings over land and sea,
And marks a watchful enemy.
They gained the Chase, a wide domain
Left for the Castle's silvan reign *
(Seek not the scene—the axe, the plough,
The boor's dull fence, have marred it now) ;
But then, soft swept in velvet green
The plain with many a glade between,
Whose tangled alleys far invade
The depth of the brown forest shade.
Here the tall fern obscured the lawn,
Fair shelter for the sportive fawn ;
There, tufted close with copsewood green,
Was many a swelling hillock seen,
And all around was verdure meet
For pressure of the fairies' feet.
The glossy holly loved the park,
The yew-tree lent its shadow dark,
And many an old oak, worn and bare,
With all its shivered boughs, was there.
Lovely between, the moonbeams fell
On lawn and hillock, glade and dell.
The gallant Monarch sighed to see
These glades, so loved in childhood free,
Bethinking that, as outlaw now,
He ranged beneath the forest bough.

* See Note 43.

XX.

Fast o'er the moonlit Chase they sped.
Well knew the band that measured tread,
When, in retreat or in advance,
The serried warriors move at once ;
And evil were the luck, if dawn
Descried them on the open lawn.
Copses they traverse, brooks they cross,
Strain up the bank and o'er the moss.
From the exhausted page's brow
Cold drops of toil are streaming now ;
With effort faint and lengthened pause,
His weary step the stripling draws.
"Nay, droop not yet !" the warrior said.
"Come, let me give thee ease and aid !
Strong are mine arms, and little care
A weight so slight as thine to bear.—
What ! wilt thou not ?—capricious boy !—
Then thine own limbs and strength employ.
Pass but this night, and pass thy care,
I'll place thee with a lady fair,
Where thou shalt tune thy lute to tell
How Ronald loves fair Isabel !"—
Worn out, disheartened, and dismayed,
Here Amadine let go the plaid ;
His trembling limbs their aid refuse—
He sunk among the midnight dews !

XXI.

What may be done ? The night is gone—
The Bruce's band moves swiftly on—
Eternal shame, if at the brunt
Lord Ronald grace not battle's front !—
"See yonder oak, within whose trunk
Decay a darkened cell hath sunk :
Enter, and rest thee there a space,
Wrap in my plaid thy limbs, thy face.
I will not be, believe me, far ;
But must not quit the ranks of war.

Well will I mark the bosky bourn,
 And soon, to guard thee hence, return.—
 Nay, weep not so, thou simple boy !
 But sleep in peace, and wake in joy.”
 In silvan lodging close bestowed
 He placed the page, and onward strode
 With strength put forth, o’er moss and brook,
 And soon the marching band o’ertook.

XXII. And still quon

Thus strangely left, long sobbed and wept
 The page, till, wearied out, he slept.
 A rough voice waked his dream—“Nay, here,
 Here by this thicket, passed the deer—
 Beneath that oak old Ryno staid—
 What have we here?—a Scottish plaid,
 And in its folds a stripling laid !
 Come forth ! thy name and business tell !—
 What, silent ?—then I guess thee well
 The spy that sought old Cuthbert’s cell,
 Wafted from Arran yestermorn.—
 Come, comrades, we will straight return.
 Our Lord may choose the rack should teach
 To this young lurcher use of speech.
 Thy bowstring, till I bind him fast.”—
 “Nay, but he weeps and stands aghast.
 Unbound we’ll lead him, fear it not ;
 ’Tis a fair stripling, though a Scot.”
 The hunters to the castle sped,
 And there the hapless captive led.

XXIII.

Stout Clifford in the castle-court
 Prepared him for the morning sport ;
 And now with Lorn held deep discourse,
 Now gave command for hound and horse.
 War-steeds and palfreys pawed the ground,
 And many a deer-dog howled around.
 To Amadine, Lorn’s well-known word
 Replying to that Southern lord,

Mixed with this clanging din, might seem
The phantasm of a fevered dream.
The tone upon his ringing ears
Came like the sounds which fancy hears,
When in rude waves or roaring winds
Some words of woe the muser finds,
Until more loudly and more near
Their speech arrests the page's ear.

XXIV.

"And was she thus," said Clifford, "lost?
The priest should rue it to his cost!
What says the Monk?"—"The holy Sire
Owns that, in masquer's quaint attire,
She sought his skiff, disguised, unknown
To all except to him alone.
But, says the priest, a bark from Lorn
Laid them aboard that very morn,
And pirates seized her for their prey.
He proffered ransom-gold to pay,
And they agreed; but, ere told o'er,
The winds blow loud, the billows roar:
They severed, and they met no more.
He deems—such tempest vexed the coast—
Ship, crew, and fugitive were lost.—
So let it be, with the disgrace
And scandal of her lofty race!
Thrice better she had ne'er been born,
Than brought her infamy on Lorn!"

XXV.

Lord Clifford now the captive spied;—
"Whom, Herbert, hast thou there?" he cried.—
"A spy we seized within the Chase,
A hollow oak his lurking-place."
"What tidings can the youth afford?"—
"He plays the mute."—"Then noose a cord—
Unless brave Lorn reverse the doom
For his plaid's sake."—"Clan-Colla's loom,"

Said Lorn, whose careless glances trace
Rather the vesture than the face—
“Clan-Colla’s dames such tartans twine ;
Wearer nor plaid claims care of mine.
Give him, if my advice you crave,
His own scathed oak ; and let him wave
In air, unless, by terror wrung,
A frank confession find his tongue.
Nor shall he die without his rite ;—
Thou, Angus Roy, attend the sight,
And give Clan-Colla’s dirge thy breath,
As they convey him to his death.”—
“O brother ! cruel to the last !”—
Through the poor captive’s bosom passed
The thought ; but, to his purpose true,
He said not, though he sighed, “Adieu !”

XXVI.

And will he keep his purpose still
In sight of that last closing ill,
When one poor breath, one single word,
May freedom, safety, life afford ?
Can he resist the instinctive call
For life that bids us barter all ?—
Love, strong as death, his heart hath steeled,
His nerves hath strung—he will not yield,
Since that poor breath, that little word,
May yield Lord Ronald to the sword !—
Clan-Colla’s dirge is pealing wide,
The grisly headsman’s by his side ;
Along the greenwood Chase they bend,
And now their march has ghastly end !
That old and shattered oak beneath,
They destine for the place of death.—
What thoughts are his, while all in vain
His eye for aid explores the plain ?
What thoughts, while, with a dizzy ear,
He hears the death-prayer muttered near ?
And must he die such death accurst,
Or will that bosom-secret burst ?

Cold on his brow breaks terror's dew,
His trembling lips are livid blue ;
The agony of parting life
Has nought to match that moment's strife.

XXVII.

But other witnesses are nigh,
Who mock at fear and death defy !
Soon as the dire lament was played,
It waked the lurking ambuscade.
The Island Lord looked forth, and spied
The cause, and loud in fury cried,
" By Heaven they lead the page to die,
And mock me in his agony !
They shall abye it !"—On his arm
Bruce laid strong grasp, " They shall not harm
A ringlet of the stripling's hair ;
But, till I give the word, forbear.—
Douglas, lead fifty of our force
Up yonder hollow water-course,
And couch thee midway on the wold,
Between the flyers and their hold.
A spear above the copse displayed,
Be signal of the ambush made.—
Edward, with forty spearmen, straight
Through yonder copse approach the gate,
And, when thou hear'st the battle din,
Rush forward, and the passage win,
Secure the drawbridge—storm the port—
And man and guard the castle court.—
The rest move slowly forth with me,
In shelter of the forest tree,
Till Douglas at his post I see."

XXVIII.

Like war-horse eager to rush on,
Compelled to wait the signal blown,
Hid, and scarce hid, by greenwood bough,
Trembling with rage, stands Ronald now,

And in his grasp his sword gleams blue,
 Soon to be dyed with deadlier hue.—
 Meanwhile the Bruce, with steady eye,
 Sees the dark death-train moving by,
 And heedful measures oft the space
 The Douglas and his band must trace,
 Ere they can reach their destined ground.
 Now sinks the dirge's wailing sound,
 Now clusters round the direful tree
 That slow and solemn company,
 While hymn mistuned and muttered prayer
 The victim for his fate prepare.—
 What glances o'er the greenwood shade?—
 The spear that marks the ambushade!—
 "Now, noble Chief! I leave thee loose;
 Upon them, Ronald!" said the Bruce.

XXIX.

"The Bruce, the Bruce!" to well-known cry
 His native rocks and woods reply.
 "The Bruce, the Bruce!" in that dread word
 The knell of hundred deaths was heard.
 The astonished Southern gazed at first,
 Where the wild tempest was to burst,
 That waked in that presaging name.
 Before, behind, around it came!
 Half-armed, surprised, on every side
 Hemmed in, hewed down, they bled and died.
 Deep in the ring the Bruce engaged,
 And fierce Clan-Colla's broadsword raged!
 Full soon the few who fought were sped,
 Nor better was their lot who fled,
 And met, 'mid terror's wild career,
 The Douglas's redoubted spear!
 Two hundred yeomen on that morn
 The castle left, and none return.

XXX.

Not on their flight pressed Ronald's brand,
 A gentler duty claimed his hand.

He raised the page, where on the plain
His fear had sunk him with the slain ;
And twice, that morn, surprise well near
Betrayed the secret kept by fear.
Once, when, with life returning, came
To the boy's lip Lord Ronald's name,
And hardly recollection drowned
The accents in a murmuring sound ;
And once, when scarce he could resist
The Chieftain's care to loose the vest,
Drawn tightly o'er his labouring breast.
But then the Bruce's bugle blew,
For martial work was yet to do.

XXXI.

A harder task fierce Edward waits.
Ere signal given, the castle gates
His fury had assailed—
Such was his wonted reckless mood ;
Yet desperate valour oft made good,
Even by its daring, venture rude,
Where prudence might have failed.
Upon the bridge his strength he threw,
And struck the iron chain in two
By which its planks arose ;
The warder next his axe's edge
Struck down upon the threshold ledge,
'Twixt door and post a ghastly wedge !
The gate they may not close.
Well fought the Southern in the fray,
Clifford and Lorn fought well that day ;
But stubborn Edward forced his way
Against a hundred foes.
Loud came the cry, "The Bruce, the Bruce !"
No hope or in defence or truce,
Fresh combatants pour in ;
Mad with success, and drunk with gore,
They drive the struggling foe before,
And ward on ward they win.
Unsparring was the vengeful sword,

And limbs were lopped and life-blood poured ;
 The cry of death and conflict roared,
 And fearful was the din !
 The startling horses plunged and flung,
 Clamoured the dogs till turrets rung,
 Nor sunk the fearful cry
 Till not a foeman was there found
 Alive, save those who on the ground
 Groaned in their agony !

XXXII.

The valiant Clifford is no more,—
 On Ronald's broadsword streamed his gore.
 But better hap had he of Lorn,
 Who, by the foemen backward borne,
 Yet gained with slender train the port,
 Where lay his bark beneath the fort,
 And cut the cable loose.
 Short were his shrift in that debate,
 That hour of fury and of fate,
 If Lorn encountered Bruce !
 Then long and loud the victor shout
 From turret and from tower rung out,
 The rugged vaults replied ;
 And from the donjon tower on high,
 The men of Carrick may descry
 Saint Andrew's cross, in blazonry
 Of silver, waving wide !

XXXIII.

The Bruce hath won his father's hall !*—
 " Welcome, brave friends and comrades all,
 Welcome to mirth and joy !
 The first, the last, is welcome here,
 From lord and chieftain, prince and peer,
 To this poor speechless boy.
 Great God ! once more my sire's abode
 Is mine—behold the floor I trode
 In tottering infancy !

* See Note 44.

And there the vaulted arch, whose sound
Echoed my joyous shout and bound
In boyhood, and that rung around

To youth's unthinking glee!

O first, to Thee, all-gracious Heaven,
Then to my friends, my thanks be given!"—
He paused a space, his brow he crossed—
Then on the board his sword he tossed,
Yet steaming hot; with Southern gore
From hilt to point 'twas crimsoned o'er.

XXXIV.

"Bring here," he said, "the mazers four,
My noble fathers loved of yore;
Thrice let them circle round the board,
The pledge, fair Scotland's rights restored!
And he whose lips shall touch the wine
Without a vow as true as mine,
To hold both lands and life at nought,
Until her freedom shall be bought,
Be brand of a disloyal Scot
And lasting infamy his lot!
Sit, gentle friends! our hour of glee
Is brief, we'll spend it joyously!
Blithest of all the sun's bright beams,
When betwixt storm and storm he gleams:
Well is our country's work begun,
But more, far more, must yet be done!—
Speed messengers the country through;
Arouse old friends, and gather new.
Warn Lanark's knights to gird their mail;
Rouse the brave sons of Teviotdale;
Let Ettrick's archers sharp their darts,*
The fairest forms, the truest hearts!
Call all, call all! from Reedswair-path
To the wild confines of Cape Wrath;
Wide let the news through Scotland ring,
The Northern Eagle claps his wing!"

* See Note 45.

CANTO SIXTH.

I. ———

O WHO, that shared them, ever shall forget
 The emotions of the spirit-rousing time,
 When breathless in the mart the couriers met,
 Early and late, at evening and at prime ;
 When the loud cannon and the merry chime
 Hailed news on news, as field on field was won,
 When Hope, long doubtful, soared at length sublime,
 And our glad eyes, awake as day begun,
 Watched Joy's broad banner rise, to meet the rising sun !

O these were hours, when thrilling joy repaid
 A long, long course of darkness, doubts, and fears !
 The heart-sick faintness of the hope delayed,
 The waste, the woe, the bloodshed, and the tears,
 That tracked with terror twenty rolling years,
 All was forgot in that blithe jubilee !
 Her downcast eye even pale Affliction rears,
 To sigh a thankful prayer, amid the glee,
 That hailed the Despot's fall, and peace and liberty !

Such news o'er Scotland's hills triumphant rode,
 When 'gainst the invaders turned the battle's scale,
 When Bruce's banner had victorious flowed
 O'er Loudoun's mountain, and in Ury's vale ;*
 When English blood oft deluged Douglas-dale,†
 And fiery Edward routed stout St. John,‡
 When Randolph's war-cry swelled the southern gale,§
 And many a fortress, town, and tower was won,
 And Fame still sounded forth fresh deeds of glory done.

II.

Blithe tidings flew from baron's tower
 To peasant's cot, to forest-bower,
 And waked the solitary cell
 Where lone Saint Bride's recluses dwell.

* See Note 46. † See Note 47. ‡ See Note 48. § See Note 49.

Princess no more, fair Isabel,
A vot'ress of the order now,
Say, did the rule that bid thee wear
Dim veil and woollen scapulare,
And reft thy locks of dark-brown hair,
That stern and rigid vow,
Did it condemn the transport high
Which glistened in thy watery eye,
When minstrel or when palmer told
Each fresh exploit of Bruce the bold?—
And whose the lovely form, that shares
Thy anxious hopes, thy fears, thy prayers?
No sister she of convent shade,
So say these locks in lengthened braid,
So say the blushes and the sighs,
The tremors that unbidden rise,
When, mingled with the Bruce's fame,
The brave Lord Ronald's praises came.

III.

Believe, his father's castle won,
And his bold enterprise begun,
That Bruce's earliest cares restore
The speechless page to Arran's shore.
Nor think that long the quaint disguise
Concealed her from her sister's eyes;
And sister-like in love they dwell
In that lone convent's silent cell.
There Bruce's slow assent allows
Fair Isabel the veil and vows;
And there, her sex's dress regained,
The lovely maid of Lorn remained,
Unnamed, unknown, while Scotland far
Resounded with the din of war;
And many a month, and many a day,
In calm seclusion wore away.

IV.

These days, these months, to years had worn,
When tidings of high weight were borne

To that lone island's shore ;[‡]
 Of all the Scottish conquests made
 By the first Edward's ruthless blade,
 His son retained no more;
 Northward of Tweed, but Stirling's towers,
 Beleaguered by King Robert's powers ;
 And they took term of truce,*
 If England's King should not relieve
 The siege ere John the Baptist's eve,
 To yield them to the Bruce.
 England was roused—on every side
 Courier and post and herald hied,
 To summon prince and peer,
 At Berwick bounds to meet their Liege,
 Prepared to raise fair Stirling's siege,
 With buckler, brand, and spear.
 The term was nigh—they mustered fast,
 By beacon and by bugle-blast
 Forth marshalled for the field ;
 There rode each knight of noble name,
 There England's hardy archers came ;
 The land they trod seemed all on flame
 With banner, blade, and shield !
 And not famed England's powers alone,
 Renowned in arms, the summons own ;
 For Neustria's knights obeyed,
 Gasconne hath lent her horsemen good,
 And Cambria, but of late subdued,
 Sent forth her mountain-multitude,†
 And Connoght poured from waste and wood
 Her hundred tribes, whose sceptre rude
 Dark Eth O'Connor swayed.‡

[V.]

Right to devoted Caledon
 The storm of war rolls slowly on,
 With menace deep and dread ;
 So the dark clouds, with gathering power,
 Suspend awhile the threatened shower,

* See Note 50.

Till every peak and summit lower
 Round the pale pilgrim's head.
 Not with such pilgrim's startled eye
 King Robert marked the tempest nigh !
 Resolved the brunt to bide,
 His royal summons warned the land,
 That all who owned their King's command
 Should instant take the spear and brand,
 To combat at his side.
 Oh who may tell the sons of fame
 That at King Robert's bidding came,
 To battle for the right !
 From Cheviot to the shores of Ross,
 From Solway Sands to Marshal's Moss,
 All bouned them for the fight.
 Such news the royal courier tells
 Who came to rouse dark Arran's dells.
 But further tidings must the ear
 Of Isabel in secret hear ;
 These in her cloister walk, next morn,
 Thus shared she with the Maid of Lorn : —

VI.

" My Edith, can I tell how dear
 Our intercourse of hearts sincere
 Hath been to Isabel ? —
 Judge then the sorrow of my heart,
 When I must say the words, We part !
 The cheerless convent-cell
 Was not, sweet maiden, made for thee ;
 Go thou where thy vocation free
 On happier fortunes fell.
 Nor, Edith, judge thyself betrayed,
 Though Robert knows that Lorn's high Maid
 And his poor silent page were one.
 Versed in the fickle heart of man,
 Earnest and anxious hath he looked
 How Ronald's heart the message brooked
 That gave him, with her last farewell,
 The charge of Sister Isabel,

To think upon thy better right,
 And keep the faith his promise plight.
 Forgive him, for thy sister's sake,
 At first if vain repinings wake—

Long since that mood is gone :
 Now dwells he on thy juster claims,
 And oft his breach of faith he blames—
 Forgive him for thine own !”—

VII.

“ No ! never to Lord Ronald's bower
 Will I again as paramour ”—
 “ Nay, hush thee, too impatient maid,
 Until my final tale be said !—
 The good King Robert would engage
 Edith once more his elfin page,
 By her own heart and her own eye
 Her lover's penitence to try :
 Safe in his royal charge, and free,
 Should such thy final purpose be,
 Again unknown to seek the cell,
 And live and die with Isabel.”
 Thus spoke the maid—King Robert's eye
 Might have some glance of policy :
 Dunstaffnage had the Monarch ta'en,
 And Lorn had owned King Robert's reign ;
 Her brother had to England fled,
 And there in banishment was dead ;
 Ample, through exile, death, and flight,
 O'er tower and land was Edith's right ;
 This ample right o'er tower and land
 Were safe in Ronald's faithful hand.

VIII.

Embarrassed eye and blushing cheek
 Pleasure, and shame, and fear bespeak !
 Yet much the reasoning Edith made :
 “ Her sister's faith she must upbraid,
 Who gave such secret, dark and dear,
 In council to another's ear.

Why should she leave the peaceful cell?—
How should she part with Isabel?—
How wear that strange attire agen?—
How risk herself 'midst martial men?—
And how be guarded on the way?—
At least she might entreat delay.”
Kind Isabel, with secret smile,
Saw and forgave the maiden's wile,
Reluctant to be thought to move
At the first call of truant love.

IX.

Oh, blame her not!—when zephyrs wake,
The aspen's trembling leaves must shake;
When beams the sun through April's shower,
It needs must bloom, the violet flower;
And Love, howe'er the maiden strive,
Must with reviving hope revive!
A thousand soft excuses came
To plead his cause 'gainst virgin shame:
Pledged by their sires in earliest youth,
He had her plighted faith and truth.
Then, 'twas her Liege's strict command,
And she, beneath his royal hand,
A ward in person and in land.
And, last, she was resolved to stay
Only brief space—one little day—
Close hidden in her safe disguise
From all, but most from Ronald's eyes—
But once to see him more!—nor blame
Her wish—to hear him name her name!—
Then, to bear back to solitude
The thought, he had his falsehood rued!
But Isabel, who long had seen
Her pallid cheek and pensive mien,
And well herself the cause might know,
Though innocent, of Edith's woe,
Joyed, generous, that revolving time
Gave means to expiate the crime.

High glowed her bosom as she said,
 "Well shall her sufferings be repaid!"—
 Now came the parting hour—a band
 From Arran's mountains left the land;
 Their chief, Fitz-Louis,* had the care
 The speechless Amadine to bear
 To Bruce, with honour, as behoved
 To page the Monarch dearly loved.

X.

The King had deemed the maiden bright
 Should reach him long before the fight;
 But storms and fate her course delay—
 It was on eve of battle-day
 When o'er the Gillies'-hill she rode.
 The landscape like a furnace glowed,
 And far as e'er the eye was borne
 The lances waved like autumn corn.
 In battles four beneath their eye
 The forces of King Robert lie:†
 And one below the hill was laid,
 Reserved for rescue and for aid;
 And three, advanced, formed vaward line,
 'Twixt Bannock's brook and Ninian's shrine.
 Detached was each, yet each so nigh
 As well might mutual aid supply.
 Beyond, the Southern host appears,
 A boundless wilderness of spears,
 Whose verge or rear the anxious eye
 Strove far, but strove in vain, to spy.
 Thick flashing in the evening beam,
 Glaives, lances, bills, and banners gleam;
 And where the heaven joined with the hill
 Was distant armour flashing still,
 So wide, so far, the boundless host
 Seemed in the blue horizon lost.

XI.

Down from the hill the maiden passed,
 At the wild show of war aghast;

* See Note 53. † See Note 54.

And traversed first the rearward host,
Reserved for aid where needed most.
The men of Carrick and of Ayr,
Lennox and Lanark too, were there,
 And all the western land ;
With these the valiant of the Isles
Beneath their chieftains ranked their files,
 In many a plaided band.
There, in the centre, proudly raised,
The Bruce's royal standard blazed ;
And there Lord Ronald's banner bore
A galley driven by sail and oar.
A wild yet pleasing contrast made
Warriors in mail and plate arrayed,
With the plumed bonnet and the plaid
 By these Hebrideans worn ;
But oh ! unseen for three long years,
Dear was the garb of mountaineers
 To the fair Maid of Lorn !
For one she looked ; but he was far
Busied amid the ranks of war.
Yet with affection's troubled eye
She marked his banner boldly fly ;
Gave on the countless foe a glance,
And thought on battle's desperate chance.

XII.

To centre of the vaward line
Fitz-Louis guided Amadine.
Armed all on foot, that host appears
A serried mass of glimmering spears.
There stood the Marchers' warlike band,
The warriors there of Lodon's land ;
Ettrick and Liddell bent the yew,
A band of archers fierce, though few ;
The men of Nith and Annan's vale,
And the bold spears of Teviotdale ;—
The dauntless Douglas these obey,
And the young Stewart's gentle sway.

North-eastward by St. Ninian's shrine,
Beneath fierce Randolph's charge, combine
The warriors whom the hardy North
From Tay to Sutherland sent forth.
The rest of Scotland's war-array
With Edward Bruce to westward lay,
Where Bannock, with his broken bank
An l deep ravine, protects their flank.
Behind them, screened by sheltering wood,
The gallant Keith, Lord Marshal, stood :
His men-at-arms bear mace and lance,
And plumes that wave, and helms that glance.
Thus fair divided by the King,
Centre, and right, and left-ward wing,
Composed his front ; nor distant far
Was strong reserve to aid the war.
And 'twas to front of this array,
Her guide and Edith made their way.

XIII.

Here must they pause ; for, in advance
As far as one might pitch a lance,
The Monarch rode along the van,*
The foe's approaching force to scan,
His line to marshal and to range,
And ranks to square, and fronts to change.
Alone he rode—from head to heel
Sheathed in his ready arms of steel ;
Nor mounted yet on war-horse wight,
But, till more near the shock of fight,
Reining a palfrey low and light.
A diadem of gold was set
Above his bright steel basinet,
And clasped within its glittering twine
Was seen the glove of Argentine :
Truncheon or leading staff he lacks,
Bearing, instead, a battle-axe.
He ranged his soldiers for the fight,
Accoutred thus, in open sight

* See Note 55.

*"High in his stirrups stood the King,
And gave his battle-axe the swing."*

Page 770.

Of either host.—Three bowshots far
Paused the deep front of England's war,
And rested on their arms awhile,
To close and rank their warlike file,
And hold high council, if that night
Should view the strife, or dawning light.

XIV.

Oh, gay yet fearful to behold,
Flashing with steel and rough with gold,
And bristled o'er with bills and spears,
With plumes and pennons waving fair,
Was that bright battle-front ! for there
Rode England's King and peers.
And who that saw that monarch ride,
His kingdom battled by his side,
Could then his direful doom foretell !—
Fair was his seat in knightly selle,
And in his sprightly eye was set
Some spark of the Plantagenet,
Though light and wandering was his glance,
It flashed at sight of shield and lance.
“ Know'st thou,” he said, “ De Argentine,
Yon knight who marshals thus their line ? ”—
“ The tokens on his helmet tell
The Bruce, my Liege ; I know him well.”—
“ And shall the audacious traitor brave
The presence where our banners wave ? ”—
“ So please my Liege,” said Argentine,
“ Were he but horsed on steed like mine,
To give him fair and knightly chance,
I would adventure forth my lance.”—
“ In battle-day,” the King replied,
“ Nice tourney rules are set aside.—
Still must the rebel dare our wrath ?
Set on him—sweep him from our path ! ”
And, at King Edward's signal, soon
Dashed from the ranks Sir Henry Boune.

XV. : —

Of Hereford's high blood he came,
 A race renowned for knightly fame.
 He burned before his monarch's eye
 To do some deed of chivalry.
 He spurred his steed, he couched his lance,
 And darted on the Bruce at once.—
 As motionless as rocks that bide
 The wrath of the advancing tide,
 The Bruce stood fast.—Each breast beat high,
 And dazzled was each gazing eye :
 The heart had hardly time to think,
 The eyelid scarce had time to wink,
 While on the King, like flash of flame,
 Spurred to full speed the war-horse came !
 The partridge may the falcon mock,
 If that slight palfrey stand the shock :
 But, swerving from the knight's career,
 Just as they met, Bruce shunned the spear.
 Onward the baffled warrior bore
 His course—but soon his course was o'er !
 High in his stirrups stood the King,
 And gave his battle-axe the swing.
 Right on De Boune, the whiles he passed,
 Fell that stern dint—the first—the last !
 Such strength upon the blow was put,
 The helmet crashed like hazel-nut ;
 The axe-shaft, with its brazen clasp,
 Was shivered to the gauntlet grasp.
 Springs from the blow the startled horse,
 Drops to the plain the lifeless corse ;—
 First of that fatal field, how soon,
 How sudden, fell the fierce De Boune !

XVI.

One pitying glance the Monarch sped,
 Where on the field his foe lay dead ;
 Then gently turned his palfrey's head,
 And, pacing back his sober way,
 Slowly he gained his own array.

There round their King the leaders crowd,
And blame his recklessness aloud,
That risked 'gainst each adventurous spear
A life so valued and so dear.
His broken weapon's shaft surveyed
The King, and careless answer made,—
“My loss may pay my folly's tax;
I've broke my trusty battle-axe.”
'Twas then Fitz-Louis, bending low,
Did Isabel's commission show;
Edith, disguised, at distance stands,
And hides her blushes with her hands.
The Monarch's brow has changed its hue,
Away the gory axe he threw,
While to the seeming page he drew,
Clearing war's terrors from his eye.
Her hand with gentle ease he took,
With such a kind protecting look,
As to a weak and timid boy
Might speak, that elder brother's care
And elder brother's love were there.

XVII

“Fear not,” he said, “young Amadine!”
Then whispered, “Still that name be thine.
Fate plays her wonted fantasy,
Kind Amadine, with thee and me,
And sends thee here in doubtful hour.
But soon we are beyond her power;
For on this chosen battle-plain,
Victor or vanquished, I remain.
Do thou to yonder hill repair;
The followers of our host are there,
And all who may not weapons bear.—
Fitz-Louis, have him in thy care.—
Joyful we meet, if all go well.
If not, in Arran's holy cell
Thou must take part with Isabel;
For brave Lord Ronald, too, hath sworn
Not to regain the Maid of Lorn

(The bliss on earth he covets most),
 Would he forsake his battle-post,
 Or shun the fortune that may fall
 To Bruce, to Scotland, and to all.—
 But, hark ! some news these trumpets tell ;
 Forgive my haste—farewell—farewell ! ”
 And in a lower voice he said,
 “ Be of good cheer—farewell, sweet maid ! ”—

XVIII.

“ What train of dust, with trumpet-sound
 And glimmering spears, is wheeling round
 Our leftward flank ? ”—the Monarch cried,
 To Moray’s Earl, who rode beside.*
 “ Lo ! round thy station pass the foes !
 Randolph, thy wreath has lost a rose.”
 The Earl his visor closed, and said,
 “ My wreath shall bloom, or life shall fade.—
 Follow, my household ! ”—And they go
 Like lightning on the advancing foe.
 “ My Liege,” said noble Douglas then,
 “ Earl Randolph has but one to ten ;
 Let me go forth his band to aid ! ”—
 “ Stir not. The error he hath made,
 Let him amend it as he may ;
 I will not weaken mine array.”
 Then loudly rose the conflict-cry,
 And Douglas’s brave heart swelled high.
 “ My Liege,” he said, “ with patient ear
 I must not Moray’s death-knell hear ! ”—
 “ Then go, but speed thee back again.”
 Forth sprung the Douglas with his train :
 But, when they won a rising hill,
 He bade his followers hold them still.
 “ See, see ! the routed Southern fly !
 The Earl hath won the victory.
 Lo ! where yon steeds run masterless,
 His banner towers above the press.
 Rein up ; our presence would impair
 The fame we come too late to share.”

* See Note 56. †

Back to the host the Douglas rode,
And soon glad tidings are abroad
That Dayncourt by stout Randolph slain,
His followers fled with loosened rein.
That skirmish closed the busy day,
And, couched in battle's prompt array,
Each army on their weapons lay.

XIX.

It was a night of lovely June,
High rode in cloudless blue the moon,
Demayet smiled beneath her ray ;
Old Stirling's towers arose in light,
And, twined in links of silver bright,
Her winding river lay.
Ah, gentle planet ! other sight
Shall greet thee, next returning night,
Of broken arms and banners tore,
And marshes dark with human gore,
And piles of slaughtered men and horse,
And Forth that floats the frequent corse,
And many a wounded wretch to plain
Beneath thy silver light in vain !
But now, from England's host, the cry
Thou hear'st of wassail revelry ;
While from the Scottish legions pass
The murmured prayer, the early mass !—
Here, numbers had presumption given ;
There, bands o'ermatched sought aid from Heaven

XX.

On Gillies'-hill, whose height commands
The battle-field, fair Edith stands,
With serf and page unfit for war,
To eye the conflict from afar.
Oh ! with what doubtful agony
She sees the dawning tint the sky !—
Now on the Ochils gleams the sun,
And glistens now Demayet dun ;
Is it the lark that carols shrill,

Is it the bittern's early hum?
 No!—distant, but increasing still,
 The trumpet's sound swells up the hill,
 With the deep murmur of the drum.
 Responsive from the Scottish host
 Pipe-clang and bugle-sound were tossed,*
 His breast and brow each soldier crossed,
 And started from the ground;
 Armed and arrayed for instant fight,
 Rose archer, spearman, squire, and knight,
 And in the pomp of battle bright
 The dread battalia frowned.

XXXI.

Now onward, and in open view,
 The countless ranks of England drew,
 Dark rolling like the ocean-tide
 When the rough west hath chafed his pride,
 And his deep roar sends challenge wide
 To all that bars his way!
 In front the gallant archers trode,
 The men-at-arms behind them rode,
 And midmost of the phalanx broad
 The monarch held his sway.
 Beside him many a war-horse fumes,
 Around him waves a sea of plumes,
 Where many a knight in battle known,
 And some who spurs had first braced on,
 And deemed that fight should see them won,
 King Edward's hests obey.
 De Argentine attends his side,
 With stout De Valence, Pembroke's pride,
 Selected champions from the train,
 To wait upon his bridle-rein,
 Upon the Scottish foe he gazed—
 At once, before his sight amazed,
 Sunk banner, spear, and shield;
 Each weapon-point is downward sent,
 Each warrior to the ground is bent.

* See Note 57.

- “The rebels, Argentine, repent!
 For pardon they have kneeled.”—
 “Ay!—but they bend to other powers,
 And other pardon sue than ours!
 See where yon barefoot abbot stands,
 And blesses them with lifted hands! *
 Upon the spot where they have kneeled
 These men will die, or win the field.”—
 “Then prove we if they die or win!
 Bid Gloster’s Earl the fight begin.”—

XXII.

Earl Gilbert waved his truncheon high,
 Just as the Northern ranks arose,
 Signal for England’s archery
 To halt and bend their bows.
 Then stepped each yeoman forth a pace,
 Glanced at the intervening space,
 And raised his left hand high;
 To the right ear the cords they bring—
 At once ten thousand bowstrings ring,
 Ten thousand arrows fly!
 Nor paused on the devoted Scot
 The ceaseless fury of their shot;
 As fiercely and as fast,
 Forth whistling came the grey-goose wing
 As the wild hailstones pelt and ring
 Down December’s blast.
 Nor mountain targe of tough bull-hide,
 Nor Lowland mail, that storm may bide;
 Woe, woe to Scotland’s bannered pride,
 If the fell shower may last!
 Upon the right, behind the wood,
 Each by his steed dismounted, stood
 The Scottish chivalry;
 With foot in stirrup, hand on mane,
 Fierce Edward Bruce can scarce restrain
 His own keen heart, his eager train,

* See Note 58.

Until the archers gained the plain ;
 Then, " Mount, ye gallants free !"
 He cried, and, vaulting from the ground,
 His saddle every horseman found.
 On high their glittering crests they toss,
 As springs the wild-fire from the moss ;
 The shield hangs down on every breast,
 Each ready lance is in the rest,
 And loud shouts Edward Bruce,—
 " Forth, Marshal, on the peasant foe !
 We'll tame the terrors of their bow.
 And cut the bowstring loose ! " *

XXIII.

Then spurs were dashed in chargers' flanks,
 They rushed among the archer ranks.
 No spears were there the shock to let,
 No stakes to turn the charge were set ;
 And how shall yeoman's armour slight
 Stand the long lance and mace of might ?
 Or what may their short swords avail
 'Gainst barbèd horse and shirt of mail ?
 Amid their ranks the chargers sprung,
 High o'er their heads the weapons swung,
 And shriek and groan and vengeful shout
 Give note of triumph and of rout !
 Awhile, with stubborn hardihood,
 Their English hearts the strife made good ;
 Borne down at length on every side,
 Compelled to flight, they scatter wide.—
 Let stags of Sherwood leap for glee,
 And bound the deer of Dallom Lea !
 The broken bows of Bannock's shore
 Shall in the greenwood ring no more !
 Round Wakefield's merry maypole now
 The maids may twine the summer bough,
 May northward look with longing glance,
 For those that wont to lead the dance,

* See Note 59.

For the blithe archers look in vain !
Broken, dispersed, in flight o'erta'en,
Pierced through, trod down, by thousands slain,
They cumber Bannock's bloody plain.

XXIV.

The king with scorn beheld their flight.
"Are these," he said, "our yeomen wight?
Each braggart churl could boast before,
Twelve Scottish lives his baldric bore ! *
Fitter to plunder chase or park
Than make a manly foe their mark.—
Forward, each gentleman and knight !
Let gentle blood show generous might,
And chivalry redeem the fight !"
To rightward of the wild affray,
The field showed fair and level way ;
But, in mid-space, the Bruce's care
Had bored the ground with many a pit,
With turf and brushwood hidden yet,
That formed a ghastly snare.
Rushing, ten thousand horsemen came,
With spears in rest and hearts on flame,
That panted for the shock !
With blazing crests and banners spread,
And trumpet clang and clamour dread,
The wide plain thundered to their tread,
As far as Stirling rock.
Down ! down ! in headlong overthrow,
Horsemen and horse, the foremost go, †
Wild floundering on the field !
The first are in destruction's gorge,
Their followers wildly o'er them urge ;—
The knightly helm and shield,
The mail, the acton, and the spear,
Strong hand, high heart, are useless here !
Loud from the mass confused the cry
Of dying warriors swells on high,
And steeds that shriek in agony ! ‡

* See Note 60.

† See Note 61.

‡ See Note 62.

They came like mountain-torrent red
 That thunders o'er its rocky bed :
 They broke like that same torrent's wave
 When swallowed by a darksome cave.
 Billows on billows burst and boil,
 Maintaining still the stern turmoil,
 And to their wild and tortured groan
 Each adds new terrors of his own !

XXV.

Too strong in courage and in might
 Was England yet, to yield the fight.
 Her noblest all are here ;
 Names that to fear were never known,
 Bold Norfolk's Earl De Brotherton,
 And Oxford's famed De Vere.
 There Gloster plied the bloody sword,
 And Berkley, Grey, and Hereford,
 Bottetourt and Sanzavere,
 Ross, Montague, and Mauley, came,
 And Courtenay's pride, and Percy's fame—
 Names known too well in Scotland's war,
 At Falkirk, Methven, and Dunbar,
 Blazed broader yet in after years,
 At Cressy red and fell Poitiers.
 Pembroke with these, and Argentine,
 Brought up the rearward battle-line.
 With caution o'er the ground they tread,
 Slippery with blood and piled with dead,
 Till hand to hand in battle set,
 The bills with spears and axes met,
 And, closing dark on every side,
 Raged the full contest far and wide.
 Then was the strength of Douglas tried,
 Then proved was Randolph's generous pride,
 And well did Stewart's actions grace
 The sire of Scotland's royal race !
 Firmly they kept their ground ;
 As firmly England onward pressed,
 And down went many a noble crest,

And rent was many a valiant breast,
And slaughter revelled round.

XXVI.

Unflinching foot 'gainst foot was set,
Unceasing blow by blow was met ;
The groans of those who fell
Were drowned amid the shriller clang
That from the blades and harness rang,
And in the battle yell.
Yet fast they fell, unheard, forgot,
Both Southern fierce and hardy Scot ;—
And oh ! amid that waste of life
What various motives fired the strife !
The aspiring noble bled for fame,
The patriot for his country's claim ;
This knight his youthful strength to prove,
And that to win his lady's love ;
Some fought from ruffian thirst of blood,
From habit some, or hardihood.
But ruffian stern, and soldier good,
The noble and the slave,
From various cause the same wild road,
On the same bloody morning, trode,
To that dark inn—the Grave !

XXVII.

The tug of strife to flag begins,
Though neither loses yet nor wins.
High rides the sun, thick rolls the dust,
And feebler speeds the blow and thrust.
Douglas leans on his war-sword now,
And Randolph wipes his bloody brow.
Nor less had toiled each Southern knight,
From morn till midday in the fight :
Strong Egremont for air must gasp,
Beauchamp undoes his visor-clasp,
And Montague must quit his spear,
And sinks thy falchion, bold De Vere !
The blows of Berkley fall less fast,
And gallant Pembroke's bugle-blast

Hath lost its lively tone ;
 Sinks, Argentine, thy battle-word,
 And Percy's shout was fainter heard,
 " My merry men, fight on ! "

XXVIII.

Bruce, with the pilot's wary eye,
 The slackening of the storm could spy.
 " One effort more, and Scotland's free !
 Lord of the Isles, my trust in thee
 Is firm as Ailsa Rock ;
 Rush on with Highland sword and targe,
 I, with my Carrick spearmen, charge ; *
 Now, forward to the shock ! "
 At once the spears were forward thrown,
 Against the sun the broadswords shone ;
 The pibroch lent its maddening tone,
 And loud King Robert's voice was known—
 " Carrick, press on—they fail ! they fail !
 Press on, brave sons of Innisgail,
 The foe is fainting fast !
 Each strike for parent, child, and wife,
 For Scotland, liberty, and life,
 The battle cannot last ! "

XXIX.

The fresh and desperate onset bore
 The foes three furlongs back and more,
 Leaving their noblest in their gore.
 Alone, De Argentine
 Yet bears on high his red-cross shield,
 Gathers the relics of the field,
 Renews the ranks where they have reeled,
 And still makes good the line.
 Brief strife, but fierce, his efforts raise
 A bright but momentary blaze.
 Fair Edith heard the Southron shout,
 Beheld them turning from the rout,

* See Note 63.

Heard the wild call their trumpets sent
 In notes 'twixt triumph and lament.
 That rallying force, combined anew,
 Appeared, in her distracted view,
 To hem the Islesmen round :
 " O God ! the combat they renew,
 And is no rescue found ?
 And ye that look thus tamely on,
 And see your native land o'erthrown,
 O ! are your hearts of flesh or stone ? "

XXX.

The multitude that watched afar,
 Rejected from the ranks of war,
 Had not unmoved beheld the fight
 When strove the Bruce for Scotland's right ;
 Each heart had caught the patriot spark,
 Old man and stripling, priest and clerk,
 Bondsman and serf ; even female hand
 Stretched to the hatchet or the brand.
 But, when mute Amadine they heard
 Give to their zeal his signal-word,
 A frenzy fired the throng ;—
 " Portents and miracles impeach
 Our sloth—the dumb our duties teach—
 And He that gives the mute his speech
 Can bid the weak be strong.
 To us, as to our lords, are given
 A native earth, a promised heaven ;
 To us, as to our lords, belongs
 The vengeance for our nation's wrongs ;
 The choice, 'twixt death or freedom, warms
 Our breasts as theirs—To arms, to arms ! "
 To arms they flew—axe, club, or spear—
 And mimic ensigns high they rear,*
 And, like a bannered host afar,
 Bear down on England's wearied war.

* See Note 64.

XXXI.

Already scattered o'er the plain,
 Reproof, command, and counsel vain,
 The rearward squadrons fled amain,
 Or made but doubtful stay ;
 But when they marked the seeming show
 Of fresh and fierce and marshalled foe,
 The boldest broke array.
 O give their hapless prince his due ! *
 In vain the royal Edward threw
 His person 'mid the spears,
 Cried "Fight !" to terror and despair,
 Menaced, and wept, and tore his hair,
 And cursed their caitiff fears ;
 Till Pembroke turned his bridle rein,
 And forced him from the fatal plain.
 With them rode Argentine, until
 They gained the summit of the hill,
 But quitted there the train.
 "In yonder field a gage I left,—
 I must not live of fame bereft ;
 I needs must turn again.
 Speed hence, my Liege, for on your trace
 The fiery Douglas takes the chase,
 I know his banner well.
 God send my Sovereign joy and bliss,
 And many a happier field than this ! —
 Once more, my Liege, farewell."

XXXII.

Again he faced the battlefield,—
 Wildly they fly, are slain, or yield.
 "Now then," he said, and couched his spear,
 "My course is run, the goal is near ;
 One effort more, one brave career,
 Must close this race of mine."
 Then in his stirrups rising high,
 He shouted loud his battle-cry,
 "Saint James for Argentine !"

* See Note 65.

And, of the bold pursuers, four
The gallant knight from saddle bore ;
But not unharmed—a lance's point
Has found his breastplate's loosened joint,
 An axe has razed his crest ;
Yet still on Colonsay's fierce lord,
Who pressed the chase with gory sword,
 He rode with spear in rest,
And through his bloody tartans bored,
 And through his gallant breast:
Nailed to the earth, the mountaineer
Yet writhed him up against the spear,
 And swung his broadsword round !—
Stirrup, steel-boot, and cuish gave way
Beneath that blow's tremendous sway,
 The blood gushed from the wound ;
And the grim Lord of Colonsay
 Hath turned him on the ground,
And laughed in death-pang, that his blade
The mortal thrust so well repaid.

XXXIII.

Now toiled the Bruce, the battle done,
To use his conquest boldly won ;
And gave command for horse and spear
To press the Southron's scattered rear,
Nor let his broken force combine,—
When the war-cry of Argentine
 Fell faintly on his ear !
“ Save, save his life,” he cried, “ O save
The kind, the noble, and the brave ! ”
The squadrons round free passage gave,
 The wounded knight drew near.
He raised his red-cross shield no more,
Helm, cuish, and breastplate streamed with gore,
Yet, as he saw the King advance,
He strove even then to couch his lance—
 The effort was in vain !
The spur-stroke failed to rouse the horse ;

Wounded and weary, in mid course
 He stumbled on the plain.

Then foremost was the generous Bruce
 To raise his head, his helm to loose :—

“ Lord Earl, the day is thine !

My sovereign’s charge, and adverse fate,
 Have made our meeting all too late :

Yet this may Argentine,
 As boon from ancient comrade, crave—
 A Christian’s mass, a soldier’s grave.”

XXXIV.

Bruce pressed his dying hand ; its grasp
 Kindly replied, but in his clasp

It stiffened and grew cold—

And, “ O farewell ! ” the victor cried,
 “ Of chivalry the flower and pride,

The arm in battle bold,

The courteous mien, the noble race,
 The stainless faith, the manly face !—
 Bid Ninian’s convent light their shrine
 For late wake of De Argentine.

O’er better knight on death-bier laid,
 Torch never gleamed nor mass was said ! ”—

XXXV.

Nor for De Argentine alone
 Through Ninian’s church these torches shone,
 And rose the death-prayer’s awful tone.

That yellow lustre glimmered pale,
 On broken plate and bloodied mail,

Rent crest and shattered coronet,
 Of baron, earl, and banneret ;

And the best names that England knew
 Claimed in the death-prayer dismal due.

Yet mourn not, Land of Fame !

Though ne’er the leopards on thy shield
 Retreated from so sad a field,

Since Norman William came,

Oft may thine annals justly boast
Of battles stern by Scotland lost ;
 Grudge not her victory,
When for her freeborn rights she strove—
Rights dear to all who freedom love—
 To none so dear as thee !

XXXVI.

Turn we to Bruce, whose curious ear
Must from Fitz-Louis tidings hear ;
With him, a hundred voices tell
Of prodigy and miracle,
 “ For the mute Page had spoke.”—
“ Page !” said Fitz-Louis, “ rather say,
An angel sent from realms of day
 To burst the English yoke.
I saw his plume and bonnet drop,
When hurrying from the mountain top ;
A lovely brow, dark locks that wave,
To his bright eyes new lustre gave ;
A step as light upon the green
As if his pinions waved unseen !”—
“ Spoke he with none ?”—“ With none—one word
Burst when he saw the Island Lord
Returning from the battlefield.”—
“ What answer made the Chief ?”—“ He kneeled,
Durst not look up, but muttered low
Some mingled sounds that none might know,
And greeted him ’twixt joy and fear,
As being of superior sphere.”

XXXVII.

Even upon Bannock’s bloody plain,
Heaped then with thousands of the slain,
’Mid victor Monarch’s musings high,
Mirth laughed in good King Robert’s eye.
“ And bore he such angelic air,
Such noble front, such waving hair ?
Hath Ronald kneeled to him ?” he said ;
“ Then must we call the church to aid—

Our will be to the abbot known
Ere these strange news are wider blown,
To Cambuskenneth straight he pass,
And deck the church for solemn mass,
To pay, for high deliverance given,
A nation's thanks to gracious Heaven.
Let him array, besides, such state
As should on princes' nuptials wait.
Ourself the cause, through fortune's spite,
That once broke short that spousal rite,
Ourself will grace, with early morn,
The bridal of the Maid of Lorn."

CONCLUSION.

Go forth, my Song, upon thy venturous way ;
Go boldly forth ; nor yet thy master blame,
Who chose no patron for his humble lay,
And graced thy numbers with no friendly name,
Whose partial zeal might smooth thy path to fame.
There was—and oh ! how many sorrows crowd
Into these two brief words !—there was a claim
By generous friendship given—had fate allowed,
It well had bid thee rank the proudest of the proud !

All angel now—yet little less than all
While still a pilgrim in our world below !
What 'vails it us that patience to recall
Which hid its own, to soothe all other woe ;
What 'vails to tell how VIRTUE'S purest glow
Shone yet more lovely in a form so fair ;—
And, least of all, what 'vails the world should know,
That one poor garland, twined to deck thy hair,
Is hung upon thy hearse, to droop and wither there !

NOTES TO THE LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL.

NOTE I.

The feast was over in Branksome tower.—P. 6.

IN the reign of James I., Sir William Scott of Buccleuch, chief of the clan bearing that name, exchanged, with Sir Thomas Inglis of Manor, the estate of Murdiestone, in Lanarkshire, for one-half of the barony of Branksome, or Brankholm (the proper name of the barony), lying upon the Teviot, about three miles above Hawick. He was probably induced to this transaction from the vicinity of Branksome to the extensive domain which he possessed in Ettrick Forest and in Teviotdale. In the former district he held by occupancy the estate of Buccleuch, and much of the forest land on the river Ettrick. In Teviotdale he enjoyed the barony of Eckford, by a grant from Robert II. to his ancestor, Walter Scott of Kirkurd, for the apprehending of Gilbert Ridderford, confirmed by Robert III., May 3, 1424. Tradition imputes the exchange betwixt Scott and Inglis to a conversation, in which the latter—a man, it would appear, of a mild and forbearing nature—complained much of the injuries to which he was exposed from the English Borderers, who frequently plundered his lands of Branksome. Sir William Scott instantly offered him the estate of Murdiestone, in exchange for that which was subject to such egregious inconvenience. When the bargain was completed, he dryly remarked that the cattle in Cumberland were as good as those of Teviotdale; and proceeded to commence a system of reprisals upon the English, which was regularly pursued by his successors. In the next reign, James II. granted to Sir Walter Scott of Branksome, and to Sir David, his son, the remaining half of the barony of Branksome, to be held in blanché for the payment of a red rose. The cause assigned for the grant is, their brave and faithful exertions in favour of the King against the house of Douglas, with whom James had been recently tugging for the throne of Scotland. This charter is dated February 2, 1443; and, in the same month, part of the barony of Langholm, and many lands in Lanarkshire, were conferred upon Sir Walter and his son by the same monarch.

After the period of the exchange with Sir Thomas Inglis, Branksome became the principal seat of the Buccleuch family. The castle was enlarged and strengthened by Sir David Scott, the grandson of Sir William, its first possessor. But in 1570-1 the vengeance of Elizabeth, provoked by the inroads of Buccleuch, and his attachment to the cause of Queen Mary, destroyed the castle, and laid waste the lands of Branksome. In the same year the castle was repaired and enlarged by Sir Walter Scott, its brave possessor; but the work was not completed till after his death, in 1574, when the widow finished the building.

NOTE 2.

Nine-and-twenty knights of fame

Hung their shields in Branksome Hall.—P. 6.

The ancient barons of Buccleuch, both from feudal splendour and from their frontier situation, retained in their household at Branksome a number of gentlemen of their own name, who held lands from their chief, for the military service of watching and warding his castle.

NOTE 3.

With Jedwood-axe at saddlebow:—P. 7.

“Of a truth,” says Froissart, “the Scottish cannot boast great skill with the bow, but rather bear axes, with which, in time of need, they give heavy strokes.” The Jedwood-axe was a sort of partisan, used by horsemen, as appears from the arms of Jedburgh, which bear a cavalier mounted, and armed with this weapon. It is also called a Jedwood or Jeddart staff.

NOTE 4.

They watch, against Southern force and guile,

Lest Siroop, or Howard, or Percy's powers,

Threaten Branksome's lordly towers,

From Warkworth, or Naworth, or merry Carlisle.—P. 7.

Branksome Castle was continually exposed to the attacks of the English, both from its situation and from the restless military disposition of its inhabitants, who were seldom on good terms with their neighbours. In a letter from the Earl of Northumberland to Henry VIII., dated 1533, an account is given of a successful inroad of the English, in which the country was plundered up to the gates of the castle, although the invaders failed in their principal object, which was to kill or make prisoner the Laird of Buccleuch.

NOTE 5.

Bards long shall tell,

How Lord Walter fell:—P. 8.

Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch succeeded to his grandfather, Sir David, in 1492. He was a brave and powerful baron, and Warden of the West Marches of Scotland. His death was the consequence of a feud betwixt the Scotts and Kerrs. This feud arose after the battle of Melrose, and, in spite of all means used to bring about an agreement, raged for many years upon the Borders. The most signal act of violence to which this quarrel gave rise was the murder of Sir Walter, who was slain by the Kerrs in the streets of Edinburgh in 1552.

NOTE 6.

*While Cessford owns the rule of Carr,
While Ettrick boasts the line of Scott,
The slaughtered chiefs, the mortal jar,
The havoc of the feudal war,
Shall never, never be forgot!—P. 8.*

Among other expedients resorted to for stanching the feud betwixt the Scotts and the Kerrs, there was a bond executed in 1529, between the heads of each clan, binding themselves to perform reciprocally the four principal pilgrimages of Scotland, for the benefit of the souls of those of the opposite name who had fallen in the quarrel. But either this indenture never took effect, or else the feud was renewed shortly afterwards.

NOTE 7.

With Carr in arms had stood.—P. 9.

The family of Ker, Kerr, or Carr,* was very powerful on the Border. Fynes Morrison remarks, in his "Travels," that their influence extended from the village of Preston-Grange, in Lothian, to the limits of England. Cessford Castle, now in ruins, the ancient baronial residence of the family, is situated near the village of Morebattle, within two or three miles of the Cheviot Hills. Tradition affirms that it was founded by Halbert, or Habby Kerr, a gigantic warrior, concerning whom many stories are current in Roxburghshire. The Duke of Roxburgh represents Ker of Cessford. A distinct and powerful branch of the same name owns the Marquis of Lothian as their chief; hence the distinction betwixt Kerrs of Cessford and Fairnihiirst.

NOTE 8.

Lord Cranstoun.—P. 9.

The Cranstouns are an ancient Border family, whose chief seat was at Crailing, in Teviotdale. They were at this time at feud with the clan of Scott; for it appears that the Lady of Buccleuch, in 1557, beset the Laird of Cranstoun, seeking his life. Nevertheless, the same Cranstoun, or perhaps his son, was married to a daughter of the same lady.

NOTE 9.

Of Bethune's line of Picardie.—P. 9.

The Bethunes were of French origin, and derived their name from a small town in Artois. There were several distinguished families of the Bethunes in the neighbouring province of Picardy. They numbered

* The name is spelt differently by the various families who bear it. Carr is selected, not as the most correct, but as the most poetical reading.

among their descendants the celebrated Duc de Sully, and the name was accounted among the most noble in France while aught noble remained in that country.* The family of Bethune, or Beatoun, in Fife, produced three learned and dignified prelates—namely, Cardinal Beaton, and two successive Archbishops of Glasgow, all of whom flourished about the date of the romance. Of this family was descended Dame Janet Beaton, Lady Buccleuch, widow of Sir Walter Scott of Branksome. She was a woman of masculine spirit, as appeared from her riding at the head of her son's clan, after her husband's murder. She was believed by the superstition of the vulgar to possess supernatural knowledge. With this was mingled, by faction, the foul accusation of her having influenced Queen Mary to the murder of her husband. One of the placards, preserved in Buchanan's Detection, accuses of Darnley's murder "the Erle of Bothwell, Mr. James Balfour, the persoun of Fliske, Mr. David Chalmers, black Mr. John Spens, who was principal deviser of the murder; and the Queen, assenting thairto, throw the persuasion of the Erle Bothwell, and the witchcraft of Lady Buckleuch."

NOTE 10.

*He learned the art that none may name,
In Padua, far beyond the sea.—P. 9.*

Padua was long supposed by the Scottish peasants to be the principal school of necromancy. The Earl of Gowrie, slain at Perth in 1600, pretended, during his studies in Italy, to have acquired some knowledge of the cabala, by which, he said, he could charm snakes, and work other miracles. See the examination of Wemyss of Bogie, before the Privy Council, concerning Gowrie's Conspiracy.

NOTE 11.

Upon the sunny wall.—P. 9.*

The shadow of a necromancer is independent of the sun. Glycas informs us that Simon Magus caused his shadow to go before him, making people believe it was an attendant spirit.—HEYWOOD'S Hierarchie, p. 475. The vulgar believe that when a class of students have made a certain progress in their mystic studies, they are obliged to run through a subterranean hall, where the devil literally catches the hindmost in the race, unless he crosses the hall so speedily that the arch-enemy can only grasp his shadow⁽¹⁾

NOTE 12.

The viewless forms of air.—P. 10.

The Scotch still, in many places, believe in the existence of an intermediate class of spirits residing in the air, or in the waters, to whose agency they ascribe floods, storms, and all such phenomena as their own philosophy cannot readily explain.

* This expression and sentiment were dictated by the situation of France, in the year 1803, when the poem was originally written. 1821.

NOTE 13.

Exalt the Crescent and the Star, —P. 12.

The arms of the Kerrs of Cessford were, Vert on a chevron, betwixt three unicorns' heads erased argent, three mullets sable; crest, a unicorn's head erased proper. The Scotts of Buccleuch bore, Or on a bend azure; a star of six points betwixt two crescents of the first.

NOTE 14.

She called to her William of Deloraine. —P. 12.

The lands of Deloraine are joined to those of Buccleuch in Ettrick Forest. They were immemorially possessed by the Buccleuch family, although no charter was obtained from the crown until 1545.

NOTE 15.

*By wily turns, by desperate bounds,
Had baffled Percy's best bloodhounds. —P. 13.*

The kings and heroes of Scotland, as well as the Border-riders, were sometimes obliged to study how to evade the pursuit of bloodhounds. Barbour informs us that Robert Bruce was repeatedly tracked by sleuth-dogs. On one occasion he escaped by wading a bowshot down a brook, and ascending into a tree by a branch which overhung the water; thus, leaving no trace on land of his footsteps, he baffled the scent.

A sure way of stopping the dog was to spill blood upon the track, which destroyed the discriminating fineness of his scent. A captive was sometimes sacrificed on such occasions. Henry the Minstrel tells a romantic story of Wallace, founded on this circumstance:—The hero's little band had been joined by an Irishman named Fawdoun, or Fadzean, a dark, savage, and suspicious character. After a sharp skirmish at Black-erne Side, Wallace was forced to retreat with only sixteen followers, the English pursuing with a Border bloodhound. In the retreat, Fawdoun, tired, or affecting to be so, would go no farther, and Wallace, having in vain argued with him, in hasty anger struck off his head, and continued the retreat. When the English came up, their hound stayed upon the dead body:—

"The sleuth stopped at Fawdon, still she stood,
Nor farther would fra time she fund the blood."

NOTE 16.

Dimly he viewed the Moat-hill's mound. —P. 14.

This is a round artificial mount near Hawick, which was probably anciently used as a place for assembling a national council of the adjacent tribes.

NOTE 17.

On Minto-crag the moonbeams glint.—P. 15.

A romantic assemblage of cliffs, which rise suddenly above the vale of Teviot, in the immediate vicinity of the family seat from which Lord Minto takes his title.

NOTE 18.

To ancient Riddel's fair domain.—P. 15.

Tradition carries the antiquity of the family of Riddel to a point extremely remote; and is, in some degree, sanctioned by the discovery of two stone coffins, one containing an earthen pot filled with ashes and arms, bearing a legible date, A.D. 727, the other dated 936, and filled with the bones of a man of gigantic size. These coffins were discovered in the foundations of what was, but has long ceased to be, the chapel of Riddel.

NOTE 19.

*But when Melrose he reached, 'twas silence all;
He meetly stabled his steed in stall,
And sought the convent's lonely wall.*—P. 16.

The ancient and beautiful monastery of Melrose was founded by King David I. Its ruins afford the finest specimen of Gothic architecture and Gothic sculpture which Scotland can boast. The stone of which it is built, though it has resisted the weather for so many ages, retains perfect sharpness, so that even the most minute ornaments seem as entire as when newly wrought. In some of the cloisters, as is hinted at in the next canto, there are representations of flowers, vegetables, etc., carved in stone with accuracy and precision so delicate that we almost distrust our senses, when we consider the difficulty of subjecting so hard a substance to such intricate and exquisite modulation.

NOTE 20.

*When buttress and buttress, alternately,
Seem framed of ebon and ivory;
When silver edges the imagery,
And the scrolls that teach thee to live and die.....
Then view St. David's ruined pile.*—P. 17.

The buttresses ranged along the sides of the ruins of Melrose Abbey are, according to the Gothic style, richly carved and fretted, containing niches for the statues of saints, and labelled with scrolls bearing appropriate texts of Scripture. Most of these statues have been demolished.

David I. of Scotland purchased the reputation of sanctity, by founding, and liberally endowing, not only the monastery of Melrose, but those of Kelso, Jedburgh, and many others; which led to the well-known observation of his successor, that he was a sore saint for the crown.

NOTE 21.

Had gifted the shrine for their souls' repose.—P. 18.

The Buccleuch family were great benefactors to the abbey of Melrose. As early as the reign of Robert II., Robert Scott, Baron of Murdieston and Rankleburn (now Buccleuch), gave to the monks the lands of Hinkery, in Ettrick Forest, pro salute animæ suæ.

NOTE 22.

*And there the dying lamps did burn,
Before thy low and lonely urn,
O gallant Chief of Otterburne!*—P. 20.

The famous and desperate battle of Otterburne was fought August 15, 1388, betwixt Henry Percy, called Hotspur, and James, Earl of Douglas. Both these renowned champions were at the head of a chosen body of troops, and they were rivals in military fame. The Earl of Douglas was slain in the action. He was buried at Melrose, beneath the high altar.

NOTE 23.

Dark Knight of Liddesdale.—P. 20.

William Douglas, called the Knight of Liddesdale, flourished during the reign of David II., and was so distinguished for his valour that he was called the Flower of Chivalry. Nevertheless, he tarnished his renown by the cruel murder of Sir Alexander Ramsay of Dalhousie, originally his friend and brother in arms. The King had conferred upon Ramsay the sherifffdom of Teviotdale, to which Douglas pretended some claim. In revenge of this preference, the Knight of Liddesdale came down upon Ramsay while he was administering justice at Hawick, seized and carried him off to his remote and inaccessible castle of Hermitage, where he threw his unfortunate prisoner, horse and man, into a dungeon, leaving him to perish of hunger. It is said that the miserable captive prolonged his life for several days by the corn which fell from a granary above the vault in which he was confined.

NOTE 24.

The moon on the east oriel shone.—P. 21.

It is impossible to conceive a more beautiful specimen of the lightness and elegance of Gothic architecture, when in its purity, than the eastern window of Melrose Abbey.

NOTE 25.

The wondrous Michael Scott.—P. 21.

Sir Michael Scott of Balwearie flourished during the thirteenth century, and was one of the ambassadors sent to bring the Maid of Norway to Scotland upon the death of Alexander III. By a poetical anachronism, he is here placed in a later era. He was a man of much learning, chiefly acquired in foreign countries. He wrote a commentary upon Aristotle, printed at Venice in 1496; and several treatises upon natural philosophy, from which he appears to have been addicted to the abstruse studies of judicial astrology, alchymy, physiognomy, and chiromancy. Hence he passed among his contemporaries for a skilful magician. Dempster informs us that he remembers to have heard in his youth that the magic books of Michael Scott were still in existence, but could not be opened without danger, on account of the malignant fiends who were thereby invoked.

Tradition varies concerning the place of his burial; some contend for Home Coltrame, in Cumberland, others for Melrose Abbey. But all agree that his books of magic were interred in his grave, or preserved in the convent where he died.

NOTE 26.

The words that cleft Eildon hills in three.—P. 21.

Michael Scott was, once upon a time, much embarrassed by a spirit, for whom he was under the necessity of finding constant employment. He commanded him to build a cauld, or dam-head, across the Tweed at Kelso; it was accomplished in one night, and still does honour to the infernal architect. Michael next ordered that Eildon hill, which was then a uniform cone, should be divided into three. Another night was sufficient to part its summit into the three picturesque peaks which it now bears. At length the enchanter conquered this indefatigable demon, by employing him in the hopeless and endless task of making ropes out of sea-sand.

NOTE 27.

*That lamp shall burn unquenchably,
Until the eternal doom shall be.*—P. 23.

Baptista Porta, and other authors who treat of natural magic, talk much of eternal lamps, pretended to have been found burning in ancient sepulchres.

NOTE 28.

The Baron's Dwarf his courser held.—P. 28.

The idea of Lord Cranstoun's goblin page is taken from a being called Gilpin Horner, who appeared, and made some stay, at a farmhouse among the Border mountains.

NOTE 29.

Like a book-bosomed priest should ride.—P. 33.

There is a tradition that friars were wont to come from Melrose, or Jedburgh, to baptize and marry in the parish of Unthank; and from being in use to carry the mass-book in their bosoms, they were called by the inhabitants Book-a-bosomes.

NOTE 30.

All was delusion, nought was truth.—P. 33.

Glamour, in the legends of Scottish superstition, means the magic power of imposing on the eyesight of the spectators, so that the appearance of an object shall be totally different from the reality. To such a charm the ballad of Johnny Fa' imputes the fascination of the lovely countess who eloped with that gypsy leader.

"Sae soon as they saw her weel-far'd face,
They cast the glamour o'er her."

NOTE 31.

The running stream dissolved the spell.—P. 35.

It is a firm article of popular faith that no enchantment can subsist in a living stream. Nay, if you can interpose a brook betwixt you and witches, spectres, or even fiends, you are in perfect safety. Burns's inimitable "Tam o' Shanter" turns entirely upon such a superstition.

NOTE 32.

*He never counted him a man
Would strike below the knee.*—P. 37.

To wound an antagonist in the thigh or leg was reckoned contrary to the law of arms. In a tilt betwixt Gawain Michael, an English squire, and Joachim Cathore, a Frenchman, "they met at the speare poyntes rudely; the French squyer justed right pleasantly; the Englishman ran too lowe, for he strak the Frenchman depe into the thigh. Wherewith the Erle of Buckingham was right sore displeased, and so were all the other lords, and sayde how it was shamefully done."—FROISSART, vol. i. chap. 366

NOTE 33.

*On many a cairn's grey pyramid,
Where urns of mighty chiefs lie hid.*—P. 42.

The cairns, or piles of loose stones, which crown the summit of most of our Scottish hills, and are found in other remarkable situations, seem usually, though not universally, to have been sepulchral monuments. Six flat stones are commonly found in the centre, forming a cavity of greater or smaller dimensions, in which an urn is often placed. The author is possessed of one, discovered beneath an immense cairn at Roughlee, in Liddesdale. It is of the most barbarous construction; the middle of the substance alone having been subjected to the fire, over which, when hardened, the artist had laid an inner and outer coat of unbaked clay, etched with some very rude ornaments; his skill apparently being inadequate to baking the vase when completely finished. The contents were bones and ashes, and a quantity of beads made of coal. This seems to have been a barbarous imitation of the Roman fashion of sepulture.

NOTE 34.

*For pathless marsh, and mountain cell,
The peasant left his lowly shed.*—P. 44.

The morasses were the usual refuge of the Border herdsmen on the approach of an English army.—(Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border, vol. i. p. 393.) Caves, hewed in the most dangerous and inaccessible places, also afforded an occasional retreat. Such caverns may be seen in the precipitous banks of the Teviot at Sunlaws, upon the Ale at Ancram, upon the Jed at Hundalee, and in many other places upon the Border. The banks of the Esk, at Gorton and Hawthornden, are hollowed into similar recesses.

NOTE 35.

Watt Tinlinn.—P. 44.

This person was, in my younger days, the theme of many a fireside tale. He was a retainer of the Buccleuch family, and held for his Border service a small tower on the frontiers of Liddesdale. Watt was by profession a sutor, but by inclination and practice an archer and warrior. Upon one occasion, the captain of Bewcastle, military governor of that wild district of Cumberland, is said to have made an incursion into Scotland, in which he was defeated and forced to fly. Watt Tinlinn pursued him closely through a dangerous morass. The captain, however, gained the firm ground, and seeing Tinlinn dismounted and floundering in the bog, used these words of insult: "Sutor Watt, ye cannot sew your boots; the heels risp and the seams rive."*—"If I cannot sew," retorted Tinlinn, discharging a shaft, which nailed the captain's thigh to his saddle—"if I cannot sew, I can yerk."†

NOTE 36.

Belted Will Howard.—P. 45.

Lord William Howard, third son of Thomas, Duke of Norfolk, succeeded to Naworth Castle, and a large domain annexed to it, in right of his wife Elizabeth, sister of George Lord Dacre, who died without heirs male, in the 11th of Queen Elizabeth. By a poetical anachronism, he is introduced into the romance a few years earlier than he actually flourished. He was Warden of the Western Marches; and, from the rigour with which he repressed the Border excesses, the name of Belted Will Howard is still famous in our traditions.

NOTE 37.

Lord Dacre.—P. 45.

The well-known name of Dacre is derived from the exploits of one of their ancestors at the siege of Acre, or Ptolemais, under Richard Cœur de Lion.

* Risp, creak; rive, tear.

† Yerk, to twitch, as shoemakers do, in securing the stitches of their work.

NOTE 38.

The German hackbut-men.—P. 45.

In the wars with Scotland, Henry VIII. and his successors employed numerous bands of mercenary troops. At the battle of Pinkie there were in the English army six hundred hackbutterers on foot, and two hundred on horseback, composed chiefly of foreigners. On September 27, 1549, the Duke of Somerset, Lord Protector, writes thus to the Lord Dacre, Warden of the West Marches:—"The Almaines, in number two thousand, very valiant soldiers, shall be sent to you shortly from Newcastle, together with Sir Thomas Holcroft, and with the force of your wardenry (which we would were advanced to the most strength of horsemen that might be) shall make the attempt to Loughmaben, being of no such strength but that it may be skailed with ladders, whereof, beforehand, we would you caused secretly some number to be provided; or else undermined with the pyke-axe, and so taken: either to be kept for the King's Majesty, or otherwise to be defaced, and taken from the profits of the enemy. And in like manner the house of Carlaverock to be used."—History of Cumberland, vol. i. Introd. p. lxi.

"Ready, aye ready," for the field.—P. 47.

Sir John Scott of Thirlestane flourished in the reign of James V., and possessed the estates of Thirlestane, Gamescleuch, etc., lying upon the river of Ettrick, and extending to St. Mary's Loch, at the head of Yarrow. It appears that when James had assembled his nobility and their feudal followers at Fala, with the purpose of invading England, and was, as is well known, disappointed by the obstinate refusal of his peers, this baron alone declared himself ready to follow the king wherever he should lead. In memory of his fidelity, James granted to his family a charter of arms, entitling them to bear a border of fleurs-de-luce, similar to the tressure in the royal arms, with a bundle of spears for the crest: motto, Ready, aye ready.

Without the bend of Murdieston.—P. 47.

The family of Harden are descended from a younger son of the Laird of Buccleuch, who flourished before the estate of Murdieston was acquired by the marriage of one of those chieftains with the heiress in 1296. Hence they bear the cognizance of the Scotts upon the field; whereas those of the Buccleuch are disposed upon a bend dexter, assumed in consequence of that marriage.

NOTE 41.

Bore high a gauntlet on a spear.—P. 53.

A glove upon a lance was the emblem of faith among the ancient Borderers, who were wont, when any one broke his word, to expose this emblem, and proclaim him a faithless villain at the first Border meeting. This ceremony was much dreaded.

NOTE 42.

That he may suffer march-treason pain.—P. 55.

Several species of offences, peculiar to the Border, constituted what was called march-treason. Among others was the crime of riding, or causing to ride, against the opposite country during the time of truce. Thus, in an indenture made on the 25th day of March, 1334, betwixt noble lords, Sirs Henry Percy, Earl of Northumberland, and Archibald Douglas, Lord of Galloway, a truce is agreed upon until the 1st day of July; and it is expressly accorded, "Gif ony stellis authir on the ta part, or on the tothyr, that he shall be hanget or heofdit; and gif ony company stellis any gudes within the trieux beforesayd, ane of that company sall be hanget or heofdit, and the remnant sall restore the gudys stolen in the dubble."—History of Westmoreland and Cumberland, Introd. p. xxxix.

NOTE 43.

Knighthood he took of Douglas' sword.—P. 56.

The dignity of knighthood, according to the original institution, had this peculiarity, that it did not flow from the monarch, but could be conferred by one who himself possessed it, upon any squire who, after due probation, was found to merit the honour of chivalry. Latterly, this power was confined to generals, who were wont to create knights-bannerets after or before an engagement.

The battle of Ancram Moor, or Penielheuch, was fought A.D. 1545. The English, commanded by Sir Ralph Evers and Sir Brian Latoun, were totally routed, and both their leaders slain in the action. The Scottish army was commanded by Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, assisted by the Laird of Buccleuch and Norman Lesley.

The family of Swinton is one of the most ancient in Scotland, and produced many celebrated warriors.

And shouting still, "A Home! a Home!"—P. 63.

The Earls of Home, as descendants of the Dunbars, ancient Earls of March, carried a lion rampant, argent; but, as a difference, changed the colour of the shield from gules to vert, in allusion to Greenlaw, their ancient possession. The slogan, or war-cry, of this powerful family was, "A Home! a Home!" It was anciently placed in an escrol above the crest. The helmet is armed with a lion's head erased gules, with a cap of state gules, turned up ermine.

The Hepburns, a powerful family in East Lothian, were usually in close alliance with the Homes. The chief of this clan was Hepburn, Lord of Hailes, a family which terminated in the too famous Earl of Bothwell.

The football was anciently a very favourite sport all through Scotland, but especially upon the Borders. At present it is often played by the inhabitants of adjacent parishes, or of the opposite banks of a stream. The game is contested with the utmost fury, and very serious accidents have sometimes taken place in the struggle.

On the contrary, like the outposts of hostile armies; they often carried on something resembling friendly intercourse, even in the middle of hostilities;

*And princely peacock's gilded train,
And o'er the boar-head, garnished brave.*—P. 79.

The peacock, it is well known, was considered, during the times of chivalry, not merely as an exquisite delicacy, but as a dish of peculiar solemnity. After being roasted, it was again decorated with its plumage, and a sponge, dipped in lighted spirits of wine, was placed in its bill. When it was introduced on days of grand festival, it was the signal for the adventurous knights to take upon them vows to do some deed of chivalry, "before the peacock and the ladies."

The boar's head was also a usual dish of feudal splendour. In Scotland it was sometimes surrounded with little banners, displaying the colours and achievements of the baron at whose board it was served.—PINKERTON'S History, vol. i. p. 432.

Dickon Draw-the-sword was son to the ancient warrior called in tradition the Cock of Hunthill, remarkable for leading into battle nine sons, gallant warriors, all sons of the aged champion.

NOTE 57.

Stern Rutherford.....bit his glove.—P. 80.

To bite the thumb or the glove seems not to have been considered, upon the Border, as a gesture of contempt, though so used by Shakespeare, but as a pledge of mortal revenge. It is yet remembered that a young gentleman of Teviotdale, on the morning after a hard drinking-bout, observed that he had bitten his glove. He instantly demanded of his companion with whom he had quarrelled. And learning that he had had words with one of the party, he insisted on instant satisfaction, asserting that though he remembered nothing of the dispute, yet he was sure he never would have bit his glove unless he had received some unpardonable insult. He fell in the duel, which was fought near Selkirk, in 1721.

seated themselves; and many of their posterity have continued ever since. Mr. Sandford, speaking of them, says (which indeed was applicable to most of the Borderers on both sides), 'They were all stark moss-troopers, and arrant thieves: both to England and Scotland outlawed; yet sometimes connived at, because they gave intelligence forth of Scotland, and would raise 400 horse at any time upon a raid of the English into Scotland. A saying is recorded of a mother to her son (which is now become proverbial), Ride, Rowley, hough's i' the pot—that is, the last piece of beef was in the pot, and therefore it was high time for him to go and fetch more.'—Introduction to the History of Cumberland.

Who has not heard of Surrey's fame?—P. 83.

The gallant and unfortunate Henry Howard, Earl of Surrey, was unquestionably the most accomplished cavalier of his time; and his sonnets display beauties which would do honour to a more polished age. He was beheaded on Tower Hill in 1546, a victim to the mean jealousy of Henry VIII., who could not bear so brilliant a character near his throne.

The song of the supposed bard is founded on an incident said to have happened to the earl in his travels. Cornelius Agrippa, the celebrated alchemist, showed him in a looking-glass the lovely Geraldine, to whose service he had devoted his pen and his sword. The vision represented her as indisposed, and reclining upon a couch, reading her lover's verses by the light of a waxen taper.

NOTE I.

*As when the Champion of the Lake
Enters Morgana's fated house,
Or in the Chapel Perilous,
Despising spells and demons' force,
Holds converse with the unburied corse.*—P. 104.

THE romance of the Morte Arthur contains a sort of abridgment of the most celebrated adventures of the Round Table; and, being written in comparatively modern language, gives the general reader an excellent idea of what romances of chivalry actually were. It has also the merit of being written in pure old English; and many of the wild adventures which it contains are told with a simplicity bordering upon the sublime. Several of these are referred to in the text; and I would have illustrated them by more full extracts, but as this curious work is about to be republished, I confine myself to the tale of the Chapel Perilous, and of the quest of Sir Launcelot after the Sangreal.

“Right so Sir Launcelot departed, and when he came to the Chapell Perilous he alighted downe, and tied his horse to a little gate. And as soon as he was within the churchyard, he saw, on the front of the chapell, many faire rich shields turned upside downe; and many of the shields Sir Launcelot had seene knights have before. With that he saw stand by him thirtie great knights, more by a yard than any man that ever he had seene, and all those grinned and gnashed at Sir Launcelot. And when he saw their countenance, hee dread them sore, and so put his shield afore him, and tooke his sword in his hand, ready to doe battaile; and they were all armed in black harneis, ready, with their shields and swords drawn. And when Sir Launcelot would have gone through them, they scattered on every side of him, and gave him the way; and therewith he waxed all bold, and entered into the chapell, and then hee saw no light but a dimme lampe burning, and then was he ware of a corps covered with a cloath of silke. Then Sir Launcelot stooped downe, and cut a piece of that cloth away; and then it fared under him as the earth had quaked a little, whereof he was afeard; and then hee saw a faire sword lye by the dead knight, and that he gat in his hand, and hied him out of the chappell. As soon as he was in the chappell-yerd, all the knights spoke to him with a gfmly voice, and said, 'Knight, Sir Launcelot, lay that sword from thee, or else thou shalt die.'—'Whether I live or die,' said Sir Launcelot, 'with no great words get yee it againe, therefore fight for it an yee list.' Therewith he passed through them; and beyond the chappell-yeard there met him a faire damosell, and said, 'Sir Launcelot, leave that sword behind thee, or thou wilt die for it.'—'I will not leave it,' said Sir Launcelot, 'for no threats.'—'No?' said she; 'and ye did leave that sword, Queen Guenever should ye never see.'—'Then were I a fool an I would leave this sword,' said Sir Launcelot.—'Now, gentle knight,' said the damosell, 'I require thee to kiss me once.'—'Nay,' said Sir Launcelot, 'that God forbid!'—'Well, sir,' said she, 'an thou haddest kissed me, thy life dayes had been done; but now, alas!' said she, 'I have lost all my labour, for I ordeined this chappell for thy sake, and for Sir Gawaine. And once I had Sir Gawaine within it; and at that time he fought with that knight which there lieth dead in yonder chappell, Sir Gilbert the bastard, and at that time hee smote off Sir Gilbert the bastard's left hand. And so, Sir Launcelot, now I tell thee, that I have loved thee these seaven yeare; but there may no woman have thy love but Queene Guenever. But sithen I may not rejoyce thee to have thy body alive, I had kept no more joy in this world but to have had thy dead body; and I would have balmed it and served, and so have kept it in my life daies, and daily I should have clipped thee, and kissed thee, in the despite of Queen Guenever.'—'Yee say well,' said Sir Launcelot; 'Jesus preserve me from your subtil craft.' And therewith he took his horse, and departed from her."

NOTE 2.

*A sinful man, and unconfessed,
He took the Sangreal's holy quest,
And, slumbering, saw the vision high,
He might not view with waking eye.*—P. 104.

One day, when Arthur was holding a high feast with his Knights of the Round Table, the Sangreal, or vessel out of which the last Passover was eaten (a precious relic, which had long remained concealed from human eyes, because of the sins of the land), suddenly appeared to him and all his chivalry. The consequence of this vision was, that all the knights took on them a solemn vow to seek the Sangreal. But alas! it could only be revealed to a knight at once accomplished in earthly chivalry, and pure and guiltless of evil conversation. All Sir Launcelot's noble accomplishments were therefore rendered vain by his guilty intrigue with Queen Guenever, or Ganore; and in his holy quest he encountered only such disgraceful disasters as that which follows:—

"But Sir Launcelot rode overthwart and endlong in a wild forest, and held no path but as wild adventure led him. And at the last he came unto a stone crosse, which departed two ways, in wast land; and, by the crosse, was a stone that was of marble, but it was so dark that Sir Launcelot might not well know what it was. Then Sir Launcelot looked by him, and saw an old chappell, and there he wend to have found people. And so Sir Launcelot tied his horse to a tree, and there

he put off his shield and hung it upon a tree, and then hee went unto the chappell doore, and found it wasted and broken. And within he found a faire altar, full richly arrayed with cloth of silk, and there stood a faire candlestick which beare six great candles, and the candlesticke was of silver. And when Sir Launcelot saw this light, hee had a great will for to enter into the chappell, but he could find no place where hee might enter. Then was he passing heavie and dismaied. Then he returned, and came againe to his horse, and tooke off his saddle and his bridle, and let him pasture; and unlaced his helme, and ungirded his sword, and laid him downe to sleepe upon his shield, before the crosse.

“And so hee fell on sleepe; and, halfe waking and halfe sleeping, he saw come by him two palfreys, both faire and white, the which beare a litter, therein lying a sicke knight. And when he was nigh the crosse, he there abode still. All this Sir Launcelot saw and beheld, for hee slept not verily, and hee heard him say, ‘O sweete Lord, when shall this sorrow leave me, and when shall the holy vessell come by me, where through I shall be blessed, for I have endured thus long for little trespassse!’ And thus a great while complained the knight, and alwaies Sir Launcelot heard it. With that Sir Launcelot saw the candlesticke, with the fire tapers, come before the crosse; but he could see nobody that brought it. Also there came a table of silver, and the holy vessell of the Sancgreall, the which Sir Launcelot had seen before that time in King Petchour’s house. And therewithall the sicke knight set him upright, and held up both his hands, and said, ‘Faire sweete Lord, which is here within the holy vessell, take heede to mee, that I may bee hole of this great malady!’ And therewith upon his hands, and upon his knees, he went so nigh that he touched the holy vessell, and kissed it: and anon he was hole, and then he said, ‘Lord God, I thank thee, for I am healed of this malady.’ Soo when the holy vessell had been there a great while, it went into the chappelle againe, with the candlesticke and the light, so that Sir Launcelot wist not where it became, for he was overtaken with sinne, that hee had no power to arise against the holy vessell, wherefore afterward many men said of him shame. But he tooke repentance afterward. Then the sicke knight dressed him upright, and kissed the crosse. Then anon his squire brought him his armes, and asked his lord how he did. ‘Certainly,’ said hee, ‘I thanke God right heartily, for through the holy vessell I am healed: but I have right great mervaile of this sleeping knight, which hath had neither grace nor power to awake during the time that this holy vessell hath beene here present.’—‘I dare it right well say,’ said the squire, ‘that this same knight is defouled with some manner of deadly sinne, whereof he has never confessed.’—‘By my faith,’ said the knight, ‘whatsoever he be, he is unhappie; for, as I deeme, hee is of the fellowship of the Round Table, the which is entered into the quest of the Sancgreall.’—‘Sir,’ said the squire, ‘here I have brought you all your armes, save your helme and your sword; and, therefore, by mine assent, now may ye take this knight’s helme and his sword;’ and so he did. And when he was cleane armed, he took Sir Launcelot’s horse, for he was better than his owne, and so they departed from the crosse.

"Then anon Sir Launcelot awaked, and set himself upright, and he thought him what hee had there seene, and whether it were dreames or not; right so he heard a voice that said, 'Sir Launcelot, more hardy than is the stone, and more bitter than is the wood, and more naked and bare than is the liefe of the fig-tree, therefore go thou from hence, and withdraw thee from this holy place.' And when Sir Launcelot heard this, he was passing heavy, and wist not what to doe. And so he departed sore weeping, and cursed the time that he was borne; for then he deemed never to have had more worship; for the words went unto his heart, till that he knew wherefore that hee was so called."

NOTE 3.

*And Dryden, in immortal strain,
Had raised the Table Round again.*—P. 104.

Dryden's melancholy account of his projected Epic Poem, blasted by the selfish and sordid parsimony of his patrons, is contained in an "Essay on Satire," addressed to the Earl of Dorset, and prefixed to the Translation of Juvenal. After mentioning a plan of supplying machinery from the guardian angels of kingdoms, mentioned in the Book of Daniel, he adds:—

"Thus, my lord, I have, as briefly as I could, given your lordship, and by you the world, a rude draught of what I have been long labouring in my imagination, and what I had intended to have put in practice (though far unable for the attempt of such a poem); and to have left the stage, to which my genius never much inclined me, for a work which would have taken up my life in the performance of it. This, too, I had intended chiefly for the honour of my native country, to which a poet is particularly obliged. Of two subjects, both relating to it, I was doubtful whether I should choose that of King Arthur conquering the Saxons, which, being farther distant in time, gives the greater scope to my invention; or that of Edward the Black Prince, in subduing Spain, and restoring it to the lawful prince, though a great tyrant, Don Pedro the Cruel; which, for the compass of time, including only the expedition of one year, for the greatness of the action, and its answerable event, for the magnanimity of the English hero, opposed to the ingratitude of the person whom he restored, and for the many beautiful episodes which I had interwoven with the principal design, together with the characters of the chiefest English persons (wherein, after Virgil and Spenser, I would have taken occasion to represent my living friends and patrons of the noblest families, and also shadowed the events of future ages in the succession of our imperial line)—with these helps, and those of the machines which I have mentioned, I might perhaps have done as well as some of my predecessors, or at least chalked out a way for others to amend my errors in a like design; but being encouraged only with fair words by King Charles II., my little salary ill paid, and no prospect of a future subsistence, I was then discouraged in the beginning of my attempt; and now age has overtaken me, and want, a more insufferable evil, through the change of the times, has wholly disabled me."

NOTE 4.

*Their theme the merry minstrels maile,
Of Ascapart, and Bevis bold.*—P. 105.

The "History of Bevis of Hampton" is abridged by my friend Mr. George Ellis, with that liveliness which extracts amusement even out of the most rude and unpromising of our old tales of chivalry. Ascapart, a most important personage in the romance, is thus described in an extract:—

"This geaunt was mighty and strong,
And full thirty foot was long.
He was bristled like a sow;
A foot he had between each brow;
His lips were great, and hung aside;
His eyen were hollow, his mouth was wide;
Lothly he was to look on than,
And liker a devil than a man.
His staff was a young oak,
Hard and heavy was his stroke."

Specimens of Metrical Romances, vol. ii. p. 136.

I am happy to say that the memory of Sir Bevis is still fragrant in his town of Southampton, the gate of which is sentinelled by the effigies of that doughty knight-errant and his gigantic associate.

NOTE 5.

*Day set on Norham's castled steep,
And Tweed's fair river, broad and deep, etc.*—P. 106.

The ruinous castle of Norham (anciently called Ubbanford) is situated on the southern bank of the Tweed, about six miles above Berwick, and where that river is still the boundary between England and Scotland. The extent of its ruins, as well as its historical importance, shows it to have been a place of magnificence, as well as strength. Edward I. resided there when he was created umpire of the dispute concerning the Scottish succession. It was repeatedly taken and retaken during the wars between England and Scotland; and, indeed, scarce any happened in which it had not a principal share. Norham Castle is situated on a steep bank which overhangs the river. The repeated sieges which the castle had sustained rendered frequent repairs necessary. In 1164, it was almost rebuilt by Hugh Pudsey, Bishop of Durham, who added a huge keep, or donjon; notwithstanding which, King Henry II., in 1174, took the castle from the bishop, and committed the keeping of it to William de Neville. After this period it seems to have been chiefly garrisoned by the king, and considered as a royal fortress. The Greys of Chillingham Castle were frequently the castellans, or captains of the garrison; yet, as the castle was situated in the patrimony of St. Cuthbert, the property was in the see of Durham till the Reformation. After that period it passed through various hands. At the union of the crowns, it was in the possession of Sir Robert Carey (afterwards Earl of Monmouth), for his own life, and that of two of his sons. After King James's accession, Carey sold Norham Castle to George Home, Earl of Dunbar, for £6,000. See his curious Memoirs, published by Mr. Constable of Edinburgh.

According to Mr. Pinkerton, there is in the British Museum, Cal. B. 6. 216, a curious memoir of the Dacres on the state of Norham Castle in 1522, not long after the battle of Flodden. The inner ward, or keep, is represented as impregnable:—"The provisions are three great vats of salt eels, forty-four kine, three hogsheads of salted salmon, forty quarters of grain, besides many cows and four hundred sheep, lying under the castle-wall nightly; but a number of the arrows wanted feathers, and a good Fletcher [i.e. maker of arrows] was required."—History of Scotland, vol. ii. p. 201, note.

The ruins of the castle are at present considerable, as well as picturesque. They consist of a large shattered tower, with many vaults, and fragments of other edifices enclosed within an outward wall of great circuit.

NOTE 6.

The battled towers, the donjon keep.—P. 106.

It is perhaps unnecessary to remind my readers that the donjon, in its proper signification, means the strongest part of a feudal castle—a high square tower, with walls of tremendous thickness, situated in the centre of the other buildings, from which, however, it was usually detached. Here, in case of the outward defences being gained, the garrison retreated to make their last stand. The donjon contained the great hall, and principal rooms of state for solemn occasions, and also the prison of the fortress; from which last circumstance we derive the modern and restricted use of the word dungeon. Ducange (voce DUNJO) conjectures plausibly, that the name is derived from these keeps being usually built upon a hill, which in Celtic is called dun. Borlase supposes the word came from the darkness of the apartments in these towers, which were thence figuratively called dungeons, thus deriving the ancient word from the modern application of it.

*Well was he armed from head to heel,

The artists of Milan were famous in the Middle Ages for their skill in armoury, as appears from the following passage, in which Froissart gives an account of the preparations made by Henry, Earl of Hereford, afterwards Henry IV., and Thomas, Duke of Norfolk, Earl Marischal, for their proposed combat in the lists at Coventry:—"These two lords made ample provision of all things necessary for the combat; and the Earl of Derby sent off messengers to Lombardy, to have armour from Sir Galeas, Duke of Milan. The duke complied with joy, and gave the knight, called Sir Francis, who had brought the message, the choice of all his armour for the Earl of Derby. When he had selected what he wished for in plated and mail armour, the Lord of Milan, out of his abundant love for the earl, ordered four of the best armourers in Milan to accompany the knight to England, that the Earl of Derby might be more completely armed."—JOHNES' Froissart, vol. iv. p. 597.

NOTE 8.

Who checks at me, to death is dight.—P. 108.

The crest and motto of Marmion are borrowed from the following story:—Sir David de Lindsay, first Earl of Crauford, was, among other gentlemen of quality, attended, during a visit to London, in 1390, by Sir William Dalzell, who was, according to my authority (Bower), not only excelling in wisdom, but also of a lively wit. Chancing to be at the court, he there saw Sir Piers Courtenay, an English knight, famous for skill in tilting, and for the beauty of his person, parading the palace, arrayed in a new mantle, bearing for device an embroidered falcon, with this rhyme:—

"I bear a falcon, fairest of flight,
Whoso pinches at her, his death is dight *
In graith." †

The Scottish knight, being a wag, appeared next day in a dress exactly similar to that of Courtenay, but bearing a magpie instead of the falcon, with a motto ingeniously contrived to rhyme to the vaunting inscription of Sir Piers:—

"I hear a pie picking at a piece,
Whoso picks at her, I shall pick at his nese, ‡
In faith."

This affront could only be expiated by a just with sharp lances. In the course, Dalzell left his helmet unlaced, so that it gave way at the touch of his antagonist's lance, and he thus avoided the shock of the encounter. This happened twice: in the third encounter the handsome Courtenay lost two of his front teeth. As the Englishman complained bitterly of Dalzell's fraud in not fastening his helmet, the Scottishman agreed to run six courses more, each champion staking in the hand of the king two hundred pounds, to be forfeited if, on entering the lists, any unequal advantage should be detected. This being agreed to, the wily Scot demanded that Sir Piers, in addition to the loss of his teeth, should consent to the extinction of one of his eyes, he himself having lost an eye in the fight of Otterburn. As Courtenay demurred to this equalization of optical powers, Dalzell demanded the forfeit; which, after much altercation, the king appointed to be paid to him, saying he surpassed the English both in wit and valour. This must appear to the reader a singular specimen of the humour of that time. I suspect the Jockey Club would have given a different decision from Henry IV.

NOTE 9.

*They hailed Lord Marmion :
 They hailed him Lord of Fontenaye,
 Of Lutterward, and Scrivelbaye,
 Of Tamworth tower and town.*—P. 110.

Lord Marmion, the principal character of the present romance, is entirely a fictitious personage. In earlier times, indeed, the family of Marmion, Lords of Fontenay, in Normandy, was highly distinguished. Robert de Marmion, Lord of Fontenay, a distinguished follower of the Conqueror, obtained a grant of the castle and town of Tamworth, and also of the manor of Scrivelby, in Lincolnshire. One or both of these noble possessions was held by the honourable service of being the royal champion, as the ancestors of Marmion had formerly been to the Dukes of Normandy. But after the castle and demesne of Tamworth had passed through four successive barons from Robert, the family became extinct in the person of Philip de Marmion, who died in 20th Edward I. without issue male. He was succeeded in his castle of Tamworth by Alexander de Freville, who married Mazera, his granddaughter. Baldwin de Freville, Alexander's descendant, in the reign of Richard II., by the supposed tenure of his castle of Tamworth, claimed the office of royal champion, and to do the service appertaining—namely, on the day of coronation, to ride, completely armed, upon a barbed horse, into Westminster Hall, and there to challenge the combat against any who would gainsay the king's title. But this office was adjudged to Sir John Dymoke, to whom the manor of Scrivelby had descended by another of the co-heiresses of Robert de Marmion; and it remains in that family, whose representative is hereditary champion of England at the present day. The family and possessions of Freville have merged in the Earls of Ferrars. I have not, therefore, created a new family, but only revived the titles of an old one in an imaginary personage.

It was one of the Marmion family who, in the reign of Edward II., performed that chivalrous feat before the very castle of Norham which Bishop Percy has woven into his beautiful ballad, "The Hermit of Warkworth." The story is thus told by Leland:—

"The Scottes cam yn to the marches of England, and destroyed the castles of Werk and Herbotel, and overran much of Northumberland marches.

"At this tyme, Thomas Gray and his friendes defended Norham from the Scottes.

"It were a wonderful processe to declare, what mischefes cam by hungre and asseges by the space of xi years in Northumberland; for the Scottes became so proude, after they had got Berwick, that they nothing esteemed the Englishmen.

"About this tyme there was a great feste made yn Lincolnshir, to which came many gentlemen and ladies; and amonge them one lady brought a heaulme for a man of were, with a very riche creste of gold, to William Marmion, knight, with a letter of commandement of her lady, that he should go into the daungerest place in England, and ther to let the heaulme be seene and known as famous. So he went to Norham; whither, within four days of cumming, cam Philip Moubray, guardian of Berwicke, having yn his bande 40 men of armes, the very flour of men of the Scottish marches.

"Thomas Gray, capitayne of Norham, seynge this, brought his garison afore the barriers of the castel, behind whom cam William, richly arrayed, as al glittering in gold, and wearing the heaulme, his lady's present.

"Then said Thomas Gray to Marmion, 'Sir Knight, ye be cum hither to fame your helmet: mount up on yowr horse, and ride lyke a valiant man to yowr foes even here at hand, and I forsake God if I rescue not thy body deade or alyve, or I myself wyl dye for it.'

"Whereupon he toke his cursere, and rode among the throng of ennemyes; the which layed sore stripes on him, and pulled him at the last out of his sadel to the grounde.

"Then Thomas Gray, with al the hole garrison, lette prick yn among the Scottes, and so wondid them and their horses that they were overthrowan; and Marmion, sore beten, was horsid agayn, and, with Gray, persewed the Scottes yn chase. There were taken 50 horse of price; and the women of Norham brought them to the foote men to follow the chase."

*Sir Hugh the Heron bold, late
Baron of Twissell, and of Ford,
And Captain of the Hold.—P. 111.*

Were accuracy of any consequence in a fictitious narrative, this castellan's name ought to have been William: for William Heron of Ford was husband to the famous Lady Ford whose siren charms are said to have cost our James IV. so dear. Moreover, the said William Heron was, at the time supposed, a prisoner in Scotland, being surrendered by Henry VIII. on account of his share in the slaughter of Sir Robert Ker of Cessford. His wife, represented in the text as residing at the Court of Scotland, was, in fact, living in her own castle at Ford. See Sir RICHARD HERON'S curious Genealogy of the Heron Family.

*James backed the cause of that mock prince,
Warbeck, that Flemish counterfeit,
Who on the gibbet paid the cheat.
Then did I march with Surrey's power,
What time we razed old Ayton tower.—P. 114.*

The story of Perkin Warbeck, or Richard, Duke of York, is well known. In 1496 he was received honourably in Scotland; and James IV., after conferring upon him in marriage his own relation, the Lady Catharine Gordon, made war on England in behalf of his pretensions.

To retaliate an invasion of England, Surrey advanced into Berwickshire at the head of considerable forces; but retreated, after taking the considerable fortress of Ayton.

NOTE 12.

*...I trow,
Norham can find you guides enow;
Far here be some have prick'd as far,
On Scottish ground, as to Dunbar;
Have drunk the monks of St. Bothan's ale,
And driven the beeves of Lauderdale;
Harried the wives of Greenlaw's goods,
And given them light to set their hoods.*—P. 115.

The garrisons of the English castles of Wark, Norham, and Berwick were, as may be easily supposed, very troublesome neighbours to Scotland. Sir Richard Maitland of Ledington wrote a poem, called "The Blind Baron's Comfort," when his barony of Blythe, in Lauderdale, was harried by Rowland Foster, the English captain of Wark, with his company, to the number of 300 men. They spoiled the poetical knight of 5,000 sheep, 200 nolt, 30 horses and mares; the whole furniture of his house of Blythe, worth 100 pounds Scots (£8, 6s. 8d.), and everything else that was portable.

The last line of the text contains a phrase by which the Borderers jocularly intimated the burning of a house. When the Maxwells, in 1685, burned the castle of Lochwood, they said they did so to give the Lady Johnstone "light to set her hood." Nor was the phrase inapplicable; for in a letter the Earl of Northumberland writes to the king and council that he dressed himself at midnight, at Warkworth, by the blaze of the neighbouring villages burned by the Scottish marauders.

*The priest of Shoreswood—he could rein
The wildest war-horse in your train.*—P. 116.

This churchman seems to have been akin to Welsh, the vicar of St. Thomas of Exeter, a leader among the Cornish insurgents in 1549. "This man," says Holinshed, "had many good things in him. He was of no great stature, but well set, and mightilie compact. He was a very good wrestler; shot well, both in the longbow and also in the crossbow; he handled his hand-gun and peece very well; he was a very good woodman, and a hardie, and such a one as would not give his head for the polling, or his beard for the washing. He was a companion in any exercise of activitie, and of a courteous and gentle behaviour. He was descended of a good honest parentage, being borne at Peneverin in Cornwall; and yet, in this rebellion, an arch-captain and a principal doer."—Vol. iv. p. 958, 4to edition. This model of clerical talents had the misfortune to be hanged upon the steeple of his own church.

.....that Grot where Olives nod,
 Where, darling of each heart and eye,
 From all the youth of Sicily,
 Saint Rosalie retired to God.—P. 117.

“Santa Rosalia was of Palermo, and born of a very noble family, and when very young abhorred so much the vanities of this world, and avoided the converse of mankind, resolving to dedicate herself wholly to God Almighty, that she, by Divine inspiration, forsook her father’s house, and never was more heard of till her body was found in that cleft of a rock, on that almost inaccessible mountain, where now the chapel is built; and they affirm she was carried up there by the hands of angels; for that place was not formerly so accessible (as now it is) in the days of the saint; and even now it is a very bad, and steepy, and breakneck way. In this frightful place, this holy woman lived a great many years, feeding only on what she found growing on that barren mountain, and creeping into a narrow and dreadful cleft in a rock, which was always dropping wet, and was her place of retirement as well as prayer; having worn out even the rock with her knees in a certain place, which is now opened on purpose to show it to those who come here. This chapel is very richly adorned; and on the spot where the saint’s dead body was discovered, which is just beneath the hole in the rock, which is opened on purpose, as I said, there is a very fine statue of marble, representing her in a lying posture, railed in all about with fine iron and brass work; and the altar, on which they say mass, is built just over it.”—Voyage to Sicily and Malta, by Mr. John Dryden (son to the poet), p. 107.

Friar John
Himself still sleeps before his beads
Have marked ten aves and two creeds.—P. 119.

Friar John understood the soporific virtue of his beads and breviary as well as his namesake in Rabelais. “But Gargantua could not sleep by any means, on which side soever he turned himself. Whereupon the monk said to him, ‘I never sleep soundly but when I am at sermon or prayers. Let us therefore begin, you and I, the seven penitential psalms, to try whether you shall not quickly fall asleep.’ The conceit pleased Gargantua very well; and beginning the first of these psalms, as soon as they came to Beati quorum they fell asleep, both the one and the other.”

NOTE 16.

The summoned Palmer came in place.—119.

A palmer, opposed to a pilgrim, was one who made it his sole business to visit different holy shrines, travelling incessantly, and subsisting by charity; whereas the pilgrim retired to his usual home and occupations, when he had paid his devotions at the particular spot which was the object of his pilgrimage. The palmers seem to have been the Questionarii of the ancient Scottish canons 1242 and 1296.

NOTE 17.

*To fair St. Andrews bound,
Within the ocean-cave to pray
Where good Saint Rule his holy lay,
From midnight to the dawn of day,
Sung to the billows' sound.*—P. 120.

St. Regulus (Scottice, St. Rule), a monk of Patræ, in Achaia, warned by a vision, is said, A.D. 370, to have sailed westward, until he landed at St. Andrews in Scotland, where he founded a chapel and tower. The latter is still standing, and, though we may doubt the precise date of its foundation, is certainly one of the most ancient edifices in Scotland. A cave, nearly fronting the ruinous castle of the Archbishops of St. Andrews, bears the name of this religious person. It is difficult of access, and the rock in which it is hewn is washed by the German Ocean. It is nearly round, about ten feet in diameter, and the same in height. On one side is a sort of stone altar; on the other an aperture into an inner den, where the miserable ascetic, who inhabited this dwelling, probably slept. At full tide, egress and regress are hardly practicable. As Regulus first colonized the metropolitan see of Scotland, and converted the inhabitants in the vicinity, he has some reason to complain that the ancient name of Killrule (Cella Regulæ) should have been superseded, even in favour of the tutelar saint of Scotland. The reason of the change was, that St. Rule is said to have brought to Scotland the relics of St. Andrew.

NOTE 18.

*Thence to Saint Fillan's blessed well,
Whose spring can frenzied dreams dispel,
And the crazed brain restore.*—P. 120.

St. Fillan was a Scottish saint of some reputation. Although Popery is, with us, matter of abomination, yet the common people still retain some of the superstitions connected with it. There are in Perthshire several wells and springs dedicated to St. Fillan, which are still places of pilgrimage and offerings, even among the Protestants. They are held powerful in cases of madness, and, in some of very late occurrence, lunatics have been left all night bound to the holy stone, in confidence that the saint would cure and unloose them before morning.

NOTE 19.

*The scenes are desert now, and bare,
Where flourished once a forest fair.*—P. 122.

Ettrick Forest, now a range of mountainous sheep-walks, was anciently reserved for the pleasure of the royal chase. Since it was dis-

parked, the wood has been, by degrees, almost totally destroyed, although, wherever protected from the sheep, copses soon arise without any planting. When the king hunted there, he often summoned the array of the country to meet and assist his sport. Thus, in 1528, James V. "made proclamation to all lords, barons, gentlemen, landward-men, and freeholders, that they should compear at Edinburgh, with a month's victuals, to pass with the king where he pleased, to danton the thieves of Tiviotdale, Annandale, Liddisdale, and other parts of that country; and also warned all gentlemen that had good dogs to bring them, that he might hunt in the said country as he pleased: The while the Earl of Argyle, the Earl of Huntley, the Earl of Athole, and so all the rest of the gentlemen of the Highland, did, and brought their hounds with them in like manner, to hunt with the king, as he pleased.

"The second day of June the king passed out of Edinburgh to the hunting, with many of the nobles and gentlemen of Scotland with him, to the number of twelve thousand men; and then passed to Meggitland, and hounded and hawked all the country and bounds; that is to say, Crammat, Pappertlaw, St. Mary-laws, Carlavrick, Chapel, Ewindoores, and Longhope. I heard say he slew, in these bounds, eighteen score of harts.

These huntings had, of course, a military character, and attendance upon them was a part of the duty of a vassal. The Act for abolishing ward or military tenures in Scotland enumerates the services of hunting, hosting, watching, and warding, as those which were in future to be illegal.

Taylor, the water-poet, has given an account of the mode in which these huntings were conducted in the Highlands of Scotland, in the seventeenth century, having been present at Braemar upon such an occasion:—

"There did I find the truly noble and right honourable lords, John Erskine, Earl of Mar; James Stewart, Earl of Murray; George Gordon, Earl of Engye, son and heir to the Marquis of Huntley; James Erskine, Earl of Buchan; and John, Lord Erskine, son and heir to the Earl of Mar, and their countesses, with my much honoured and my last assured and approved friend, Sir William Murray, knight of Abercarney, and hundreds of others, knights, esquires, and their followers; all and every man, in general, in one habit, as if Lycurgus had been there and made laws of equality; for once in the year, which is the whole month of August, and sometimes part of September, many of the nobility and gentry of the kingdom (for their pleasure) do come into these Highland countries to hunt; where they do conform themselves to the habit of the Highlandmen, who, for the most part, speak nothing but Irish, and in former time were those people which were called the Red-shanks. Their habit is shoes, with but one sole a-piece; stockings (which they call short hose), made of a warm stuff of diverse colours, which they call tartan; as for breeches, many of them, nor their forefathers, never wore any, but a jerkin of the same stuff that their hose is of; their garters being bands or wreaths of hay or straw; with a plaid about their shoulders, which is a mantle of diverse colours, much finer and lighter stuff than their hose; with blue flat caps on their heads; a handkerchief, knit with two knots, about their necks: and thus are they attired. Now their weapons are—long bowes and forked arrows, swords and targets, harquebusses, muskets, durks, and Lochaber axes. With these arms I found many of them armed for the hunting. As for their attire, any man, of what degree soever, that comes amongst them must not disdain to wear it, for if they do, then they will disdain to hunt, or willingly to bring in their dogs; but if men be kind unto them, and be in their habit, then are they conquered with kindness, and the sport will be plentiful. This was the reason that I found so many noblemen and gentlemen in those shapes. But to proceed to the hunting:—

“My good Lord of Marr having put me into that shape, I rode with him from his house, where I saw the ruins of an old castle, called the Castle of Kindroghit. It was built by King Malcolm Canmore (for a hunting-house), who reigned in Scotland when Edward the Confessor, Harold, and Norman William reigned in England. I speak of it because it was the last house I saw in those parts; for it was the space of twelve days after before I saw either house, cornfield, or habitation for any creature but deer, wild horses, wolves, and such like creatures—which made me doubt that I should never have seen a house again.

“Thus, the first day, we travelled eight miles, where there were small cottages, built on purpose to lodge in, which they call longuhards. I thank my good Lord Erskine he commanded that I should always be lodged in his lodging: the kitchen being always on the side of a bank: many kettles and pots boiling, and many spits turning and winding, with great variety of cheer—as venison baked; sodden, rost, and stewed beef; mutton, goats, kid, hares, fresh salmon, pigeons, hens, capons, chickens, partridges, muir-coots, heath-cocks, caperkellies, and termagants; good ale, sacke, white and claret, tent (or allegant), with most potent aquavitæ.

“All these, and more than these, we had continually in superfluous abundance, caught by falconers, fowlers, fishers, and brought by my lord's tenants and purveyors to victual our camp, which consisteth of fourteen or fifteen hundred men and horses. The manner of the hunting is this: Five or six hundred men do rise early in the morning, and they do disperse themselves divers ways, and seven, eight, or ten miles compass, they do bring, or chase in, the deer in many herds (two, three, or four hundred in a herd), to such or such a place, as the noblemen shall appoint them. Then, when day is come, the lords and gentlemen of their companies do ride or go to the said places, sometimes wading up to the middles, through burns and rivers; and then, they being come to the place, do lie down on the ground, till those foresaid scouts, which are called the Tinkhell, do bring down the deer. But, as the proverb says of the bad cook, so these tinkhell men do lick their own fingers; for, besides their bows and arrows which they carry with them, we can hear, now and then, a harquebuss or a musket go off, which they do seldom discharge in vain. Then, after we had staid there three hours, or thereabouts, we might perceive the deer appear on the hills round about us

(their heads making a show like a wood), which, being followed close by the tinkhell, are chased down into the valley where we lay. Then all the valley, on each side, being waylaid with a hundred couple of strong Irish greyhounds, they are all let loose, as occasion serves, upon the herd of deer, that with dogs, guns, arrows, durks, and daggers, in the space of two hours, fourscore fat deer were slain; which after are disposed of, some one way, and some another, twenty and thirty miles, and more than enough left for us, to make merry withall, at our rendezvous."

NOTE 20.

By-lone St. Mary's silent lake.—P. 126.

This beautiful sheet of water forms the reservoir from which the Yarrow takes its course. It is connected with a smaller lake, called the Loch of the Lowes, and is surrounded by mountains. In the winter it is still frequented by flights of wild swans; hence my friend Mr. Wordsworth's lines :—

"The swan on sweet St. Mary's lake
Floats double, swan and shadow."

Near the lower extremity of the lake are the ruins of Dryhope tower, the birthplace of Mary Scott, daughter of Philip Scott of Dryhope, and famous by the traditional name of the Flower of Yarrow. She was married to Walter Scott of Harden, no less renowned for his depredations than his bride for her beauty. Her romantic appellation was, in later days, with equal justice, conferred on Miss Mary Lilius Scott, the last of the elder branch of the Harden family. The author well remembers the talent and spirit of the latter Flower of Yarrow, though age had then injured the charms which procured her the name. The words usually sung to the air of "Tweedside," beginning, "What beauties does Flora disclose," were composed in her honour.

.....in feudal strife, a foe
Hath laid Our Lady's chapel low.—P. 126.

The chapel of St. Mary of the Lowes (de lacubus) was situated on the eastern side of the lake, to which it gives name. It was injured by the clan of Scott, in a feud with the Cranstouns, but continued to be a place of worship during the seventeenth century. The vestiges of the building can now scarcely be traced, but the burial-ground is still used as a cemetery. A funeral in a spot so very retired has an uncommonly striking effect. The vestiges of the chaplain's house are yet visible. Being in a high situation, it commanded a full view of the lake, with the opposite mountain of Bourhope, belonging, with the lake itself, to Lord Napier. On the left hand is the tower of Dryhope, mentioned in the preceding note.

.....the Wizard's grave;
*That Wizard Priest's, whose bones are thrust
 From company of holy dust.*—P. 127.

At one corner of the burial-ground of the demolished chapel, but without its precincts, is a small mound, called "Binram's Corse," where tradition deposits the remains of a necromantic priest, the former tenant of the chaplainry. His story much resembles that of Ambrosio in "The Monk," and has been made the theme of a ballad by my friend, Mr. James Hogg, more poetically designed, "The Ettrick Shepherd." To his volume, entitled "The Mountain Bard," which contains this and many other legendary stories and ballads of great merit, I refer the curious reader.

NOTE 23.

*Some ruder and more savage scene,
 Like that which frowns round dark Loch-skene.*—P. 128.

Loch-skene is a mountain lake, of considerable size, at the head of the Moffat water. The character of the scenery is uncommonly savage; and the earn, or Scottish eagle, has, for many ages, built its nest yearly upon an islet in the lake. Loch-skene discharges itself into a brook, which, after a short and precipitate course, falls from a cataract of immense height, and gloomy grandeur, called, from its appearance, the "Grey Mare's Tail." The "Giant's Grave," afterwards mentioned, is a sort of trench, which bears that name, a little way from the foot of the cataract. It has the appearance of a battery, designed to command the pass.

Where, from high Whitby's cloistered pile.—P. 129.

The abbey of Whitby, in the Archdeaconry of Cleveland, on the coast of Yorkshire, was founded A.D. 657, in consequence of a vow of Oswy, king of Northumberland. It contained both monks and nuns of the Benedictine order; but, contrary to what was usual in such establishments, the abbess was superior to the abbot. Its ruins are very magnificent.

NOTE 25.

Bound to St. Cuthbert's Holy Isle.—P. 129.

Lindisfarne, an isle on the coast of Northumberland, was called Holy Island, from the sanctity of its ancient monastery, and from its having been the episcopal seat of the see of Durham during the early ages of British Christianity. A succession of holy men held that office; but their merits were swallowed up in the superior fame of St. Cuthbert, who was sixth Bishop of Durham, and who bestowed the name of his "patrimony" upon the extensive property of the see. The ruins of the monastery upon Holy Island betoken great antiquity. The arches are, in general, strictly Saxon, and the pillars which support them, short, strong, and massy. In some places, however, there are pointed windows, which indicate that the building has been repaired at a period long subsequent to the original foundation. The exterior ornaments of the building, being of a light sandy stone, have been wasted, as described in the text. Lindisfarne is not properly an island, but rather, as the venerable Bede has termed it, a semi-isle; for, although surrounded by the sea at full tide, the ebb leaves the sands dry between it and the opposite coasts of Northumberland, from which it is about three miles distant.

*Now in their convent cell
A Saxon princess once did dwell,
The lovely Edelfleda.*—P. 136.

She was the daughter of King Oswy, who, in gratitude to Heaven for the great victory which he won in 655, against Penda, the pagan King of Mercia, dedicated Edelfleda, then but a year old, to the service of God, in the monastery of Whitby, of which St. Hilda was then abbess. She afterwards adorned the place of her education with great magnificence.

NOTE 28.

*.....of thousand snakes, each one
Was changed into a coil of stone,
When holy Hilda prayed;
They told how sea-fowls' pinions fail,
As over Whitby's towers they sail.*—P. 136.

These two miracles are much insisted upon by all ancient writers who have occasion to mention either Whitby or St. Hilda. The relics of the snakes which infested the precincts of the convent, and were, at the abbess's prayer, not only beheaded but petrified, are still found about the rocks, and are termed by Protestant fossilists Ammonites.

The other miracle is thus mentioned by Camden: "It is also ascribed to the power of her sanctity, that these wild geese, which, in the winter, fly in great flocks to the lakes and rivers unfrozen in the southern parts, to the great amazement of every one, fall down suddenly upon the ground, when they are in their flight over certain neighbouring fields hereabouts; a relation I should not have made, if I had not received it from several credible men. But those who are less inclined to heed superstition attribute it to some occult quality in the ground, and to somewhat of antipathy between it and the geese, such as they say is betwixt wolves and scylla roots; for that such hidden tendencies and aversions, as we call sympathies and antipathies, are implanted in many things by provident Nature for the preservation of them, is a thing so evident that everybody grants it." Mr. Charlton, in his history of Whitby, points out the true origin of the fable, from the number of sea-gulls that, when flying from a storm, often alight near Whitby; and from the woodcocks, and other birds of passage, who do the same upon their arrival on shore, after a long flight.

NOTE 29.

*His body's resting-place, of old,
How oft their patron changed, they told.*—P. 136.

St. Cuthbert was, in the choice of his sepulchre, one of the most mutable and unreasonable saints in the Calendar. He died A.D. 688, in a hermitage upon the Farne Islands, having resigned the bishopric of Lindisfarne, or Holy Island, about two years before. His body was brought to Lindisfarne, where it remained until a descent of the Danes, about 793, when the monastery was nearly destroyed. The monks fled to Scotland with what they deemed their chief treasure, the relics of St. Cuthbert. The saint was, however, a most capricious fellow-traveller; which was the more intolerable, as, like Sindbad's Old Man of the Sea, he journeyed upon the shoulders of his companions. They paraded him through Scotland for several years, and came as far west as Whithern, in Galloway, whence they attempted to sail for Ireland, but were driven back by tempests. He at length made a halt at Norham; from thence he went to Melrose, where he remained stationary for a short time, and then caused himself to be launched upon the Tweed in a stone coffin, which landed him at Tilmouth, in Northumberland.

The resting-place of the remains of this saint is not now matter of uncertainty. So recently as May 17, 1827, eleven hundred and thirty-nine years after his death, their discovery and disinterment were effected. Under a blue stone, in the middle of the shrine of St. Cuthbert, at the eastern extremity of the choir of Durham Cathedral, there was then found a walled grave, containing the coffins of the saint. The first, or outer one, was ascertained to be that of 1541; the second of 1041; the third, or inner one, answering in every particular to the description of that of 698, was found to contain, not indeed, as had been averred then, and even until 1539, the incorruptible body but the entire skeleton of the saint; the bottom of the grave being perfectly dry, free from offensive smell, and without the slightest symptom that a human body had ever undergone decomposition within its walls. The skeleton was found swathed in five silk robes of emblematical embroidery, the ornamental parts laid with gold leaf, and these again covered with a robe of linen. Beside the skeleton were also deposited several gold and silver insignia, and other relics of the saint.

[Speaking of the burial of Cuthbert, Mr. Hartshorne says: "Aldhune was at that time bishop of the previously for a long period wandering See of Lindisfarne. But we now hear no more of that ancient name as the seat of Episcopacy. A cathedral church, such as it was.....was speedily erected upon the hill of Durham. This church was consecrated, with much magnificence and solemnity, in the year 999."—History of Northumberland, p. 227.]

*Even Scotland's dauntless king and heir.....
Before his standard fled.*—P. 137.

Every one has heard that when David I., with his son Henry, invaded Northumberland in 1136, the English host marched against them under the holy banner of St. Cuthbert, to the efficacy of which was imputed the great victory which they obtained in the bloody battle of Northallerton, or Cutonmoor. The conquerors were at least as much indebted to the jealousy and intractability of the different tribes who composed David's army; among whom, as mentioned in the text, were the Galwegians, the Britons of Strath-Clyde, the men of Teviotdale and Lothian, with many Norman and German warriors, who asserted the cause of the Empress Maud. See CHALMERS' Caledonia, vol. i. p. 622; a most laborious, curious, and interesting publication, from which considerable defects of style and manner ought not to turn aside the Scottish antiquary.

Edged Alfred's falchion on the Dane,
And turned the Conqueror back again.*—P. 137.

Cuthbert, we have seen, had no great reason to spare the Danes, when opportunity offered. Accordingly, I find, in Simeon of Durham, that the saint appeared in a vision to Alfred, when lurking in the marshes of Glastonbury, and promised him assistance and victory over his heathen enemies; a consolation which, as was reasonable, Alfred, after the victory of Ashendown, rewarded by a royal offering at the shrine of the saint. As to William the Conqueror, the terror spread before his army, when he marched to punish the revolt of the Northumbrians, in 1066, had forced the monks to fly once more to Holy Island with the body of the saint. It was, however, replaced before William left the north; and, to balance accounts, the Conqueror having intimated an indiscreet curiosity to view the saint's body, he was, while in the act of commanding the shrine to be opened, seized with heat and sickness, accompanied with such a panic terror that, notwithstanding there was a sumptuous dinner prepared for him, he fled without eating a morsel (which the monkish historian seems to have thought no small part both of the miracle and the penance), and never drew his bridle till he got to the river Tees.

*Saint Cuthbert sits, and toils to frame
The sea-born beads that bear his name.*—P. 137.

Although we do not learn that Cuthbert was, during his life, such an artificer as Dunstan, his brother in sanctity, yet, since his death, he has acquired the reputation of forging those Entrochi which are found among the rocks of Holy Island, and pass there by the name of St. Cuthbert's Beads. While at this task, he is supposed to sit during the night upon a certain rock, and use another as his anvil. This story was perhaps credited in former days; at least the saint's legend contains some not more probable.

NOTE 33.

Old Colwulf.—P. 138.

Ceolwulf, or Colwulf, King of Northumberland, flourished in the eighth century. He was a man of some learning, for the venerable Bede dedicates to him his "Ecclesiastical History." He abdicated the throne about 738, and retired to Holy Island, where he died in the odour of sanctity. Saint as Colwulf was, however, I fear the foundation of the penance-vault does not correspond with his character; for it is recorded among his memorabilia that, finding the air of the island raw and cold, he indulged the monks, whose rule had hitherto confined them to milk or water, with the comfortable privilege of using wine or ale. If any rigid antiquary insists on this objection, he is welcome to suppose the penance-vault was intended, by the founder, for the more genial purposes of a cellar.

NOTE 34.

Tynemouth's haughty Prioress.—P. 139.

That there was an ancient priory at Tynemouth is certain. Its ruins are situated on a high rocky point; and, doubtless, many a vow was made to the shrine by the distressed mariners who drove towards the iron-bound coast of Northumberland in stormy weather. It was anciently a nunnery; for Virca, Abbess of Tynemouth, presented St. Cuthbert (yet alive) with a rare winding-sheet, in emulation of a holy lady called Tuda, who had sent him a coffin. But, as in the case of Whitby and of Holy Island, the introduction of nuns at Tynemouth in the reign of Henry VIII. is an anachronism. The nunnery at Holy Island is altogether fictitious. Indeed, St. Cuthbert was unlikely to permit such an establishment; for, notwithstanding his accepting the mortuary gifts above-mentioned, and his carrying on a visiting acquaintance with the Abbess of Coldingham, he certainly hated the whole female sex, and, in revenge of a slippery trick played on him by an Irish princess, he, after death, inflicted severe penances on such as presumed to approach within a certain distance of his shrine.

*On those the wall was to enclose,
Alive, within the tomb.*—P. 142.

It is well known that the religious, who broke their vows of chastity, were subjected to the same penalty as the Roman vestals in a similar case. A small niche, sufficient to enclose their bodies, was made in the massive wall of the convent; a slender pittance of food and water was deposited in it; and the awful words, Vade in pace, were the signal for immuring the criminal. It is not likely that, in latter times, this punishment was often resorted to; but among the ruins of the Abbey of Coldingham were some years ago discovered the remains of a female skeleton, which, from the shape of the niche and position of the figure, seemed to be that of an immured nun.

NOTE 36.

The village inn.—P. 154.

The accommodations of a Scottish hostelry, or inn, in the sixteenth century, may be collected from Dunbar's admirable tale of "The Friars of Berwick." Simon Lawder, "the gay ostler," seems to have lived very comfortably; and his wife decorated her person with a scarlet kirtle and a belt of silk and silver, and rings upon her fingers; and feasted her paramour with rabbits, capons, partridges, and Bordeaux wine. At least, if the Scottish inns were not good, it was not for want of encouragement from the legislature, which, so early as the reign of James I., not only enacted that in all burghs and fairs there be hostellaries, having stables and chambers, and provision for man and horse, but by another statute ordained that no man, travelling on horse or on foot, should presume to lodge anywhere except in these hostellaries; and that no person, save innkeepers, should receive such travellers, under the penalty of forty shillings for exercising such hospitality. But, in spite of these provident enactments, the Scottish hostels are but indifferent, and strangers continue to find reception in the houses of individuals.

The death of a dear friend.—P. 159.

Among other omens to which faithful credit is given among the Scottish peasantry, is what is called the "dead-bell," explained by my friend James Hogg to be that tinkling in the ears which the country people regard as the secret intelligence of some friend's decease.

NOTE 38.

The Goblin Hall.—P. 163.

A vaulted hall under the ancient castle of Gifford or Yester (for it bears either name indifferently), the construction of which has from a very remote period been ascribed to magic. The statistical Account of the Parish of Garvald and Baro gives the following account of the present state of this castle and apartment:—"Upon a peninsula, formed by the water of Hopes on the east and a large rivulet on the west, stands the ancient castle of Yester. Sir David Dalrymple, in his Annals, relates that 'Hugh Gifford de Yester died in 1267; that in his castle there was a capacious cavern, formed by magical art, and called in the country Bo-Hall—i.e. Hobbogoblin Hall.' A staircase of twenty-four steps led down to this apartment, which is a large and spacious hall, with an arched roof; and though it hath stood for so many centuries, and been exposed to the external air for a period of fifty or sixty years, it is still as firm and entire as if it had only stood a few years. From the floor of this hall another staircase of thirty-six steps leads down to a pit which hath a communication with Hopes water. A great part of the walls of this large and ancient castle is still standing. There is a tradition that the castle of Yester was the last fortification, in this country, that surrendered to General Gray, sent into Scotland by Protector Somerset."—Statistical Account, vol. xiii. I have only to add that, in 1737, the Goblin Hall was tenanted by the Marquis of Tweeddale's falconer, as I learn from a poem by Boyse, entitled "Retirement," written upon visiting Yester. It is now rendered inaccessible by the fall of the stair.

In 1263 Haco, King of Norway, came into the Firth of Clyde with a powerful armament, and made a descent at Largs, in Ayrshire. Here he was encountered and defeated, on the 2nd October, by Alexander III. Haco retreated to Orkney, where he died soon after this disgrace to his arms. There are still existing, near the place of battle, many barrows, some of which, having been opened, were found, as usual, to contain bones and urns.

But, in his wizard habit strange.—P. 164.

"Magicians, as is well known, were very curious in the choice and form of their vestments. Their caps are oval, or like pyramids, with lappets on each side and fur within. Their gowns are long, and furred with fox-skins, under which they have a linen garment reaching to the knee. Their girdles are three inches broad, and have many cabalistical names, with crosses, trines, and circles inscribed on them. Their shoes should be of new russet leather, with a cross cut upon them. Their knives are dagger fashion, and their swords have neither guard nor scabbard."—Reginald Scott.

"A pentacle is a piece of fine linen, folded with five corners, according to the five senses, and suitably inscribed with characters. This the magician extends towards the spirits which he invokes, when they are stubborn and rebellious, and refuse to be conformable unto the ceremonies and rites of magic."—See the Discourses, etc., in Reginald Scott's Discovery of Witchcraft, ed. 1665, p. 66.

NOTE 43.

*Yet still the knightly spear and shield
The Elfin Warrior doth wield
Upon the brown hill's breast.*—P. 167.

The following extract from the Essay upon the Fairy Superstitions, in the "Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border," vol. ii., will show whence many of the particulars of the combat between Alexander III. and the Goblin Knight are derived:—

Gervase of Tilbury (Otia Imperial ap. Script. rer. Brunswic, vol. i. p. 797) relates the following popular story concerning a fairy knight: "Osbert, a bold and powerful baron, visited a noble family in the vicinity of Wandlebury, in the bishopric of Ely. Among other stories related in the social circle of his friends, who, according to custom, amused each other by repeating ancient tales and traditions, he was informed that if any knight, unattended, entered an adjacent plain by moonlight, and challenged an adversary to appear, he would be immediately encountered by a spirit in the form of a knight. Osbert resolved to make the experiment, and set out, attended by a single squire, whom he ordered to remain without the limits of the plain, which was surrounded by an ancient intrenchment. On repeating the challenge, he was instantly assailed by an adversary, whom he quickly unhorsed, and seized the reins of his steed. During this operation his ghostly opponent sprung up, and darting his spear, like a javelin, at Osbert, wounded him in the thigh. Osbert returned in triumph with the horse, which he committed to the care of his servant. The horse was of a sable colour, as well as his whole accoutrements, and apparently of great beauty and vigour. He remained with his keeper till cock-crowing, when, with eyes flashing fire, he reared, spurned the ground, and vanished. On disarming himself, Osbert perceived that he was wounded, and that one of his steel boots was full of blood." Gervase adds that, "as long as he lived, the scar of his wound opened afresh on the anniversary of the eve on which he encountered the spirit." Less fortunate was the gallant Bohemian knight, who, travelling by night with a single companion, "came in sight of a fairy host arrayed under displayed banners. Despising the remonstrances of his friend, the knight pricked forward to break a lance with a champion, who advanced from the ranks apparently in defiance. His companion beheld the Bohemian overthrown, horse and man, by his aerial adversary; and returning to the spot next morning, he found the mangled corpses of the knight and steed."—Hierarchy of Blessed Angels, p. 554.

Besides these instances of elfin chivalry above quoted, many others might be alleged in support of employing fairy machinery in this manner. The forest of Glenmore, in the North Ilighlands, is believed to be haunted by a spirit called Lham-dearg, in the array of an ancient warrior, having a bloody hand, from which he takes his name. He insists upon those with whom he meets doing battle with him; and the clergyman who makes up an account of the district, extant in the Macfarlane MS. in the Advocates' Library, gravely assures us that, in his time, Lham-dearg fought with three brothers, whom he met in his walk, none of whom long survived the ghostly conflict. Barclay, in his "Euphormion," gives a singular account of an officer who had ventured, with his servant, rather to intrude upon a haunted house, in a town in Flanders, than to put up with worse quarters elsewhere. After taking the usual precautions of providing fires, lights, and arms, they watched till midnight, when behold! the severed arm of a man dropped from the ceiling; this was followed by the legs, the other arm, the trunk, and the head of the body, all separately. The members rolled together, united themselves in the presence of the astonished soldiers, and formed a gigantic warrior, who defied them both to combat. Their blows, although they penetrated the body and amputated the limbs of their strange antagonist, had, as the reader may easily believe, little effect on an enemy who possessed such powers of self-union; nor did his efforts make more effectual impression upon them. How the combat terminated I do not exactly remember, and have not the book by me; but I think the spirit made to the intruders on his mansion the usual proposal, that they should renounce their redemption, which being declined, he was obliged to retreat.

The northern champions of old were accustomed peculiarly to search for, and delight in, encounters with such military spectres. See a whole chapter on the subject, in BARTHOLINUS, De Causis contemptæ Mortis à Danis, p. 253.

I cannot help here mentioning that, on the night in which these lines were written, suggested, as they were, by a sudden fall of snow, beginning after sunset, an unfortunate man perished exactly in the manner here described, and his body was next morning found close to his own house. The accident happened within five miles of the farm of Ashestiel.

Forbes.—P. 174.

Sir William Forbes of Pitsligo, Baronet; unequaled, perhaps, in the degree of individual affection entertained for him by his friends, as well as in the general respect and esteem of Scotland at large. His "Life of Beattie," whom he befriended and patronized in life, as well as celebrated after his decease, was not long published before the benevolent and affectionate biographer was called to follow the subject of his narrative. This melancholy event very shortly succeeded the marriage of the friend, to whom this introduction is addressed, with one of Sir William's daughters.

NOTE. 46.

Friar Rush.—P. 177.

Alias "Will o' the Wisp." This personage is a strolling demon, or esprit follet, who, once upon a time, got admittance into a monastery as a scullion, and played the monks many pranks. He was also a sort of Robin Goodfellow and Jack o' Lanthorn. It is in allusion to this mischievous demon that Milton's clown speaks,—

"She was pinched, and pulled, she said,
And he by Friar's lanthorn led."

"The History of Friar Rush" is of extreme rarity, and, for some time, even the existence of such a book was doubted, although it is expressly alluded to by Reginald Scott, in his "Discovery of Witchcraft." I have perused a copy in the valuable library of my friend Mr. Heber, and I observe, from Mr. Beloe's "Anecdotes of Literature," that there is one in the excellent collection of the Marquis of Stafford.

NOTE 47.

*Sir David Lindesay of the Mount,
Lord Lion King-at-arms.*—P. 181.

The late elaborate edition of Sir David Lindesay's Works, by Mr. George Chalmers, has probably introduced him to many of my readers. It is perhaps to be regretted that the learned editor had not bestowed more pains in elucidating his author, even although he should have omitted, or at least reserved, his disquisitions on the origin of the language used by the poet; but, with all its faults, his work is an acceptable present to Scottish antiquaries. Sir David Lindesay was well known for his early efforts in favour of the Reformed doctrines; and, indeed, his play, coarse as it now seems, must have had a powerful effect upon the people of his age. I am uncertain if I abuse poetical license by introducing Sir David Lindesay in the character of Lion-Herald sixteen years before he obtained that office. At any rate, I am not the first who has been guilty of the anachronism, for the author of "Flodden Field" dispatches Dallamount, which can mean nobody but Sir David de la Mont, to France, on the message of defiance from James IV. to Henry VIII. It was often an office imposed on the Lion King-at-arms to receive foreign ambassadors, and Lindesay himself did this honour to Sir Ralph Sadler in 1539-40. Indeed, the oath of the Lion, in its first article, bears reference to his frequent employment upon royal messages and embassies.

The office of heralds, in feudal times, being held of the utmost importance, the inauguration of the Kings-at-arms, who presided over their colleges, was proportionally solemn. In fact, it was the mimicry of a royal coronation, except that the unction was made with wine instead of oil. In Scotland, a namesake and kinsman of Sir David Lindesay, inaugurated in 1592, "was crowned by King James with the ancient crown of Scotland, which was used before the Scottish kings assumed a close crown;" and, on occasion of the same solemnity, dined at the King's table, wearing the crown. It is probable that the coronation of his predecessor was not less solemn. So sacred was the herald's office that, in 1515, Lord Drummond was by Parliament declared guilty of treason, and his lands forfeited, because he had struck with his fist the Lion King-at-arms, when he reproved him for his follies. Nor was he restored, but at the Lion's earnest solicitation.

NOTE 48.

Crichtoun Castle.—P. 182.

A large ruinous castle on the banks of the Tyne, about ten miles from Edinburgh. As indicated in the text, it was built at different times, and with a very differing regard to splendour and accommodation. The oldest part of the building is a narrow keep, or tower, such as formed the mansion of a lesser Scottish baron; but so many additions have been made to it, that there is now a large courtyard, surrounded by buildings of different ages. The eastern front of the court is raised above a portico, and decorated with entablatures, bearing anchors. All the stones of this front are cut into diamond facets, the angular projections of which have an uncommonly rich appearance. The inside of this part of the building appears to have contained a gallery of great length and uncommon elegance. Access was given to it by a magnificent staircase, now quite destroyed. The soffits are ornamented with twining cordage and rosettes, and the whole seems to have been far more splendid than was usual in Scottish castles. The castle belonged originally to the Chancellor, Sir William Crichton, and probably owed to him its first enlargement, as well as its being taken by the Earl of Douglas, who imputed to Crichton's counsels the death of his predecessor, Earl William, beheaded in Edinburgh Castle, with his brother, in 1440. It is said to have been totally demolished on that occasion, but the present state of the ruin shows the contrary. In 1483, it was garrisoned by Lord Crichton, then its proprietor, against King James III., whose displeasure he had incurred by seducing his sister Margaret, in revenge, it is said, for the monarch having dishonoured his bed. From the Crichton family the castle passed to that of the Hepburns, Earls of Bothwell; and when the forfeitures of Stewart, the last Earl of Bothwell, were divided, the barony and castle of Crichton fell to the share of the Earl of Buccleuch. They were afterwards the property of the Pringles of Clifton, and are now that of Sir John Callander, Baronet. It were to be wished the proprietor would take a little pains to preserve these splendid remains of antiquity, which are at present used as a fold for sheep and wintering cattle; although, perhaps, there are very few ruins in Scotland which display so well the style and beauty of ancient castle architecture. The castle of Crichton has a dungeon vault, called the Massy More. The epithet, which is not uncommonly applied to the prisons of other old castles in Scotland, is of Saracenic origin. It occurs twice in the "Epistole Itinerariæ" of Tollius, "Carcer subterraneus, sive, ut Mauri appellant, MAZMORRA," p. 147; and again, "Coguntur omnes Captivi sub noctem in ergastula subterranea, quæ Turcæ Algerani vocant MAZMORRAS," p. 243. The same word applies to the dungeons of the ancient Moorish castles in Spain, and serves to show from what nation the Gothic style of castle-building was originally derived.

Earl Adam Hepburn.—P. 183.

He was the second Earl of Bothwell, and fell on the field of Flodden, where, according to an ancient English poet, he distinguished himself by a furious attempt to retrieve the day :—

"Then on the Scottish part, right proud,
The Earl of Bothwell then out brast,
And stepping forth, with stomach good,
Into the enemies' throng he thurst;
And Bothwell! Bothwell! cried bold,
To cause his souldiers to ensue.
But there he caught a wellcome cold,
The Englishmen straight down him threw.
Thus Haburn through his hardy heart
His fatal fine in conflict found," etc.

Flodden Field, a Poem, edited by H. Weber.
Edin. 1808.

Adam was grandfather to James, Earl of Bothwell, too well known in the history of Queen Mary.

NOTE 50.

*For that a messenger from heaven
In vain to James had counsel given
Against the English war,*—P. 184.

This story is told by Pitscottie with characteristic simplicity :—"The King, seeing that France could get no support of him for that time, made a proclamation, full hastily, through all the realm of Scotland both east and west, south and north, as well in the isles as in the firm land, to all manner of men, between sixty and sixteen years, that they should be ready, within twenty days, to pass with him, with forty days' victual, and to meet at the Burrowinuir of Edinburgh, and there to pass forward where he pleased. His proclamations were hastily obeyed, contrary the Council of Scotland's will; but every man loved his prince so well that they would on no ways disobey him, but every man caused make his proclamation so hastily, conform to the charge of the King's proclamation.

"The King came to Lithgow, where he happened to be for the time at the Council, very sad and dolorous, making his devotion to God, to send him good chance and fortune in his voyage. In this meantime there came a man, clad in a blue gown, in at the kirk door, and belted about him in a roll of linen cloth; a pair of brotikings* on his feet, to the great of his legs; with all other hose and clothes conform thereto: but he had nothing on his head, but syde† red yellow hair behind, and on his haffets,‡ which wan down to his shoulders; but his forehead was bald and bare. He seemed to be a man of two-and-fifty years, with a great pike-staff in his hand, and came first forward among the lords, crying and speiring§ for the King, saying, he desired to speak with him. While, at the last, he came where the King was sitting in the desk at his prayers; but when he saw the King, he made him little reverence or salutation, but leaned down groffling on the desk before him, and said to him in this manner, as after follows:—‘Sir King, my mother hath sent me to you, desiring yoa not to pass, at this time, where thou art purposed; for if thou does, thou wilt not fare well in thy journey, nor none that passeth with thee. Further, she bade thee mell|| with no woman, nor use their counsel, nor let them touch thy body, nor thou theirs; for, if thou do it, thou wilt be confounded and brought to shame.’

“By this man had spoken thir words unto the King’s grace, the evening song was near done, and the King paused on thir words, studying to give him an answer; but, in the meantime, before the King’s eyes, and in the presence of all the lords that were about him for the time, this man vanished away, and could no ways be seen or comprehended, but vanished away as he had been a blink of the sun, or a whip of the whirlwind, and could no more be seen. I heard say, Sir David Linde-say Lyon-herauld, and John Inglis the marshal, who were, at that time, young men, and special servants to the King’s grace, were standing presently beside the King, who thought to have laid hands on this man, that they might have speired further tidings at him: But all for nought: they could not touch him; for he vanished away betwixt them, and was no more seen.”

NOTE 51.

The wild buckbells.—P. 185.

I am glad of an opportunity to describe the cry of the deer by another word than braying, although the latter has been sanctified by the use of the Scottish metrical translation of the Psalms. Bell seems to be an abbreviation of bellow. This silvan sound conveyed great delight to our ancestors, chiefly, I suppose, from association. A gentle knight in the reign of Henry VIII., Sir Thomas Wortley, built Wantley Lodge, in Wancliffe Forest, for the pleasure (as an ancient inscription testifies) of “listening to the hart’s bell.”

June saw his father’s overthrow.—P. 185.

field, fell from his horse as it started at a woman and water-pitcher, and was slain, it is not well understood by whom. James IV., after the battle, passed to Stirling, and hearing the monks of the chapel-royal deploring the death of his father, their founder, he was seized with deep remorse, which manifested itself in severe penances. (See a following Note [61] on stanza ix. of canto v.) The battle of Sauchieburn, in which James III. fell, was fought June 18, 1488.

NOTE 53.

The Borough-moor.—P. 191.

The Borough, or Common Moor of Edinburgh, was of very great extent, reaching from the southern walls of the city to the bottom of Braid Hills. It was anciently a forest, and in that state was so great a nuisance that the inhabitants of Edinburgh had permission granted to them of building wooden galleries, projecting over the street, in order to encourage them to consume the timber, which they seem to have done very effectually. When James IV. mustered the array of the kingdom there, in 1513, the Borough-moor was, according to Hawthornden, "a field spacious, and delightful by the shade of many stately and aged oaks." Upon that, and similar occasions, the royal standard is traditionally said to have been displayed from the Hare-Stane, a high stone, now built into the wall, on the left hand of the highway leading towards Braid, not far from the head of Bruntsfield Links. The Hare-Stane probably derives its name from the British word har, signifying an army.

The well-known arms of Scotland. If you will believe Boethius and Buchanan, the double tressure round the shield, mentioned, counter fleur-de-lysed or lingued and armed azure, was first assumed by Echanius, King of Scotland, contemporary of Charlemagne, and founder of the celebrated League with France; but later antiquaries make poor Eochy, or Achy, little better than a sort of King of Brentford, whom old Grig (who has also swelled into Gregorius Magnus) associated with himself in the important duty of governing some part of the north-eastern coast of Scotland.

NOTE 55.

Caledonia's Queen is changed.—P. 197.

The Old Town of Edinburgh was secured on the north side by a lake, now drained, and on the south by a wall, which there was some attempt to make defensible even so late as 1745. The gates, and the greater part of the wall, have been pulled down, in the course of the late extensive and beautiful enlargement of the city. My ingenious and valued friend, Mr. Thomas Campbell, proposed to celebrate Edinburgh under the epithet here borrowed. But the "Queen of the North" has not been so fortunate as to receive from so eminent a pen the proposed distinction.

NOTE 56.

To Henry meek she gave repose.—P. 199.

Henry VI., with his queen, his heir, and the chiefs of his family, fled to Scotland after the fatal battle of Towton. It is doubtful whether he came to Edinburgh, though his queen certainly did.

NOTE 57.

The clothyard arrows.—P. 202.

This is no poetical exaggeration. In some of the counties of England, distinguished for archery, shafts of this extraordinary length were actually used. Thus, at the battle of Blackheath, between the troops of Henry VII. and the Cornish insurgents, in 1496, the bridge of Dartford was defended by a picked band of archers from the rebel army, "whose arrows," says Holinshed, "were in length a full cloth yard." The Scottish, according to Ascham, had a proverb, that every English archer carried under his belt twenty-four Scots, in allusion to his bundle of unerring shafts.

NOTE 58.

*He saw the hardy burghers there
March armed, on foot, with faces bare.*—P. 202.

The Scottish burgesses were, like yeomen, appointed to be armed with bows and sheaves, sword, buckler, knife, spear, or a good axe instead of a bow, if worth £100: their armour to be of white or bright harness. They wore white hats—that is, bright steel caps, without crest or visor. By an act of James IV. their weapon-schawings are appointed to be held four times a year, under the aldermen or bailiffs.

NOTE 59.

*On foot the yeoman too.....
Each at his back (a slender store)
His forty days' provision bore.....
His arms were halbert, axe, or spear.*—P. 203.

Bows and quivers were in vain recommended to the peasantry of Scotland, by repeated statutes; spears and axes seem universally to have been used instead of them. Their defensive armour was the plate-jack, hauberk, or brigantine, and their missile weapons crossbows and culverins. All wore swords of excellent temper, according to Patten; and a voluminous handkerchief round their neck, "not for cold, but for cutting." The mace also was much used in the Scottish army. The old poem on the battle of Flodden mentions a band—

"Who manfully did meet their foes,
With leaden mauls, and lances long."

When the feudal array of the kingdom was called forth, each man was obliged to appear with forty days' provision. When this was expended, which took place before the battle of Flodden, the army melted away, of course. Almost all the Scottish forces, except a few knights, men-at-arms, and the Border-prickers, who formed excellent light cavalry, acted upon foot.

*A banquet rich, and costly wines,
To Marmion and his train.*—P. 206.

In all transactions of great or petty importance, and among whomsoever taking place, it would seem that a present of wine was a uniform and indispensable preliminary. It was not to Sir John Falstaff alone that such an introductory preface was necessary, however well judged and acceptable on the part of Mr. Brook; for Sir Ralph Sadler, while on an embassy to Scotland in 1539-40, mentions, with complacency, "the same night came Rothesay (the herald so called) to me again, and brought me wine from the king, both white and red."—Clifford's Edition, p. 39.

NOTE 61.

.....his iron belt,
That bound his breast in penance-pain,
In memory of his father slain.—P. 208.

Few readers need to be reminded of this belt, to the weight of which James added certain ounces every year that he lived. Pitscottie founds his belief that James was not slain in the battle of Flodden, because the English never had this token of the iron belt to show to any Scottishman. The person and character of James are delineated according to our best historians. His romantic disposition, which led him highly to relish gaiety, approaching to license, was, at the same time, tinged with enthusiastic devotion. These propensities sometimes formed a strange contrast. He was wont, during his fits of devotion, to assume the dress, and conform to the rules, of the order of Franciscans; and when he had thus done penance for some time in Stirling, to plunge again into the tide of pleasure. Probably, too, with no unusual inconsistency, he sometimes laughed at the superstitious observances to which he at other times subjected himself.

NOTE 62.

Sir Hugh the Heron's wife.—P. 208.

It has been already noticed (see Note [10] to stanza xiii. of canto i.) that King James's acquaintance with Lady Heron of Ford did not commence until he marched into England. Our historians impute to the king's infatuated passion the delays which led to the fatal defeat of Flodden. The author of the "Genealogy of the Heron Family" endeavours, with laudable anxiety, to clear the Lady Ford from the scandal. That she came and went, however, between the armies of James and Surrey is certain. See PINKERTON'S History, and the authorities he refers to, vol. ii. p. 99.

.....the fair Queen of France
 Sent him a turquois ring, and glove,
 And charged him, as her knight and love,
 For her to break a lance.—P. 209.

“Also the Queen of France wrote a love-letter to the King of Scotland, calling him her love, showing him that she had suffered much rebuke in France for the defending of his honour. She believed surely that he would recompense her again with some of his kingly support in her necessity; that is to say, that he would raise her an army, and come three foot of ground on English ground, for her sake. To that effect she sent him a ring off her finger, with fourteen thousand French crowns to pay his expenses.”—PITSCOTTIE, p. 110.

A turquois ring: probably this fatal gift is, with James's sword and dagger, preserved in the College of Heralds, London.

NOTE 64.

Archibald Bell-the-Cat.—P. 212.

Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, a man remarkable for strength of body and mind, acquired the popular name of Bell-the-Cat upon the following remarkable occasion:—James III., of whom Pitscottie complains that he delighted more in music, and “policies of building,” than in hunting, hawking, and other noble exercises, was so ill advised as to make favourites of his architects and musicians, whom the same historian irreverently terms masons and fiddlers. His nobility, who did not sympathize in the king's respect for the fine arts, were extremely incensed at the honours conferred on those persons, particularly on Cochrane, a mason, who had been created Earl of Mar; and, seizing the opportunity when, in 1482, the king had convoked the whole array of the country to march against the English, they held a midnight council in the church of Lauder, for the purpose of forcibly removing these minions from the king's person. When all had agreed on the propriety of this measure, Lord Gray told the assembly the apologue of the Mice, who had formed a resolution that it would be highly advantageous to their community to tie a bell round the cat's neck, that they might hear her approach at a distance; but which public measure unfortunately miscarried, from no mouse being willing to undertake the task of fastening the bell. “I understand the moral,” said Angus, “and, that what we propose may not lack execution, I will bell the cat.”

NOTE 65.

*Against the war had Angus stood,
 And chased his royal lord*.—P. 213.

Angus was an old man when the war against England was resolved upon. He earnestly spoke against that measure from its commencement, and, on the eve of the battle of Flodden, remonstrated so freely upon the impolicy of fighting, that the king said to him, with scorn and indignation, "If he was afraid he might go home." The earl burst into tears at this insupportable insult, and retired accordingly, leaving his sons George, Master of Angus, and Sir William of Glenbervie, to command his followers. They were both slain in the battle, with two hundred gentlemen of the name of Douglas. The aged earl, broken-hearted at the calamities of his house and his country, retired into a religious house, where he died about a year after the field of Flodden.

NOTE 66.

Tantallon Hold.—P. 213.

The ruins of Tantallon Castle occupy a high rock projecting into the German Ocean, about two miles east of North Berwick. The building formed a principal castle of the Douglas family, and when the Earl of Angus was banished, in 1527, it continued to hold out against James V. The king went in person against it, and for its reduction borrowed from the Castle of Dunbar, then belonging to the Duke of Albany, two great cannons, "Thrawn-mouthed Meg and her Marrow;" also, "two great botcards, and two moyan, two double falcons, and four quarter falcons." Yet, notwithstanding all this apparatus, James was forced to raise the siege, and only afterwards obtained possession of Tantallon by treaty with the governor, Simon Panango. When the Earl of Angus returned from banishment, upon the death of James, he again obtained possession of Tantallon, and it actually afforded refuge to an English ambassador, under circumstances similar to those described in the text. This was no other than the celebrated Sir Ralph Sadler, who resided there for some time under Angus's protection, after the failure of his negotiation for matching the infant Mary with Edward VI. He says, that though this place was poorly furnished, it was of such strength as might warrant him against the malice of his enemies, and that he thought himself now out of danger.

NOTE 68.

Perchance some form was unobserved.—P. 218.

It was early necessary for those who felt themselves obliged to believe in the divine judgment being enunciated in the trial by duel, to find salvos for the strange and obviously precarious chances of the combat. Various curious evasive shifts, used by those who took up an unrighteous quarrel, were supposed sufficient to convert it into a just one.

NOTE 69.

Dun-Edin's Cross.—P. 221.

The Cross of Edinburgh was an ancient and curious structure. The lower part was an octagonal tower, sixteen feet in diameter, and about fifteen feet high. At each angle there was a pillar, and between them an arch, of the Grecian shape. Above these was a projecting battlement, with a turret at each corner, and medallions, of rude but curious workmanship, between them. Above this rose the Cross proper, a column of one stone, upwards of twenty feet high, surmounted with a unicorn. This pillar is preserved in the grounds of the property of Drum, near Edinburgh. From the tower of the Cross, so long as it remained, the heralds published the Acts of Parliament; and its site, marked by radii diverging from a stone centre, in the High Street, is still the place where proclamations are made.

This relates to the catastrophe of a real Robert de Marmion, in the reign of King Stephen, whom William of Newbury describes with some attributes of my fictitious hero: "Homo bellicosus, ferocia, et astucia, fere nullo suo tempore impar." This baron, having expelled the monks from the church of Coventry, was not long of experiencing the divine judgment, as the same monks, no doubt, termed his disaster. Having waged a feudal war with the Earl of Chester, Marmion's horse fell, as he charged in the van of his troop against a body of the earl's followers: the rider's thigh being broken by the fall, his head was cut off by a common foot-soldier ere he could receive any succour. The whole story is told by William of Newbury.

The Iol of the heathen Danes (a word still applied to Christmas in Scotland) was solemnized with great festivity. The humour of the Danes at table displayed itself in pelting each other with bones; and Torfæus tells a long and curious story, in the "History of Hrolfe Kraka," of one Hottus, an inmate of the Court of Denmark, who was so generally assailed with these missiles, that he constructed, out of the bones with which he was overwhelmed, a very respectable intrenchment against those who continued the raillery.

*Who lists may in their mumming see

It seems certain that the Mummers of England, who (in Northumberland at least) used to go about in disguise to the neighbouring houses, bearing the then useless ploughshare; and the Guisards of Scotland, not yet in total disuse, present, in some indistinct degree, a shadow of the old mysteries which were the origin of the English drama. In Scotland (me ipso teste) we were wont, during my boyhood, to take the characters of the apostles—at least of Peter, Paul, and Judas Iscariot: the first had the keys, the second carried a sword, and the last the bag, in which the dole of our neighbours' plum-cake was deposited. One played a champion, and recited some traditional rhymes; another was

.... "Alexander, King of Macedon,
Who conquered all the world but Scotland alone."

These, and many such verses, were repeated, but by rote, and unconnectedly. There was also, occasionally, I believe, a Saint George. In all, there was a confused resemblance of the ancient mysteries, in which the characters of Scripture, the Nine Worthies, and other popular personages, were usually exhibited.

The Highlander 191.
*Will, on a Friday morn, look pale,
If asked to tell a fairy tale.*—P. 234.

The Daoine shì, or Men of Peace, of the Scottish Highlanders, rather resemble the Scandinavian Duergar than the English Fairies. Notwithstanding their name, they are, if not absolutely malevolent, at least peevish, discontented, and apt to do mischief on slight provocation. The belief of their existence is deeply impressed on the Highlanders, who think they are particularly offended at mortals who talk of them, who wear their favourite colour, green, or in any respect interfere with their affairs. This is especially to be avoided on Friday, when, whether as dedicated to Venus, with whom, in Germany, this subterraneous people are held nearly connected, or for a more solemn reason, they are more active, and possessed of greater power.

Some curious particulars concerning the popular superstitions of the Highlanders may be found in Dr. Graham's "Picturesque Sketches of Perthshire."

NOTE 76.

" The last lord of Franchémont.—P. 235.

The journal of the friend to whom the Fourth Canto of the Poem is inscribed furnished me with the following account of a striking superstition:—"Passed the pretty little village of Franchémont (near Spaw), with the romantic ruins of the old castle of the counts of that name. The road leads through many delightful vales on a rising ground; at the extremity of one of them stands the ancient castle, now the subject of many superstitious legends. It is firmly believed by the neighbouring peasantry that the last Baron of Franchémont deposited, in one of the vaults of the castle, a ponderous chest containing an immense treasure in gold and silver, which, by some magic spell, was entrusted to the care of the Devil, who is constantly found sitting on the chest in the shape of a huntsman. Any one adventurous enough to touch the chest is instantly seized with the palsy. Upon one occasion, a priest of noted piety was brought to the vault: he used all the arts of exorcism to persuade his infernal majesty to vacate his seat, but in vain; the huntsman remained immovable. At last, moved by the earnestness of the priest, he told him that he would agree to resign the chest, if the exorciser would sign his name with blood. But the priest understood his meaning, and refused, as by that act he would have delivered over his soul to the Devil. Yet if anybody can discover the mystic words used by the person who deposited the treasure, and pronounce them, the fiend must instantly decamp. I had many stories of a similar nature from a peasant, who had himself seen the Devil in the shape of a great cat."

.....the huge and sweeping brand
Which wont, of yore, in battle fray,
His foeman's limbs to shred away,
As wood-knife lops the sapling spray.—P. 246.

The Earl of Angus had strength and personal activity corresponding to his courage. Spens of Kilspindie, a favourite of James IV., having spoken of him lightly, the earl met him while hawking, and, compelling him to single combat, at one blow cut asunder his thigh-bone, and killed him on the spot. But ere he could obtain James's pardon for this slaughter, Angus was obliged to yield his castle of Hermitage, in exchange for that of Bothwell, which was some diminution to the family greatness. The sword with which he struck so remarkable a blow was presented by his descendant, James, Earl of Morton, afterwards Regent of Scotland, to Lord Lindesay of the Byres, when he defied Bothwell to single combat on Carberry Hill. See Introduction to the "Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border."

NOTE 80.

"And hop'st thou hence unscathed to go?—
No! by Saint Bride of Bothwell, no!—
Up drawbridge, grooms—what, Warder, ho!

This ebullition of violence in the potent Earl of Angus is not without its example in the real history of the house of Douglas, whose chieftains possessed the ferocity, with the heroic virtues of a savage state. The most curious instance occurred in the case of Maclellan, Tutor of Bombay, who, having refused to acknowledge the pre-eminence claimed by Douglas over the gentlemen and barons of Galloway, was seized and imprisoned by the earl, in his castle of the Thrieve, on the borders of Kirkcudbrightshire. Sir Patrick Gray, commander of King James the Second's Guard, was uncle to the Tutor of Bombay, and obtained from the king a "sweet letter of supplication," praying the earl to deliver his prisoner into Gray's hand. When Sir Patrick arrived at the castle he was received with all the honour due to a favourite servant of the king's household; but while he was at dinner, the earl, who suspected his errand, caused his prisoner to be led forth and beheaded. After dinner, Sir Patrick presented the king's letter to the earl, who received it with great affectation of reverence; "and took him by the hand, and led him forth to the green, where the gentleman was lying dead, and showed him the manner, and said, 'Sir Patrick, you are come a little too late; yonder is your sister's son lying, but he wants the head: take his body, and do with it what you will.'—Sir Patrick answered again, with a sore heart, and said, 'My lord, if ye have taken from him his head, dispose upon the body as ye please;' and with that called for his horse, and leaped thereon; and when he was on horseback, he said to the earl on this manner, 'My lord, if I live you shall be rewarded for your labours that you have used at this time, according to your demerits.' At this saying the earl was highly offended, and cried for horse. Sir Patrick, seeing the earl's fury, spurred his horse, but he was chased near Edinburgh ere they left him; and had it not been his led horse was so tried and good, he had been taken."—PITSCOTTIE'S History, p. 39.

Lest the reader should partake of the earl's astonishment, and consider the crime as inconsistent with the manners of the period, I have to remind him of the numerous forgeries (partly executed by a female assistant) devised by Robert of Artois, to forward his suit against the Countess Matilda; which, being detected, occasioned his flight into England, and proved the remote cause of Edward the Third's memorable wars in France. John Harding, also, was expressly hired by Edward I. to forge such documents as might appear to establish the claim of fealty asserted over Scotland by the English monarchs.

NOTE 83.

Twisel Bridge.—P. 252.

On the evening previous to the memorable battle of Flodden, Surrey's headquarters were at Barmoor Wood, and King James held an inaccessible position on the ridge of Flodden Hill, one of the last and lowest eminences detached from the ridge of Cheviot. The Till, a deep and slow river, winded between the armies. On the morning of September 9, 1513, Surrey marched in a north-westerly direction, and crossed the Till, with his van and artillery, at Twisel Bridge, nigh where that river joins the Tweed, his rearguard column passing about a mile higher, by a ford. This movement had the double effect of placing his army between King James and his supplies from Scotland, and of striking the Scottish monarch with surprise, as he seems to have relied on the depth of the river in his front. But as the passage, both over the bridge and through the ford, was difficult and slow, it seems possible that the English might have been attacked to great advantage while struggling with these natural obstacles. I know not if we are to impute James's forbearance to want of military skill, or to the romantic declaration which Pitscottie puts in his mouth, "that he was determined to have his enemies before him on a plain field," and therefore would suffer no interruption to be given, even by artillery, to their passing the river.

NOTE 84.

*Hence might they see the full array
Of either host, for deadly fray.*—P. 255.

The reader cannot here expect a full account of the battle of Flodden, but, so far as is necessary to understand the romance, I beg to remind him that, when the English army, by their skilful countermarch, were fairly placed between King James and his own country, the Scottish monarch resolved to fight, and, setting fire to his tents, descended from the ridge of Flodden to secure the neighbouring eminence of Brankstone, on which that village is built. Thus the two armies met, almost without seeing each other, when, according to the old poem of "Flodden Field,"

" The English line stretched east and west,
And southward were their faces set ;
The Scottish northward proudly prest,
And manfully their foes they met."

The English army advanced in four divisions. On the right, which first engaged, were the sons of Earl Surrey—namely, Thomas Howard, the Admiral of England, and Sir Edmund, the Knight Marshal of the army. Their divisions were separated from each other ; but, at the request of Sir Edmund, his brother's battalion was drawn very near to his own. The centre was commanded by Surrey in person ; the left wing by Sir Edward Stanley, with the men of Lancashire and of the palatinate of Chester. Lord Dacre, with a large body of horse, formed a reserve. When the smoke, which the wind had driven between the armies, was somewhat dispersed, they perceived the Scots, who had moved down the hill in a similar order of battle and in deep silence. The Earls of Huntley and of Home commanded their left wing, and charged Sir Edmund Howard with such success as entirely to defeat his part of the English right wing. Sir Edmund's banner was beaten down, and he himself escaped with difficulty to his brother's division. The Admiral, however, stood firm ; and Dacre advancing to his support with the reserve of cavalry, probably between the interval of the divisions commanded by the brothers Howard, appears to have kept the victors in effectual check. Home's men, chiefly Borderers, began to pillage the baggage of both armies ; and their leader is branded by the Scottish historians with negligence or treachery. On the other hand, Huntley, on whom they bestow many encomiums, is said by the English historians to have left the field after the first charge. Meanwhile the Admiral, whose flank these chiefs ought to have attacked, availed himself of their inactivity, and pushed forward against another large division of the Scottish army in his front, headed by the Earls of Crawford and Montrose, both of whom were slain and their forces routed. On the left, the success of the English was yet more decisive ; for the Scottish right wing, consisting of undisciplined Highlanders, commanded by Lennox and Argyle, was unable to sustain the charge of Sir Edward Stanley, and especially the severe execution of the Lancashire archers. The king and Surrey, who commanded the respective centres of their armies, were meanwhile engaged in close and dubious conflict. James, surrounded by the flower of his kingdom, and impatient of the galling discharge of arrows, supported also by his reserve under Bothwell, charged with such fury that the standard of Surrey was in danger. At that critical moment, Stanley, who had routed the left wing of the Scottish, pursued his career of victory, and arrived on the right flank, and in the rear of James's division, which, throwing itself into a circle, disputed the battle till night came on. Surrey then drew back his forces ; for the Scottish centre not having been broken, and their left wing being victorious, he yet doubted the event of the field. The Scottish army, however, felt their loss, and abandoned the field of battle in disorder before dawn.

They lost, perhaps, from eight to ten thousand men; but that included the very prime of their nobility, gentry, and even clergy. Scarce a family of eminence but has an ancestor killed at Flodden; and there is no province in Scotland, even at this day, where the battle is mentioned without a sensation of terror and sorrow. The English lost also a great number of men, perhaps within one-third of the vanquished, but they were of inferior note.

NOTE 85.

Brian Tunstall, stainless knight.—P. 256.

Sir Brian Tunstall, called in the romantic language of the time Tunstall the Undeiled, was one of the few Englishmen of rank slain at Flodden. He figures in the ancient English poem, to which I may safely refer my readers, as an edition, with full explanatory notes, has been published by my friend, Mr. Henry Weber. Tunstall, perhaps, derived his epithet of undeiled from his white armour and banner, the latter bearing a white cock, about to crow, as well as from his unstained loyalty and knightly faith. His place of residence was Thurland Castle.

NOTE 86.

*Reckless of life, he desperate fought,
And fell on Flodden plain:
And well in death his trusty brand,
Firm clenched within his manly hand,
Beseemed the monarch slain.*—P. 266.

There can be no doubt that King James fell in the battle of Flodden. He was killed, says the curious French Gazette, within a lance's length of the Earl of Surrey; and the same account adds that none of his division were made prisoners, though many were killed, a circumstance that testifies the desperation of their resistance. The Scottish historians record many of the idle reports which passed among the vulgar of their day. Home was accused, by the popular voice, not only of failing to support the king, but even of having carried him out of the field and murdered him. And this tale was revived in my remembrance by an unauthenticated story of a skeleton, wrapped in a bull's hide, and surrounded with an iron chain, said to have been found in the well of Home Castle; for which, on inquiry, I could never find any better authority than the sexton of the parish having said, that, if the well were cleaned out, he would not be surprised at such a discovery. Home was the chamberlain of the king, and his prime favourite; he had much to lose (in fact did lose all) in consequence of James's death, and nothing earthly to gain by that event: but the retreat, or inactivity of the left wing which he commanded, after defeating Sir Edmund Howard, and even the circumstance of his returning unhurt, and loaded with spoil, from so fatal a conflict, rendered the propagation of any calumny against him easy and acceptable. Other reports gave a still more romantic turn to the king's fate, and averred that James, weary of greatness, after the carnage among his nobles, had gone on a pilgrimage, to merit absolution for the death of his father, and the breach of his oath of amity to Henry. In particular, it was objected to the English that they could never show the token of the iron belt; which, however, James was likely enough to have laid aside on the day of battle, as encumbering his personal exertions. They produce a better evidence, the monarch's sword and dagger, which are still preserved in the Herald's College in London. Stowe has recorded a degrading story of the disgrace with which the remains of the unfortunate monarch were treated in his time. An unhewn column marks the spot where James fell, still called the King's Stone.

The fair cathedral stormed and took. —P. 266.

This storm of Lichfield Cathedral, which had been garrisoned on the part of the king, took place in the Great Civil War. Lord Brook, who, with Sir John Gill, commanded the assailants, was shot with a musket-ball through the visor of his helmet. The royalists remarked that he was killed by a shot fired from St. Chad's Cathedral, and upon St. Chad's Day, and received his death-wound in the very eye with which, he had said, he hoped to see the ruin of all the cathedrals in England. The magnificent church in question suffered cruelly upon this and other occasions, the principal spire being ruined by the fire of the besiegers.

*...the heights of Uam-Var,
And roused the cavern where, 'tis told,
A giant made his den of old.—P. 275.*

UA-VAR, as the name is pronounced, or more properly Uaighmor, is a mountain to the north-east of the village of Callander in Menteith, deriving its name, which signifies “the great den,” or cavern, from a sort of retreat among the rocks on the south side, said, by tradition, to have been the abode of a giant. In latter times it was the refuge of robbers and banditti, who have been extirpated only within these forty or fifty years. Strictly speaking, this stronghold is not a cave, as the name would imply, but a sort of small enclosure, or recess, surrounded with large rocks, and open above head.

These are the hounds which the abbots of St. Hubert haue always kept some of their race or kind, in honour or remembrance of the saint, which was a hunter with S. Eustace. For the death-wound, and death-halloo, Mustered his breath, his whinyard drew.—P. 277.

When the stag turned to bay, the ancient hunter had the perilous task of going in upon, and killing or disabling the desperate animal. At certain times of the year this was held particularly dangerous, a wound received from a stag's horn being then deemed poisonous, and more dangerous than one from the tusks of a boar, as the old rhyme testifies :—

“If thou be hurt with hart, it brings thee to thy bier;
But barber's hand will boar's hurt heal, therefore thou need'st not fear.”

At all times, however, the task was dangerous, and to be adventured upon wisely and warily, either by getting behind the stag while he was gazing on the hounds, or by watching an opportunity to gallop roundly in upon him, and kill him with the sword.

NOTE 6.

*A grey-haired sire, whose eye intent
Was on the visioned future bent.*—P. 285.

If force of evidence could authorize us to believe facts inconsistent with the general laws of nature, enough might be produced in favour of the existence of the second-sight. It is called in Gaelic Taishitaraugh, from Taish, an unreal or shadowy appearance; and those possessed of the faculty are called Taishatrin, which may be aptly translated visionaries. Martin, a steady believer in the second-sight, gives the following account of it:—

“The second-sight is a singular faculty, of seeing an otherwise invisible object, without any previous means used by the person that used it for that end. The vision makes such a lively impression upon the seers, that they neither see, nor think of anything else, except the vision, as long as it continues; and then they appear pensive or jovial, according to the object that was represented to them,

“At the sight of a vision, the eyelids of the person are erected, and the eyes continue staring until the object vanish. This is obvious to others who are by, when the persons happen to see a vision, and occurred more than once to my own observation, and to others that were with me.

“If a woman is seen standing at a man's left hand, it is a presage that she will be his wife, whether they be married to others, or unmarried at the time of the apparition.

“It is ordinary with them to see houses, gardens, and trees in places void of all three; and this in progress of time used to be accomplished.

"To see a spark of fire fall upon one's arm or breast is a forerunner of a dead child to be seen in the arms of those persons, of which there are several fresh instances.

"To see a seat empty at the time of one's sitting in it is a presage of that person's death soon after."—MARTIN'S Description of the Western Islands, 1716, 8vo, p. 300, et seq.

To these particulars innumerable examples might be added, all attested by grave and credible authors. But, in despite of evidence which neither Bacon, Boyle, nor Johnson was able to resist, the Taisch, with all its visionary properties, seems to be now universally abandoned to the use of poetry. The exquisitely beautiful poem of Lochiel will at once occur to the recollection of every reader.

*Here, for retreat in dangerous hour,
Some chief had framed a rustic bower.*—P. 287.

The Celtic chieftains, whose lives were continually exposed to peril, had usually, in the most retired spot of their domains, some place of retreat for the hour of necessity, which, as circumstances would admit, was a tower, a cavern, or a rustic hut, in a strong and secluded situation. One of these last gave refuge to the unfortunate Charles Edward, in his perilous wanderings after the battle of Culloden.

NOTE 8.

*My sire's tall form might grace the part
Of ferragus or Ascabart.*—P. 289.

These two sons of Anak flourished in romantic fable. The first is well known to the admirers of Ariosto, by the name of Ferrau. He was an antagonist of Orlando, and was at length slain by him in single combat. Ascapart, or Ascabart, makes a very material figure in the History of Bevis of Hampton, by whom he was conquered. His effigies may be seen guarding one side of a gate at Southampton, while the other is occupied by Sir Bevis himself.

The Highlanders, who carried hospitality to a punctilious excess, are said to have considered it as churlish to ask a stranger his name or lineage before he had taken refreshment. NOTE 10.

The Græme.—P. 297.

The ancient and powerful family of Grahame (which, for metrical reasons, is here spelt after the Scottish pronunciation) held extensive possessions in the counties of Dumbarton and Stirling. Few families can boast of more historical renown, having claim to three of the most remarkable characters in the Scottish annals. Sir John the Græme, the faithful and undaunted partaker of the labours and patriotic warfare of Wallace, fell in the unfortunate field of Falkirk, 1298. The celebrated Marquis of Montrose, in whom De Retz saw realized his abstract idea of the heroes of antiquity, was the second of these worthies. And, notwithstanding the severity of his temper, and the rigour with which he executed the oppressive mandates of the princes whom he served, I do not hesitate to name as a third, John Græme of Claverhouse, Viscount of Dundee, whose heroic death in the arms of victory may be allowed to cancel the memory of his cruelty to the nonconformists, during the reigns of Charles II. and James II.

NOTE 11.

This harp, which erst Saint Modan swayed.—P. 298.

I am not prepared to show that Saint Modan was a performer on the harp. It was, however, no unsaintly accomplishment; for Saint Dunstan certainly did play upon that instrument, which retaining, as was natural, a portion of the sanctity attached to its master's character, announced future events by its spontaneous sound.

NOTE 12.

*Fre Douglasses, to ruin driven,
Were exiled from their native heaven.*—P. 298.

The downfall of the Douglasses of the house of Angus during the reign of James V. is the event alluded to in the text. The Earl of Angus had married the queen-dowager, and availed himself of the right which he thus acquired to retain the young king in a sort of tutelage which approached very near to captivity. Several unsuccessful attempts were made to rescue James from this thralldom, with which he was well known to be deeply disgusted; but it was not till 1528 that the king finally succeeded in assuming the position of an independent sovereign. One of his first acts was to banish the Earl of Angus from the kingdom.

NOTE 13.

In Holy-Rood a knight he slew.—P. 300.

This was by no means an uncommon occurrence in the Court of Scotland; nay, the presence of the sovereign himself scarcely restrained the ferocious and inveterate feuds which were the perpetual source of bloodshed among the Scottish nobility. The murder of Sir William Stuart of Ochiltree, called The Bloody, by the celebrated Francis, Earl of Bothwell, may be mentioned among many others.—JOHNSTON Historia Rerum Britannicarum, ab anno 1572 ad annum 1628. Amstelodami, 1655, fol. p. 135.

NOTE 14.

*The Douglas, like a stricken deer,
Disowned by every noble peer.*—P. 301.

The exile state of this powerful race is not exaggerated in this and subsequent passages. The hatred of James against the race of Douglas was so inveterate, that numerous as their allies were, and disregarded as the regal authority had usually been in similar cases, their nearest friends, even in the most remote parts of Scotland, durst not entertain them, unless under the strictest and closest disguise.

NOTE 15.

Maronnan's cell.—P. 301.

The parish of Kilmaronock, at the eastern extremity of Loch Lomond, derives its name from a cell or chapel dedicated to St. Maronock, or Marnock, or Maronnan, about whose sanctity very little is now remembered. There is a fountain devoted to him in the same parish, but its virtues, like the merits of its patron, have fallen into oblivion.

NOTE 16.

Bracklinn's thundering wave.—P. 302.

This is a beautiful cascade made by a mountain stream called the Keltie, at a place called the Bridge of Bracklinn, about a mile from the village of Callander, in Menteith.

NOTE 17.

For Tine-man forged by fairy lore.—P. 303.

Archibald, the third Earl of Douglas, was so unfortunate in all his enterprises that he acquired the epithet of TINE-MAN, because he tined, or lost, his followers in every battle which he fought.

NOTE 18.

*Did, self-unscabbarded, foreshow
The footstep of a secret foe.*—P. 303.

The ancient warriors, whose hope and confidence rested chiefly in their blades, were accustomed to deduce omens from them, especially from such as were supposed to have been fabricated by enchanted skill, of which we have various instances in the romances and legends of the time.

NOTE 19.

*Those thrilling sounds that call the might
Of old Clan-Alpine to the fight.*—P. 304.

The connoisseurs in pipe-music affect to discover in a well-composed pibroch the imitative sounds of march, conflict, flight, pursuit, and all the "current of a heady fight."

NOTE 20.

Roderigh Vich-Alpine dhu, ho! ieroe!—P. 306.

Besides his ordinary name and surname, which were chiefly used in the intercourse with the Lowlands, every Highland chief had an epithet expressive of his patriarchal dignity as head of the clan, and which was common to all his predecessors and successors, as Pharaoh to the kings of Egypt, or Arsaces to those of Parthia. This name was usually a patronymic, expressive of his descent from the founder of the family. Thus the Duke of Argyle is called MacCallum More, or the Son of Colin the Great. But besides this title, which belonged to his office and dignity, the chieftain had usually another peculiar to himself, which distinguished him from the chieftains of the same race. This was sometimes derived from complexion, as dhu or roy; sometimes from size, as beg or more; at other times from some peculiar exploit, or from some peculiarity of habit or appearance. The line of the text therefore signifies,—

“Black Roderick, the descendant of Alpine.”

NOTE 21.

“Malise, what ho!”—his henchman came.—P. 317.

This officer was a sort of secretary, and was upon all occasions to venture his life in defence of his master; and at drinking-bouts he stood behind his seat, at his haunch, from whence his title is derived, and watched the conversation, to see if any one offended his patron.

NOTE 22.

And while the Fiery Cross glanced like a meteor round.—P. 319.

When a chieftain designed to summon his clan, upon any sudden or important emergency, he slew a goat, and making a cross of any light wood, seared its extremities in the fire, and extinguished them in the blood of the animal. This was called the Fiery Cross; also Crean Tarigh, or the Cross of Shame, because disobedience to what the symbol implied inferred infamy. It was delivered to a swift and trusty messenger, who ran full speed with it to the next hamlet, where he presented it to the principal person, with a single word implying the place of rendezvous. He who received the symbol was bound to send it forward, with equal dispatch, to the next village; and thus it passed with incredible celerity through all the district which owed allegiance to the chief, and also among his allies and neighbours, if the danger was common to them. At sight of the Fiery Cross, every man, from sixteen years old to sixty, capable of bearing arms, was obliged instantly to repair, in his best arms and accoutrements, to the place of rendezvous. He who failed to appear suffered the extremities of fire and sword, which were emblematically denounced to the disobedient by the bloody and burnt marks upon this warlike signal. During the civil war of 1745–6, the Fiery Cross often made its circuit, and upon one occasion it passed through the whole district of Breadalbane, a tract of thirty-two miles, in three hours.

NOTE 23.

That Monk, of savage form and face.—P. 321.

The state of religion in the middle ages afforded considerable facilities for those whose mode of life excluded them from regular worship, to secure, nevertheless, the ghostly assistance of confessors, perfectly willing to adapt the nature of their doctrine to the necessities and peculiar circumstances of their flock. Robin Hood, it is well known, had his celebrated domestic chaplain, Friar Tuck.

NOTE 24.

Of Brian's birth strange tales were told.—P. 321.

The legend which follows is not of the author's invention. It is possible he may differ from modern critics, in supposing that the records of human superstition, if peculiar to and characteristic of the country in which the scene is laid, are a legitimate subject of poetry. He gives, however, a ready assent to the narrower proposition which condemns all attempts of an irregular and disordered fancy to excite terror, by accumulating a train of fantastic and incoherent horrors, whether borrowed from all countries, and patched upon a narrative belonging to one which knew them not, or derived from the author's own imagination. In the present case, therefore, I appeal to the record which I have transcribed, with the variation of a very few words, from the geographical collections made by the Laird of Macfarlane. I know not whether it be necessary to remark, that the miscellaneous concourse of youths and maidens on the night and on the spot where the miracle is said to have taken place, might, even in a credulous age, have somewhat diminished the wonder which accompanied the conception of Gilli-Doir-Magrevollich.

“There is bot two myles from Inverlochie, the church of Kilmalee, in Lochyeld. In ancient tymes there was ane church builded upon ane hill, which was above this church, which doeth now stand in this toune; and ancient men doeth say, that there was a battell foughten on ane litle hill not the tenth part of a myle from this church, be certaine men which they did not know what they were. And long tyme thereafter, certaine herds of that toune, and of the next toune, called Unnatt, both wenches and youthes, did on a tyme conveen with others on that hill; and the day being somewhat cold, did gather the bones of the dead men that were slayne long tyme before in that place, and did make a fire to warm them. At last they did all remove from the fire, except one maid or wench, which was verie cold, and she did remaine there for a space. She being quyetlie her alone, without anie other companie, took up her cloaths above her knees, or thereby to warm her; a wind did come and caste the ashes upon her, and she was conceived of ane man-chyld. Severall tymes thereafter she was verie sick, and at last she was knowne to be with chyld; and then her parents did ask at her the matter heirollf, which the wench could not weel answer which way to satisfie them. At last she resolved them with ane answer. As fortune fell upon her concerning this marvellous miracle, the chyld being borne, his name was called Gili-doir Maghrevollich, that is to say, the Black Child, Son to the Bones. So called, his grandfather sent him to school, and so he was a good schollar, and godlie. He did build this church which doeth now stand in Lochyeld, called Kilmalie."—MACFARLANE, ut supra, ii. 188.

NOTE 25.

*Yet ne'er again to braid her hair
The virgin snood did Alice wear.*—P. 322.

The snood, or riband, with which a Scottish lass braided her hair, had an emblematical signification, and applied to her maiden character. It was exchanged for the curch, toy, or coif when she passed, by marriage, into the matron state. But if the damsel was so unfortunate as to lose pretensions to the name of maiden, without gaining a right to that of matron, she was neither permitted to use the snood nor advanced to the graver dignity of the curch. In old Scottish songs there occur many sly allusions to such misfortune; as in the old words to the popular tune of "Ower the muir amang the heather."

"Down amang the broom, the broom,
Down amang the broom, my dearie,
The lassie lost her silken snood,
That gard her greet till she was wearie."

NOTE 26.

Beheld the river demon rise.—P. 323.

The river demon, or river-horse, for it is that form which he commonly assumes, is the kelpy of the Lowlands, an evil and malicious spirit, delighting to forebode and to witness calamity. He frequents most Highland lakes and rivers.

NOTE 27.

Of noontide hag, or goblin grim.—P. 323.

The "noontide hag," called in Gaelic Glas-lich, a tall, emaciated, gigantic female figure, is supposed in particular to haunt the district of Knoidart. A goblin dressed in antique armour, and having one hand covered with blood, called, from that circumstance, Lham-dearg, or Red-hand, is a tenant of the forests of Glenmore and Rothiemurchus.

NOTE 28. Ben-Shie's boding scream.

The fatal Ben-Shie's boding scream.—P. 323.

Most great families in the Highlands were supposed to have a tutelar, or rather a domestic spirit, attached to them, who took an interest in their prosperity, and intimated, by its wailings, any approaching disaster. A superstition of the same kind is, I believe, universally received by the inferior ranks of the native Irish.

NOTE 29.

*Sounds, too, had come in midnight blast,
Of charging steeds, careering fast
Along Benharrow's shingly side,
Where mortal horseman ne'er might ride.*—P. 323.

A presage of the kind alluded to in the text is still believed to announce death to the ancient Highland family of M'Lean of Lochbuy. The spirit of an ancestor slain in battle is heard to gallop along a stony bank, and then to ride thrice around the family residence, ringing his fairy bridle, and thus intimating the approaching calamity.

NOTE 30.

Whose parents in Inch-Cailliach wave.—P. 324.

Inch-Cailliach, the Isle of Nuns, or of Old Women, is a most beautiful island at the lower extremity of Loch Lomond.

NOTE 31.

*...the dun deer's hide
On fleeter foot was never tied.*—P. 327.

The present brogue of the Highlanders is made of half-dried leather, with holes to admit and let out the water, for walking the moors dry-shod is a matter altogether out of the question. The ancient buskin was still ruder, being made of undressed deer's hide, with the hair outwards, a circumstance which procured the Highlanders the well-known epithet of Red-shanks.

NOTE 32.

The dismal coronach.—P. 329.

The Coronach of the Highlanders, like the Ululatus of the Romans and the Uuloo of the Irish, was a wild expression of lamentation, poured forth by the mourners over the body of a departed friend. When the words of it were articulate, they expressed the praises of the deceased, and the loss the clan had sustained by his death.

NOTE 33.

*Not faster o'er thy heathery braes,
Balquidder, speeds the midnight blaze.*—P. 335.

It may be necessary to inform the southern reader that the heath on the Scottish moorlands is often set fire to, that the sheep may have the advantage of the young herbage produced, in room of the tough old heather plants. This custom (execrated by sportsmen) produces occasionally the most beautiful nocturnal appearances, similar almost to the discharge of a volcano. This simile is not new to poetry. The charge of a warrior, in the fine ballad of Hardyknute, is said to be "like fire to heather set."

NOTE 34.

No oath but by his chieftain's hand.—P. 335.

The deep and implicit respect paid by the Highland clansmen to their chief rendered this both a common and a solemn oath.

NOTE 35.

*By many a bard, in Celtic tongue,
Has Coir-nan-Uriskin been sung.*—P. 336.

This is a very steep and most romantic hollow in the mountain of Benvenue, overhanging the south-eastern extremity of Loch Katrine. It is surrounded by stupendous rocks, and overshadowed with birch-trees mingled with oaks, the spontaneous production of the mountain, even where its cliffs appear denuded of soil. The name literally implies the Corri or Den of the Wild or Shaggy Men.

NOTE 36.

Through the wild pass of Beal-nam-bo.—P. 337.

Bealach-nam-bo, or the Pass of Cattle, is a most magnificent glade, overhung with aged birch-trees, a little higher up the mountain than the Coir-nan-Uriskin.

NOTE 37.

A single page, to bear his sword.—P. 337.

A Highland chief, being as absolute in his patriarchal authority as any prince, had a corresponding number of officers attached to his person. Besides his body-guards, called Lucht-tach, he had the Henchman; the Bard; the Bladier, or spokesman; the Gillie-more, or sword-bearer; the Gillie-casflue, who carried the chief, if on foot, over the fords; the Gillie-comstraine, who led the chief's horse; the Gillie-trushanarinsh, the baggage-man; the Piper; the piper's Gillie, or attendant, who carried the bagpipe.

NOTE 38.

*The Taghairm called; by which, afar,
Our sires foresaw the events of war.*—P. 342.

The Highlanders, like all rude people, had various superstitious modes of inquiring into futurity. One of the most noted was the Taghairm, mentioned in the text. A person was wrapped up in the skin of a newly-slain bullock, and deposited beside a waterfall, or at the bottom of a precipice, or in some other strange, wild, and unusual situation, where the scenery around him suggested nothing but objects of horror. In this situation, he revolved in his mind the question proposed, and whatever was impressed upon him by his exalted imagination passed for the inspiration of the disembodied spirits who haunt the desolate recesses.

NOTE 39.

*.....that huge cliff, whose ample verge
Tradition calls the Hero's Targe.—P. 343.*

There is a rock so named in the Forest of Glenfinlas, by which a tumultuary cataract takes its course. This wild place is said in former times to have afforded refuge to an outlaw, who was supplied with provisions by a woman, who lowered them down from the brink of the precipice above. His water he procured for himself, by letting down a flagon tied to a string into the black pool beneath the fall.

NOTE 40.

*Which spills the foremost foeman's life,
That party conquers in the strife.—P. 344.*

Though this be in the text described as a response of the Taghairm, or Oracle of the Hide, it was of itself an augury frequently attended to. The fate of the battle was often anticipated in the imagination of the combatants, by observing which party first shed blood. It is said that the Highlanders under Montrose were so deeply imbued with this notion, that, on the morning of the battle of Tippermoor, they murdered a defenceless herdsman, whom they found in the fields, merely to secure an advantage of so much consequence to their party.

NOTE 41.

*Why sounds yon stroke on beech and oak,
Our moonlight circle's screen?
Or who comes here to chase the deer,
Beloved of our Elfin Queen?—P. 349.*

Fairies, if not positively malevolent, are capricious, and easily offended. They are, like other proprietors of the forest, peculiarly jealous of their rights of vert and venison. This jealousy was also an attribute of the northern Duergar, or dwarfs, to many of whose distinctions the fairies seem to have succeeded, if indeed they are not the same class of beings.

NOTE 42.

*.....who may dare on wold to wear
The fairies' fatal green?—P. 350.*

As the Daoine Shi', or Men of Peace, wore green habits, they were supposed to take offence when any mortals ventured to assume their favourite colour. Indeed, from some reason which has been, perhaps, originally a general superstition, green is held in Scotland to be unlucky to particular tribes and counties. The Caithness men, who hold this belief, allege as a reason that their bands wore that colour when they were cut off at the battle of Flodden; and for the same reason they avoid crossing the Ord on a Monday, being the day of the week on which their ill-omened array set forth. Green is also disliked by those of the name of Ogilvy; but more especially is it held fatal to the whole clan of Grahame. It is remembered of an ancient gentleman of that name, that when his horse fell in a fox-chase, he accounted for it at once by observing that the whipcord attached to his lash was of this unlucky colour.

NOTE 43: handed or doot are

For thou wert christened man.—P. 350.

The elves were supposed greatly to envy the privileges acquired by Christian initiation, and they gave to those mortals who had fallen into their power a certain precedence founded upon this advantageous distinction. Tamlane, in the old ballad, describes his own rank in the fairy procession:—

“ For I ride on a milk-white steed,
And aye nearest the town;
Because I was a christened knight,
They givè me that renown.”

NOTE 44.

But all is glistening show.—P. 351.

No fact respecting Fairy-land seems to be better ascertained than the fantastic and illusory nature of their apparent pleasure and splendour.

NOTE 45.

*And, 'twixt life and death, was snatched away
To the joyless Elfin bower.*—P. 351.

The subjects of Fairy-land were recruited from the regions of humanity by a sort of crimping system, which extended to adults as well as to infants. Many of those who were in this world supposed to have discharged the debt of nature had only become denizens of the “Londe of Faery.”

NOTE 46.

*Who ever recked where, how, or when
The prowling fox was trapped or slain?*—P. 362.

St. John actually used this illustration when engaged in confuting the plea of law proposed for the unfortunate Earl of Strafford: “It was true we gave laws to hares and deer, because they are beasts of chase; but it was never accounted either cruelty or foul play to knock foxes or wolves on the head as they can be found, because they are beasts of prey. In a word, the law and humanity were alike; the one being more fallacious, and the other more barbarous, than in any age had been vented in such an authority.”—CLARENDON’S History of the Rebellion. Oxford, 1702, fol. vol. p. 183.

NOTE 47.

*.....his 'Highland cheer,
The hardened flesh of mountain deer.*—P. 363.

The Scottish Highlanders in former times had a concise mode of cooking their venison, or rather of dispensing with cooking it, which appears greatly to have surprised the French whom chance made acquainted with it. The Vidame of Chartres, when a hostage in England, during the reign of Edward VI., was permitted to travel into Scotland, and penetrated as far as to the remote Highlands (au fin fond des Sauvages). After a great hunting-party, at which a most wonderful quantity of game was destroyed, he saw these Scottish Savages devour a part of their venison raw, without any further preparation than compressing it between two batons of wood, so as to force out the blood and render it extremely hard. This they reckoned a great delicacy, and when the vidame partook of it, his compliance with their taste rendered him extremely popular.

NOTE 48.

*Not then claimed sovereignty his due,
While Albany, with feeble hand,
Held borrowed truncheon of command.*—P. 367.

There is scarcely a more disorderly period in Scottish history than that which succeeded the battle of Flodden, and occupied the minority of James V. Feuds of ancient standing broke out like old wounds, and every quarrel among the independent nobility, which occurred daily, and almost hourly, gave rise to fresh bloodshed.

NOTE 49.

The Gael, of plain and river heir.—P. 368.

The Gael, or Highlanders, never forgot that the Lowlands had, at some remote period, been the property of their Celtic forefathers, which furnished an ample vindication of all the ravages that they could make on the unfortunate districts which lay within their reach.

NOTE 50.

*... "I only meant
To show the reed on which you leant,
Deeming this path you might pursue
Without a pass from Roderick Dhu."*—P. 371.

This incident, like some other passages in the poem illustrative of the character of the ancient Gael, is not imaginary, but borrowed from fact. The Highlanders, with the inconsistency of most nations in the same state, were alternately capable of great exertions of generosity and of cruel revenge and perfidy.

NOTE 51.

*On Bochastle the mouldering lines,
Where Rome, the Empress of the world,
Of yore her eagle wings unfurled.*—P. 372.

The torrent which discharges itself from Loch Vennachar, the lowest and eastmost of the three lakes which form the scenery adjoining to the Trosachs, sweeps through a flat and extensive moor, called Bochastle. Upon a small eminence, called the Dun of Bochastle, and indeed on the plain itself, are some intrenchments, which have been thought Roman. There is adjacent to Callander a sweet villa, the residence of Captain Fairfoul, entitled the Roman Camp.

NOTE 52.

*See, here all vantageless I stand,
Armed, like thyself, with single brand.*—P. 373.

The duellists of former times did not always stand upon those punctilios respecting equality of arms which are now judged essential to fair combat. It is true that, in former combats in the lists, the parties were, by the judges of the field, put as nearly as possible in the same circumstances; but in private duel it was often otherwise.

NOTE 53.

*Ill fared it then with Roderick Dhu
That on the field his targe he threw,
For, trained abroad his arms to wield,
Fitz-James's blade was sword and shield.*—P. 374.

A round target of light wood, covered with strong leather, and studded with brass or iron, was a necessary part of a Highlander's equipment. In charging regular troops, they received the thrust of the bayonet in this buckler, twisted it aside, and used the broadsword against the encumbered soldier. In the civil war of 1745, most of the front rank of the clans were thus armed; and Captain Grose informs us that, in 1747, the privates of the 42nd Regiment, then in Flanders, were, for the most part, permitted to carry targets.—Military Antiquities, vol. i. p. 164.

NOTE 54.

The burghers hold their sports to-day.—P. 379.

Every burgh of Scotland, of the least note, but more especially the considerable towns, had their solemn play, or festival, when feats of archery were exhibited, and prizes distributed to those who excelled in wrestling, hurling the bar, and the other gymnastic exercises of the period. Stirling, a usual place of royal residence, was not likely to be deficient in pomp upon such occasions, especially since James V. was very partial to them. His ready participation in these popular amusements was one cause of his acquiring the title of King of the Commons, or Rex Plebeiorum, as Lesley has Latinized it. The usual prize to the best shooter was a silver arrow. Such a one is preserved at Selkirk and at Peebles.

NOTE 55.

Robin Hood.—P. 381.

The exhibition of this renowned outlaw and his band was a favourite frolic at such festivals as we are describing. This sporting, in which kings did not disdain to be actors, was prohibited in Scotland upon the Reformation, by a statute of the 6th Parliament of Queen Mary, c. 61,

A.D. 1555, which ordered, under heavy penalties, that "no manner of person be chosen Robert Hude, nor Little John, Abbot of Unreason, Queen of May, nor otherwise." But in 1561, the "rascal multitude," says John Knox, "were stirred up to make a Robin Hude, whilk enormity was of many years left and damned by statute and act of Parliament; yet would they not be forbidden." Accordingly, they raised a very serious tumult, and at length made prisoners the magistrates who endeavoured to suppress it, and would not release them till they extorted a formal promise that no one should be punished for his share of the disturbance. It would seem, from the complaints of the General Assembly of the Kirk, that these profane festivities were continued down to 1592. Bold Robin was, to say the least, equally successful in maintaining his ground against the reformed clergy of England, for the simple and evangelical Latimer complains of coming to a country church, where the people refused to hear him because it was Robin Hood's day, and his mitre and rochet were fain to give way to the village pastime.

NOTE 56.

*Prize of the wrestling match; the King
To Douglas gave a golden ring.—P. 382.*

The usual prize of a wrestling was a ram and a ring, but the animal would have embarrassed my story. Thus, in the Cokes Tale of Game-lyn, ascribed to Chaucer,

"There happed to be there beside—
Tried a wrestling;
And therefore there was y-setten
A ram and als a ring."

NOTE 57.

*These drew not for their fields the sword,
Like tenants of a feudal lord,
Nor owned the patriarchal claim
Of chieftain in their leader's name;
Adventurers they.—P. 390.*

The Scottish armies consisted chiefly of the nobility and barons, with their vassals, who held lands under them, for military service by themselves and their tenants. The patriarchal influence exercised by the heads of clans in the Highlands and Borders was of a different nature, and sometimes at variance with feudal principles. It flowed from the patria potestas, exercised by the chieftain as representing the original father of the whole name, and was often obeyed in contradiction to the feudal superior.

NOTE 58.

"Thou now hast glee-maiden and harp;
Get thee an ape, and trudge the land;
The leader of a juggler band."—P. 392.

The jongleurs, or jugglers, used to call in the aid of various assistants, to render these performances as captivating as possible. The glee-maiden was a necessary attendant. Her duty was tumbling and dancing; and therefore the Anglo-Saxon version of Saint Mark's Gospel states Herodias to have vaulted or tumbled before King Herod. In Scotland these poor creatures, even at a late period, seem to have been bondswomen to their masters.

NOTE 59.

*That stirring air that peals on high,
O'er Dermid's race our victory.*—P. 398.

There are several instances, at least in tradition, of persons so much attached to particular tunes as to require to hear them on their death-bed. Such an anecdote is mentioned by the late Mr. Riddel of Glenriddel, in his collection of Border tunes, respecting an air called the "Dandling of the Bairns," for which a certain Gallovidian laird is said to have evinced this strong mark of partiality. It is popularly told of a famous freebooter, that he composed the tune known by the name of "Macpherson's Rant" while under sentence of death, and played it at the gallows-tree. Some spirited words have been adapted to it by Burns. A similar story is recounted of a Welsh bard, who composed and played on his deathbed the air called "Dafydd Garreg Wen."

NOTE 60.

Battle of Beal' an Duine.—P. 399.

A skirmish actually took place at a pass thus called in the Trosachs, and closed with the remarkable incident mentioned in the text, but it was greatly posterior in date to the reign of James V.

NOTE 61.

And Snowdown's Knight is Scotland's King!—P. 409.

This discovery will probably remind the reader of the beautiful Arabian tale of Il Bondocani. Yet the incident is not borrowed from that elegant story, but from Scottish tradition. James V., of whom we are treating, was a monarch whose good and benevolent intentions often rendered his romantic freaks venial, if not respectable, since, from his anxious attention to the interests of the lower and most oppressed class of his subjects, he was, as we have seen, popularly termed the King of the Commons. For the purpose of seeing that justice was regularly administered, and frequently from the less justifiable motive of gallantry, he used to traverse the vicinage of his several palaces in various disguises. The two excellent comic songs, entitled, "The Gaberlunzie man," and "We'll gae nae mair a-roving," are said to have been founded upon the success of his amorous adventures when travelling in the disguise of a beggar. The latter is perhaps the best comic ballad in any language.

It appears that the real name by which James was actually distinguished in his private excursions was the "Gudeman of Ballenguich," derived from a steep pass leading to the Castle of Stirling, so called. But the epithet would not have suited poetry, and would besides at once, and prematurely, have announced the plot to many of my countrymen.

NOTE 62.

.....Stirling's tower
Of yore the name of Snowdoun claims.—P. 410.

William of Worcester, who wrote about the middle of the fifteenth century, calls Stirling Castle Snowdoun. Sir David Lindsay bestows the same epithet upon it in his complaint of the Papingo :

“ Adieu, fair Snawdoun, with thy towers high,
Thy chaple-royal, park, and table round ;
May, June, and July would I dwell in thee,
Were I a man, to hear the birdis sound,
Whilk doth againe thy royal rock rebound.”

NOTES TO THE VISION OF DON RODERICK.

NOTE 1.

*And Cattraeth's glens with voice of triumph rung,
And mystic Merlin harped, and grey-haired Llywarch sung?*
P. 416.

THIS locality may startle those readers who do not recollect that much of the ancient poetry preserved in Wales refers less to the history of the principality to which that name is now limited, than to events which happened in the north-west of England and south-west of Scotland, where the Britons for a long time made a stand against the Saxons. The battle of Cattraeth, lamented by the celebrated Aneurin, is supposed, by the learned Dr. Leyden, to have been fought on the skirts of Ettrick Forest. It is known to the English reader by the paraphrase of Gray, beginning,

"Had I but the torrent's might,
With headlong rage and wild affright," etc.

But it is not so generally known that the champions mourned in this beautiful dirge were the British inhabitants of Edinburgh, who were cut off by the Saxons of Deira, or Northumberland, about the latter part of the sixth century.

NOTE 2.

Minchmore's haunted spring.—P. 417.

A belief in the existence and nocturnal revels of the fairies still lingers among the vulgar in Selkirkshire. A copious fountain upon the ridge of Minchmore, called the Cheesewell, is supposed to be sacred to these fanciful spirits, and it was customary to propitiate them by throwing in something upon passing it. A pin was the usual oblation; and the ceremony is still sometimes practised, though rather in jest than in earnest.

NOTE 3.

*.....the rude villager, his labour done,
In verse spontaneous chants some favoured name.*—P. 417.

The flexibility of the Italian and Spanish languages, and perhaps the liveliness of their genius, render these countries distinguished for the talent of improvisation, which is found even among the lowest of the people. It is mentioned by Baretti and other travellers.

NOTE 4.

Kindling at the deeds of Græme.—P. 417.

Over a name sacred for ages to heroic verse, a poet may be allowed to exercise some power. I have used the freedom, here and elsewhere, to alter the orthography of the name of my gallant countryman, in order to apprise the southern reader of its legitimate sound—Grahame being, on the other side of the Tweed, usually pronounced as a dissyllable.

NOTE 5.

*"What! will Don Roderick here till morning stay,
To wear in shrift and prayer the night away?
And are his hours in such dull penance passed
For fair Florinda's plundered charms to pay?"*—P. 419.

Almost all the Spanish historians, as well as the voice of tradition, ascribe the invasion of the Moors to the forcible violation committed by Roderick upon Florinda, called Caba or Cava by the Moors. She was the daughter of Count Julian, one of the Gothic monarch's principal lieutenants, who, when the crime was perpetrated, was engaged in the defence of Ceuta against the Moors. In his indignation at the ingratitude of his sovereign and the dishonour of his daughter, Count Julian forgot the duties of a Christian and a patriot, and, forming an alliance with Musa, then the Caliph's lieutenant in Africa, he countenanced the invasion of Spain by a body of Saracens and Africans, commanded by the celebrated Tarik; the issue of which was the defeat and death of Roderick, and the occupation of almost the whole peninsula by the Moors. Voltaire, in his General History, expresses his doubts of this popular story, and Gibbon gives him some countenance; but the universal tradition is quite sufficient for the purposes of poetry. The Spaniards, in detestation of Florinda's memory, are said by Cervantes never to bestow that name on any human female, reserving it for their dogs.

NOTE 6.

The Tecbir war-cry, and the Lelie's yell.—P. 424.

The Tecbir (derived from the words Alla acbar, "God is most mighty") was the original war-cry of the Saracens. It is celebrated by Hughes in the "Siege of Damascus":—

"We heard the Tecbir; so these Arabs call
Their shout of onset, when, with loud appeal,
They challenge Heaven, as if demanding conquest."

The Lelie, well known to the Christians during the crusades, is the shout of Alla illa Alla, the Mohammedan confession of faith. It is twice used in poetry by my friend Mr. W. Stewart Rose, in the romance of "Partenopex," and in the "Crusade of St. Lewis."

NOTE 7.

" *By Heaven, the Moors prevail! the Christians yield!—
 Their coward leader gives for flight the sign!
 The sceptred craven mounts to quit the field—
 Is not yon steed Orelia?—Yes, 'tis mine!*"—P. 424.

Count Julian, the father of the injured Florinda, with the connivance and assistance of Oppas, Archbishop of Toledo, invited, in 713, the Saracens into Spain. A considerable army arrived under the command of Tarik, or Tarif, who bequeathed the well-known name of Gibraltar (Gibel al Tarik, or "the mountain of Tarik") to the place of his landing. He was joined by Count Julian, ravaged Andalusia, and took Seville. In 714 they returned with a still greater force, and Roderick marched into Andalusia, at the head of a great army, to give them battle. The field was chosen near Xeres. For a long time the issue of the fight seemed dubious, till Archbishop Oppas went over to the infidels with a great body of his followers. The Goths, dismayed by such unparalleled treachery, and tired with fighting, were completely routed, and Don Roderick fled from the field. Orelia, the courser of Don Roderick, mentioned in the text, was celebrated for her speed and form. She is mentioned repeatedly in Spanish romance, and also by Cervantes.

NOTE 8.

*When for the light bolero ready stand
 The mozo blithe, with gay muchacha met.*—P. 428.

The bolero is a very light and active dance, much practised by the Spaniards, in which castanets are always used. Mozo and muchacha are equivalent to our phrase of "lad and lass."

NOTE 9.

While trumpets rang, and heralds cried, "Castile!"—P. 430.

The heralds, at the coronation of a Spanish monarch, proclaim his name three times, and repeat three times the word Castilla, Castilla, Castilla, which, with all other ceremonies, was carefully copied in the mock inauguration of Joseph Bonaparte.

NOTE 10.

High blazed the war, and long, and far, and wide.—P. 432.

Those who were disposed to believe that mere virtue and energy are able of themselves to work forth the salvation of an oppressed people, surprised in a moment of confidence, deprived of their officers, armies, and fortresses, who had every means of resistance to seek in the very moment when they were to be made use of, and whom the numerous treasons among the higher orders deprived of confidence in their natural leaders,—those who entertained this enthusiastic but delusive opinion may be pardoned for expressing their disappointment at the protracted warfare in the Peninsula. There are, however, another class of persons, who, having themselves the highest dread or veneration, or something allied to both, for the power of the modern Attila, will nevertheless give the heroic Spaniards little or no credit for the long, stubborn, and unsubdued resistance of three years to a power before whom their former well-prepared, well-armed, and numerous adversaries fell in the course of as many months. While these gentlemen plead for deference to Bonaparte, and crave

“ Respect for his great place, and bid the devil
Be duly honoured for his burning throne,”

it may not be altogether unreasonable to claim some modification of censure upon those who have been long and to a great extent successfully resisting this great enemy of mankind. That the energy of Spain has not uniformly been directed by conduct equal to its vigour, has been too obvious; that her armies, under their complicated disadvantages, have shared the fate of such as were defeated after taking the field with every possible advantage of arms and discipline, is surely not to be wondered at. But that a nation, under the circumstances of repeated discomfiture, internal treason, and the mismanagement incident to a temporary and hastily adopted government, should have wasted, by its stubborn, uniform, and prolonged resistance, myriads after myriads of those soldiers who had overrun the world; that some of its provinces should, like Galicia, after being abandoned by their allies, and overrun by their enemies, have recovered their freedom by their own unassisted exertions; that others, like Catalonia, undismayed by the treason which betrayed some fortresses, and the force which subdued others, should not only have continued their resistance, but have attained over their victorious enemy a superiority which is even now enabling them to besiege and retake the places of strength which had been wrested from them, is a tale hitherto untold in the revolutionary war.

NOTE II.

They won not Zaragoza, but her children's bloody tomb.—P. 433.

The interesting account of Mr. Vaughan has made most readers acquainted with the first siege of Zaragoza. The last and fatal siege of that gallant and devoted city is detailed with great eloquence and precision in the “Edinburgh Annual Register” for 1809—a work in which the affairs of Spain have been treated of with attention corresponding to their deep interest, and to the peculiar sources of information open to the historian. The following are a few brief extracts from this splendid historical narrative:—

“ A breach was soon made in the mud walls, and then, as in the former siege, the war was carried on in the streets and houses; but the French had been taught by experience that in this species of warfare the Zaragozans derived a superiority from the feeling and principle which inspired them, and the cause for which they fought. The only means of conquering Zaragoza was to destroy it house by house, and street by street; and upon this system of destruction they proceeded. Three companies of miners and eight companies of sappers carried on this subterraneous war. The Spaniards, it is said, attempted to oppose them by counter-mines; these were operations to which they were wholly unused, and, according to the French statement, their miners were every day discovered and suffocated. Meantime the bombardment was incessantly kept up. 'Within the last forty-eight hours,' said Palafox in a letter to his friend General Doyle, '6,000 shells have been thrown in. Two-thirds of the town are in ruins, but we shall perish under the ruins of the remaining third rather than surrender.' In the course of the siege above 17,000 bombs were thrown at the town; the stock of powder with which Zaragoza had been stored was exhausted; they had none at last but what they manufactured day by day, and no other cannon-balls than those which were shot into the town, and which they collected and fired back upon the enemy."

In the midst of these horrors and privations, the pestilence broke out in Zaragoza. To various causes, enumerated by the annalist, he adds, "scantiness of food, crowded quarters, unusual exertion of body, anxiety of mind, and the impossibility of recruiting their exhausted strength by needful rest, in a city which was almost incessantly bombarded, and where every hour their sleep was broken by the tremendous explosion of mines. There was now no respite, either by day or night, for this devoted city. Even the natural order of light and darkness was destroyed in Zaragoza: by day it was involved in a red sulphureous atmosphere of smoke, which hid the face of heaven; by night, the fire of cannons and mortars, and the flames of burning houses, kept it in a state of terrific illumination."

"When once the pestilence had begun, it was impossible to check its progress, or confine it to one quarter of the city. Hospitals were immediately established—there were above thirty of them; as soon as one was destroyed by the bombardment, the patients were removed to another, and thus the infection was carried to every part of Zaragoza. Famine aggravated the evil; the city had probably not been sufficiently provided at the commencement of the siege, and of the provisions which it contained much was destroyed in the daily ruin which the mines and bombs effected. Had the Zaragozans and their garrison proceeded according to military rules, they would have surrendered before the end of January: their batteries had then been demolished, there were open breaches in many parts of their weak walls, and the enemy were already within the city. On the 30th, above sixty houses were blown up, and the French obtained possession of the monasteries of the Augustines and Las Monicas, which adjoined each other, two of the last defensible places left. The enemy forced their way into the church; every column, every chapel, every altar became a point of defence, which was repeatedly attacked, taken, and retaken; the pavement was covered with blood, the aisles and body of the church strewn with the dead, who were trampled under foot by the combatants. In the midst of this conflict, the roof, shattered by repeated bombs, fell in; the few who were not crushed, after a short pause, which this tremendous shock and their own unexpected escape occasioned, renewed the fight with rekindled fury: fresh parties of the enemy poured in; monks, and citizens, and soldiers came to the defence, and the contest was continued upon the ruins and the bodies of the dead and the dying."

Yet, seventeen days after sustaining these extremities, did the heroic inhabitants of Zaragoza continue their defence; nor did they then surrender until their despair had extracted from the French generals a capitulation more honourable than has been granted to fortresses of the first order.

Who shall venture to refuse the Zaragozans the eulogium conferred upon them by the eloquence of Wordsworth!—"Most gloriously have the citizens of Zaragoza proved that the true army of Spain, in a contest of this nature, is the whole people. The same city has also exemplified a melancholy, yea, a dismal truth, yet consolatory and full of joy—that when a people are called suddenly to fight for their liberty, and are sorely pressed upon, their best field of battle is the floors upon which their children have played, the chambers where the family of each man has slept (his own or his neighbours'), upon or under the roofs by which they have been sheltered, in the gardens of their recreation, in the street or in the market-place, before the altars of their temples, and among their congregated dwellings, blazing or uprooted.

"The government of Spain must never forget Zaragoza for a moment. Nothing is wanting to produce the same effects everywhere but a leading mind, such as that city was blessed with. In the latter contest this has been proved, for Zaragoza contained, at that time, bodies of men from almost all parts of Spain. The narrative of those two sieges should be the manual of every Spaniard. He may add to it the ancient stories of Numantia and Saguntum: let him sleep upon the book as a pillow, and, if he be a devout adherent to the religion of his country, let him wear it in his bosom for his crucifix to rest upon."—WORDSWORTH, On the Convention of Cintra.

NOTE 12.

The Vault of Destiny.—P. 436.

Before finally dismissing the enchanted cavern of Don Roderick, it may be noticed that the legend occurs in one of Calderon's plays, entitled La Virgin del Sagrario. The scene opens with the noise of the chase, and Recisundo, a predecessor of Roderick upon the Gothic throne, enters, pursuing a stag. The animal assumes the form of a man, and defies the king to enter the cave, which forms the bottom of the scene, and engage with him in single combat. The king accepts the challenge, and they engage accordingly, but without advantage on either side, which induces the genie to inform Recisundo that he is not the monarch for whom the adventure of the enchanted cavern is reserved, and he proceeds to predict the downfall of the Gothic monarchy, and of the Christian religion, which shall attend the discovery of its mysteries. Recisundo, appalled by these prophecies, orders the cavern to be secured by a gate and bolts of iron. In the second part of the same play, we are informed that Don Roderick had removed the barrier, and transgressed the prohibition of his ancestor, and had been apprised by the prodigies which he discovered of the approaching ruin of his kingdom.

NOTE 13.

*While downward on the land his legions press :
Before them it was rich with vine and flock,
And smiled like Eden in her summer dress ;
Behind their wasteful march, a reeking wilderness.—P. 437.*

I have ventured to apply to the movements of the French army that sublime passage in the prophecies of Joel, which seems applicable to them in more respects than that I have adopted in the text. One would think their ravages, their military appointments, the terror which they spread among invaded nations, their military discipline, their arts of political intrigue and deceit, were distinctly pointed out in the following verses of Scripture :—

“2. A day of darknesse and of gloominesse, a day of clouds and of thick darknesse, as the morning spread upon the mountains : a great people and a strong ; there hath not been ever the like, neither shall be any more after it, even to the yeares of many generations. 3. A fire devoureth before them ; and behind them a flame burneth : the land is as the garden of Eden before them, and behinde them a desolate wilderness ; yea, and nothing shall escape them. 4. The appearance of them is as the appearance of horses ; and as horsemen, so shall they runne. 5. Like the noise of chariots on the tops of mountains shall they leap, like the noise of a flame of fire that devoureth the stubble, as a strong people set in battel array. 6. Before their face the people shall be much pained : all faces shall gather blacknesse. 7. They shall run like mighty men ; they shall climb the wall like men of warre ; and they shall march every one on his wayes, and they shall not break their ranks : 8. Neither shall one thrust another ; they shall walk every one in his path : and when they fall upon the sword, they shall not be wounded. 9. They shall run to and fro in the citie ; they shall run upon the wall, they shall climbe up upon the houses ; they shall enter in at the windows like a thief. 10. The earth shall quake before them ; the heavens shall tremble : the sunne and the moon shall be dark, and the starres shall withdraw their shining.”

In verse 20th also, which announces the retreat of the northern army, described in such dreadful colours, into a “land barren and desolate,” and the dishonour with which God afflicted them for having “magnified themselves to do great things,” there are particulars not inapplicable to the retreat of Massena—Divine Providence having, in all ages, attached disgrace as the natural punishment of cruelty and presumption.

NOTE 14.

*The rudest sentinel, in Britain born,
With horror paused to view the havoc done,
Gave his poor crust to feed some wretch forlorn.—P. 438.*

Even the unexampled gallantry of the British army in the campaign of 1810–11, although they never fought but to conquer, will do them less honour in history than their humanity, attentive to soften to the utmost of their power the horrors which war, in its mildest aspect, must always inflict upon the defenceless inhabitants of the country in which it is waged, and which, on this occasion, were tenfold augmented by the barbarous cruelties of the French. Soup-kitchens were established by subscription among the officers wherever the troops were quartered for any length of time. The commissaries contributed the heads, feet, etc., of the cattle slaughtered for the soldiery; rice, vegetables, and bread where it could be had, were purchased by the officers. Fifty or sixty starving peasants were daily fed at one of these regimental establishments, and carried home the relics to their famished households. The emaciated wretches, who could not crawl from weakness, were speedily employed in pruning their vines. While pursuing Massena, the soldiers evinced the same spirit of humanity, and in many instances, when reduced themselves to short allowance from having outmarched their supplies, they shared their pittance with the starving inhabitants, who had ventured back to view the ruins of their habitations burned by the retreating enemy, and to bury the bodies of their relations whom they had butchered. Is it possible to know such facts without feeling a sort of confidence that those who so well deserve victory are most likely to attain it? It is not the least of Lord Wellington's military merits that the slightest disposition towards marauding meets immediate punishment. Independently of all moral obligation, the army which is most orderly in a friendly country has always proved most formidable to an armed enemy.

NOTE 15.

Vainglorious fugitive!—P. 439.

The French conducted this memorable retreat with much of the fanfaronnade proper to their country, by which they attempt to impose upon others, and perhaps on themselves, a belief that they are triumphing in the very moment of their discomfiture. On the 30th March 1811 their rearguard was overtaken near Pega by the British cavalry. Being well posted, and conceiving themselves safe from infantry (who were indeed many miles in the rear) and from artillery, they indulged themselves in parading their bands of music, and actually performed "God save the King." Their minstrelsy was, however, deranged by the undesired accompaniment of the British horse artillery, on whose part in the concert they had not calculated. The surprise was sudden, and the rout complete; for the artillery and cavalry did execution upon them for about four miles, pursuing at the gallop as often as they got beyond the range of the guns.

NOTE 16.

*Vainly thy squadrons hide Assuava's plain,
And front the flying thunders as they roar,
With frantic charge, and tenfold odds, in vain!*—P. 439.

In the severe action of Fuentes d'Honoro, upon 5th May 1811, the grand mass of the French cavalry attacked the right of the British position, covered by two guns of the horse artillery and two squadrons of cavalry. After suffering considerably from the fire of the guns, which annoyed them in every attempt at formation, the enemy turned their wrath entirely towards them, distributed brandy among their troopers, and advanced to carry the field-pieces with the desperation of drunken fury. They were in nowise checked by the heavy loss which they sustained in this daring attempt, but closed, and fairly mingled with the British cavalry, to whom they bore the proportion of ten to one. Captain Ramsay (let me be permitted to name a gallant countryman), who commanded the two guns, dismissed them at the gallop, and putting himself at the head of the mounted artillerymen, ordered them to fall upon the French, sabre in hand. This very unexpected conversion of artillerymen into dragoons contributed greatly to the defeat of the enemy, already disconcerted by the reception they had met from the two British squadrons; and the appearance of some small reinforcements, notwithstanding the immense disproportion of force, put them to absolute rout. A colonel or major of their cavalry, and many prisoners (almost all intoxicated), remained in our possession. Those who consider for a moment the difference of the services, and how much an artilleryman is necessarily and naturally led to identify his own safety and utility with abiding by the tremendous implement of war, to the exercise of which he is chiefly, if not exclusively, trained, will know how to estimate the presence of mind which commanded so bold a manœuvre, and the steadiness and confidence with which it was executed.

NOTE 17.

*And what avails thee that, for Cameron slain,
Wild from his plaided ranks the yell was given.*—P. 439.

The gallant Colonel Cameron was mortally wounded during the desperate contest in the streets of the village called Fuentes d'Honoro. He fell at the head of his native Highlanders, the 71st and 79th, who raised a dreadful shriek of grief and rage. They charged, with irresistible fury, the finest body of French grenadiers ever seen, being a part of Bonaparte's selected guard. The officer who led the French, a man remarkable for stature and symmetry, was killed on the spot. The Frenchman who stepped out of his rank to take aim at Colonel Cameron was also bayoneted, pierced with a thousand wounds, and almost torn to pieces by the furious Highlanders, who, under the command of Colonel Cadogan, bore the enemy out of the contested ground at the point of the bayonet. Massena pays my countrymen a singular compliment in his account of the attack and defence of this village, in which he says the British lost many officers, and Scotch.

NOTE 18.

*O who shall grudge him Albuera's bays,
Who brought a race regenerate to the field,
Roused them to emulate their fathers' praise,
Tempered their headlong rage, their courage steeled,
And raised fair Lusitania's fallen shield.*—P. 440.

Nothing during the war of Portugal seems, to a distinct observer, more deserving of praise than the self-devotion of Field-Marshal Beresford, who was contented to undertake all the hazard of obloquy which might have been founded upon any miscarriage in the highly important experiment of training the Portuguese troops to an improved state of discipline. In exposing his military reputation to the censure of imprudence from the most moderate, and all manner of unutterable calumnies from the ignorant and malignant, he placed at stake the dearest pledge which a military man had to offer, and nothing but the deepest conviction of the high and essential importance attached to success can be supposed an adequate motive. How great the chance of miscarriage was supposed may be estimated from the general opinion of officers of unquestioned talents and experience, possessed of every opportunity of information; how completely the experiment has succeeded, and how much the spirit and patriotism of our ancient allies had been underrated, are evident, not only from those victories in which they have borne a distinguished share, but from the liberal and highly honourable manner in which these opinions have been retracted. The success of this plan, with all its important consequences, we owe to the indefatigable exertions of Field-Marshal Beresford.

NOTE 19.

.....a race renowned of old,
 Whose war-cry oft has waked the battle-swell.

* * * * *

.....the conquering shout of Græme!—P. 441.

This stanza alludes to the various achievements of the warlike family of Græme, or Grahame. They are said, by tradition, to have descended from the Scottish chief, under whose command his countrymen stormed the wall built by the Emperor Severus between the Firths of Forth and Clyde, the fragments of which are still popularly called Græme's Dyke. Sir John the Græme, "the hardy, wight, and wise," is well known as the friend of Sir William Wallace. Auldearn, Kilsyth, and Tippermuir were scenes of the victories of the heroic Marquis of Montrose. The pass of Killiecrankie is famous for the action between King William's forces and the Highlanders in 1689,

"Where glad Dundee in faint huzzas expired."

It is seldom that one line can number so many heroes, and yet more rare when it can appeal to the glory of a living descendant in support of its ancient renown.

The allusions to the private history and character of General Grahame may be illustrated by referring to the eloquent and affecting speech of Mr. Sheridan, upon the vote of thanks to the victors of Barossa.

NOTES TO ROKEBY.

NOTE 1.

On Barnard's towers, and Tees's stream.—P. 445.

"BARNARD CASTLE," saith old Leland, "standeth stately upon Tees." It is founded upon a very high bank, and its ruins impend over the river, including within the area a circuit of six acres and upwards. This once magnificent fortress derives its name from its founder, Barnard Baliol, the ancestor of the short and unfortunate dynasty of that name, which succeeded to the Scottish throne under the patronage of Edward I. and Edward III. Baliol's Tower, afterwards mentioned in the poem, is a round tower of great size, situated at the western extremity of the building. It bears marks of great antiquity, and was remarkable for the curious construction of its vaulted roof, which has been lately greatly injured by the operations of some persons, to whom the tower has been leased for the purpose of making patent shot! The prospect from the top of Baliol's Tower commands a rich and magnificent view of the wooded valley of the Tees.

NOTE 2.

.....no human ear,
Unsharpened by revenge and fear,
Could e'er distinguish horse's clank.—P. 447.

I have had occasion to remark, in real life, the effect of keen and fervent anxiety in giving acuteness to the organs of sense. My gifted friend, Miss Joanna Baillie, whose dramatic works display such intimate acquaintance with the operations of human passion, has not omitted this remarkable circumstance:—

"De Montfort (off his guard). 'Tis Rezenvelt: I heard his well-known foot,
From the first staircase mounting step by step.
Fréd. How quick an ear thou hast for distant sound!
I heard him not.
(De Montfort looks embarrassed, and is silent.)"

NOTE 3.

*The morion's plumes his visage hide,
And the buff-coat, in ample fold,
Mantles his form's gigantic mould.*—P. 448.

The use of complete suits of armour was fallen into disuse during the Civil War, though they were still worn by leaders of rank and importance. "In the reign of King James I.," says our military antiquary, "no great alterations were made in the article of defensive armour, except that the buff-coat, or jerkin, which was originally worn under the cuirass, now became frequently a substitute for it, it having been found that a good buff leather would of itself resist the stroke of a sword. This, however, only occasionally took place among the light-armed cavalry and infantry, complete suits of armour being still used among the heavy horse. Buff-coats continued to be worn by the city trained bands till within the memory of persons now living, so that defensive armour may, in some measure, be said to have terminated in the same materials with which it began—that is, the skins of animals, or leather."—GROSE'S Military Antiquities. Lond. 1801, 4to, vol. ii. p. 323.

Of the buff-coats, which were worn over the corselets, several are yet preserved; and Captain Grose has given an engraving of one which was used in the time of Charles I. by Sir Francis Rhodes, Bart., of Balbrough Hall, Derbyshire.

NOTE 4.

*On his dark face a scorching clime,
And toil, had done the work of time.*

* * *

*Death had he seen by sudden blow,
By wasting plague, by tortures slow.*—P. 449.

In this character I have attempted to sketch one of those West Indian adventurers, who, during the course of the seventeenth century, were popularly known by the name of Bucaniers. The successes of the English in the predatory incursions upon Spanish America during the reign of Elizabeth had never been forgotten; and, from that period downward, the exploits of Drake and Raleigh were imitated, upon a smaller scale indeed, but with equally desperate valour, by small bands of pirates, gathered from all nations, but chiefly French and English. The engrossing policy of the Spaniards tended greatly to increase the number of these freebooters, from whom their commerce and colonies suffered, in the issue, dreadful calamity.

NOTE 5.

..... On Marston heath

Met, front to front, the ranks of death.—P. 451.

The well-known and desperate battle of Long-Marston Moor, which terminated so unfortunately for the cause of Charles, commenced under very different auspices. Prince Rupert had marched with an army of 20,000 men for the relief of York, then besieged by Sir Thomas Fairfax, at the head of the Parliamentary army, and the Earl of Leven, with the Scottish auxiliary forces. In this he so completely succeeded that he compelled the besiegers to retreat to Marston Moor, a large open plain, about eight miles distant from the city. Thither they were followed by the Prince, who had now united to his army the garrison of York, probably not less than ten thousand men strong, under the gallant Marquis (then Earl) of Newcastle. Whitelocke has recorded, with much impartiality, the following particulars of this eventful day:—"The right wing of the Parliament was commanded by Sir Thomas Fairfax, and consisted of all his horse, and three regiments of the Scots horse; the left wing was commanded by the Earl of Manchester and Colonel Cromwell. One body of their foot was commanded by Lord Fairfax, and consisted of his foot, and two brigades of the Scots foot for reserve; and the main body of the rest of the foot was commanded by General Leven.

"The right wing of the Prince's army was commanded by the Earl of Newcastle; the left wing by the Prince himself; and the main body by General Goring, Sir Charles Lucas, and Major-General Porter. Thus were both sides drawn up into battalia.

"July 3rd, 1644. In this posture both armies faced each other, and about seven o'clock in the morning the fight began between them. The Prince, with his left wing, fell on the Parliament's right wing, routed them, and pursued them a great way; the like did General Goring, Lucas, and Porter, upon the Parliament's main body. The three generals, giving up all for lost, hasted out of the field, and many of their soldiers fled, and threw down their arms; the King's forces too eagerly following them, the victory, now almost achieved by them, was again snatched out of their hands. For Colonel Cromwell, with the brave regiment of his countrymen, and Sir Thomas Fairfax, having rallied some of his horse, fell upon the Prince's right wing, where the Earl of Newcastle was, and routed them; and the rest of their companions rallying, they fell altogether upon the divided bodies of Rupert and Goring, and totally dispersed them, and obtained a complete victory, after three hours' fight.

"From this battle and the pursuit, some reckon were buried 7,000 Englishmen; all agree that above 3,000 of the Prince's men were slain in the battle, besides those in the chase, and 3,000 prisoners taken, many of their chief officers, twenty-five pieces of ordnance, forty-seven colours, 10,000 arms, two waggons of carabins and pistols, 130 barrels of powder, and all their bag and baggage."—WHITELOCKE's Memoirs, fol. p. 89. Lond. 1682.

NOTE 6.

*Monckton and Milton told the news,
How troops of Roundheads choked the Ouse,
And many a bonny Scot, aghast,
Spurring his palfrey northward, passed,
Cursing the day when zeal or meed
First lured their Lesley o'er the Tweed.*—P. 457.

Monckton and Milton are villages near the river Ouse, and not very distant from the field of battle. The particulars of the action were violently disputed at the time; but the following extract, from the manuscript "History of the Baronial House of Somerville," is decisive as to the flight of the Scottish general, the Earl of Leven. The details are given by the author of the history on the authority of his father, then the representative of the family. This curious manuscript was published by consent of Lord Somerville.

"The order of this great battell, wherein both armies was neer of an equall number, consisting, to the best calculatiōe, neer to three score thousand men upon both sydes, I shall not take upon me to discryve; albeit, from the draughts then taken upon the place, and information I receaved from this gentleman, who being then a volunteer, as having no command, had opportunitie and libertie to ryde from the one wing of the armie to the other, to view all ther several squadrons of horse and battallions of foot, how formed, and in what manner drawn up, with every other circumstance relating to the fight, and that both as to the King's armies and that of the Parliament's, amongst whom, untill the engadgment, he went from statione to statione to observe ther order and forme; but that the descriptione of this battell, with the various success on both sides at the beginning, with the loss of the royal armie, and the sad effects that followed that misfortune as to his Majestie's interest, hes been so often done already by English authors, little to our commendatione, how justly I shall not dispute, seing the truth is, as our principall generall fled that night neer fourtie mylles from the place of the fight, that part of the armie where he commanded being totallie routed; but it is as true, that much of the victorie is attributed to the good conduct of David Lessellie, lievetennent-generall of our horse. Cromwell himself, that minione of fortune, but the rod of God's wrath, to punish eftirward three rebellious nations, disdained not to take orders from him, albeit then in the same qualitie of command for the Parliament, as being lievetennent-general to the Earl of Manchester's horse, whom, with the assistance of the Scots horse, haveing routed the Prince's right wing, as he had done that of the Parliament's. These two commanders of the horse upon that wing wisely restrained the great bodies of their horse from persuing these brocken troupes; but, wheelling to the left-hand, falls in upon the naked flanks of the Prince's main battallion of foot, carrying them doune with great violence; nether mett they with any great resistance untill they came to the Marques of Newcastle his battallione of White Coats, who, first peppering them soundly with ther shott, when they came to charge, stoutly bore them up with their picks that they could not enter to break them. Here the Parliament's horsē of that wing receaved ther greatest losse, and a stop for sometye pult to ther hoped-for victorie; and that only by the stout resistance of this gallant battallione, which consisted neer of four thousand foot, until at length a Scots regiment of dragouns, commanded by Collonell Frizeall, with other two, was brought to open them upon some hand, which at length they did, when all the ammunitiōe was spent. Having refused quarters, every man fell in the same order and ranke wherein he had foughten.

"Be this execucion was done, the Prince returned from the persuite of the right wing of the Parliament's horse, which he had beatten and followed too farre, to the losse of the battell, which certanely, in all men's opinions, he might have carryed if he had not been too violent upon the persuite; which gave his enemies upon the left-hand opportunitie to disperse and cut doune his infantrie, who, haveing cleared the field of all the standing bodies of foot, wer now, with many . . . of their oune, standing ready to receive the charge of his almost spent horses, if he should attempt it; which the Prince observing, and seeing all lost, he retreated to Yorke with two thousand horse. Notwithstanding of this, there was that night such a consternation in the Parliament armies, that it's believed by most of those that were there present, that if the Prince, having so great a body of horse intire, had made an onfall that night, or the ensuing morning betime, he had carryed the victorie out of their hands; for it's certane, by the morning's light, he had rallied a body of ten thousand men, wherof there was neer three thousand gallant horse. These, with the assistance of the toun and garrisoone of Yorke, might have done much to have recovered the victory, for the loss of this battell in effect lost the King and his interest in the three kingdomes; his Majestie never being able eftir this to make head in the north, but lost his garrisons every day.

“As for Generall Lessellie, in the beginning of this flight, having that part of the army quite broken, where he had placed himself, by the valour of the Prince, he imagined, and was confirmed by the opinion of others then upon the place with him, that the battell was irrecoverably lost, seeing they were fleeing upon all hands; therefore they humbly intreated his Excellence to retire and wait his better fortune, which, without farther advyising, he did; and never drew bridle untill he came the length of Leads, having ridden all that night with a cloak of drap de berrie about him, belonging to this gentleman of whom I write, then in his retinue, with many other officers of good qualitie. It was neer twelve the next day before they had the certanety who was master of the field, when at length they arrived an expresse, sent by David Lessellie, to acquaint the General they had obtained a most glorious victory, and that the Prince, with his broken troupes, was fled from Yorke. This intelligence was somewhat amazing to these gentlemen that had been eyewitnesses to the disorder of the armie before their retreating, and had then accompanied the General in his flight; who, being much wearied that evening of the battell with ordering of his armie, and now quite spent with his long journey in the night, had casten himselfe doune upon a bed to rest, when this gentleman coming quietly into his chamber, he awoke, and hastily cries out, ‘Lievetennent-collonell, what news?’—‘All is safe, may it please your Excellence; the Parliament’s armie has obtained a great victory;’ and then delivers the letter. The Generall, upon the hearing of this, knocked upon his breast, and says, ‘I would to God I had died upon the place!’ and then opens the letter, which, in a few lines, gave an account of the victory, and in the close pressed his speedy returne to the armie, which he did the next day, being accompanied some myles back by this gentleman, who then takes his leave of him, and received at parting many expressions of kyndenesse, with promises that he would never be unmyndful of his care and respect towards him; and in the end he intreats him to present his service to all his friends and acquaintances in Scotland. Thereftir the Generall sets forward in his journey for the armie, as this gentleman did for . . . , in order to his transportation for Scotland, where he arrived six dayes eftir the fight of Mestoun Muir, and gave the first true account and descriptione of that great battell, wherein the Covenanters then gloried soe much, that they impiously boasted the Lord had now signally appeared for His cause and people; it being ordinary for them, durement the whole time of this warre, to attribute the greatnes of their success to the goodnes and justice of ther cause, untill Divine Justice trysted them with some crosse dispensatione, and then you might have heard this language from them, 'That it pleases the Lord to give his oune the heaviest end of the tree to bear, that the saints and the people of God must still be sufferers while they are here away, that the malignant party was God's rod to punish them for ther unthankfullnesse, which in the end he will cast into the fire;' with a thousand other expressions and Scripture citations, prophanely and blasphemously uttered by them, to palliate ther villainie and rebellion."—Memoires of the Somervilles. Cromwell, with his regiment of cuirassiers, had a principal share in turning the fate of the day at Marston Moor, which was equally matter of triumph to the Independents, and of grief and heartburning to the Presbyterians and to the Scottish.

NOTE 8.

*Do not my native dales prolong
Of Percy Reed the tragic song,
Trained forward to his bloody fall
By Girsonfield, that treacherous Hall?*—P. 458.

In a poem, entitled "The Lay of the Reedwater Minstrel," Newcastle, 1809, this tale, with many others peculiar to the valley of the Reed, is commemorated:—"The particulars of the traditional story of Percy Reed of Troughend, and the Halls of Girsonfield, the author had from a descendant of the family of Reed. From his account, it appears that Percival Reed, Esquire, a keeper of Reedsdale, was betrayed by the Halls (hence denominated the false-hearted Halls) to a band of moss-troopers of the name of Crosier, who slew him at Batinghope, near the source of the Reed.

"The Halls were, after the murder of Percy Reed, held in such universal abhorrence and contempt by the inhabitants of Reedsdale, for their cowardly and treacherous behaviour, that they were obliged to leave the country." In another passage, we are informed that the ghost of the injured Borderer is supposed to haunt the banks of a brook called the Pringle. These Reeds of Troughend were a very ancient family, as may be conjectured from their deriving their surname from the river on which they had their mansion. An epitaph on one of their tombs affirms that the family held their lands of Troughend, which are situated on the Reed, nearly opposite to Otterburn, for the incredible space of nine hundred years.

*And near the spot that gave me name,
The moated mound of Risingham,
Where Reed upon her margin sees
Sweet Woodburne's cottages and trees,
Some ancient sculptor's art has shown
An outlaw's image on the stone.—P. 458.*

Risingham, upon the river Reed, near the beautiful hamlet of Woodburn, is an ancient Roman station, formerly called Habitancum. Camden says that in his time the popular account bore that it had been the abode of a deity, or giant, called Mogon; and appeals, in support of this tradition, as well as to the etymology of Risingham, or Reisenham, which signifies, in German, “the habitation of the giants,” to two Roman altars taken out of the river, inscribed, DEO MOGONTI CADENORUM. About half a mile distant from Risingham, upon an eminence covered with scattered birch-trees and fragments of rock, there is cut upon a large rock, in alto relievo, a remarkable figure, called Robin of Risingham, or Robin of Reedsdale. It presents a hunter, with his bow raised in one hand, and in the other what seems to be a hare. There is a quiver at the back of the figure, and he is dressed in a long coat, or kirtle, coming down to the knees, and meeting close, with a girdle bound round him. Dr. Horsley, who saw all monuments of antiquity with Roman eyes, inclines to think this figure a Roman archer; and certainly the bow is rather of the ancient size than of that which was so formidable in the hand of the English archers of the Middle Ages. But the rudeness of the whole figure prevents our founding strongly upon mere inaccuracy of proportion. The popular tradition is that it represents a giant, whose brother resided at Woodburn, and he himself at Risingham. It adds that they subsisted by hunting, and that one of them, finding the game become too scarce to support them, poisoned his companion, in whose memory the monument was engraved. What strange and tragic circumstance may be concealed under this legend, or whether it is utterly apocryphal, it is now impossible to discover.

NOTE 10.

*.....Do thou revere
The statutes of the Bucanier.—P. 458.*

The “statutes of the Bucaniers” were, in reality, more equitable than could have been expected from the state of society under which they had been formed. They chiefly related, as may readily be conjectured, to the distribution and the inheritance of their plunder.

When the expedition was completed, the fund of prize-money acquired was thrown together, each party taking his oath that he had retained or concealed no part of the common stock. If any one transgressed in this important particular, the punishment was his being set ashore on some desert key or island, to shift for himself as he could. The owners of the vessel had then their share assigned for the expenses of the outfit.

These were generally old pirates, settled at Tobago, Jamaica, St. Domingo, or some other French or English settlement. The surgeon's and carpenter's salaries, with the price of provisions and ammunition, were also defrayed. Then followed the compensation due to the maimed and wounded, rated according to the damage they had sustained—as six hundred pieces of eight, or six slaves, for the loss of an arm or leg, and so in proportion.

“After this act of justice and humanity, the remainder of the booty was divided into as many shares as there were Bucaniers. The commander could only lay claim to a single share, as the rest, but they complimented him with two or three, in proportion as he had acquitted himself to their satisfaction. When the vessel was not the property of the whole company, the persons who had fitted it out, and furnished it with necessary arms and ammunition, were entitled to a third of all the prizes. Favour had never any influence in the division of the booty, for every share was determined by lot. Instances of such rigid justice as this are not easily met with, and they extended even to the dead. Their share was given to the man who was known to be their companion when alive, and therefore their heir. If the person who had been killed had no intimate, his part was sent to his relations, when they were known. If there were no friends or relations, it was distributed in charity to the poor and to churches, which were to pray for the person in whose name these benefactions were given, the fruits of inhuman but necessary piratical plunder.”—RAYNAL'S History of European Settlements in the East and West Indies, by Justamond. Lond. 1776, 8vo, iii. p. 41.

NOTE II.

The course of Tees.—P. 467.

The view from Barnard Castle commands the rich and magnificent valley of Tees. Immediately adjacent to the river the banks are very thickly wooded; at a little distance they are more open and cultivated, but, being interspersed with hedgerows, and with isolated trees of great size and age, they still retain the richness of woodland scenery. The river itself flows in a deep trench of solid rock, chiefly limestone and marble. The finest view of its romantic course is from a handsome modern bridge over the Tees, built by the late Mr. Morritt of Rokeby. In Leland's time, the marble quarries seem to have been of some value. “Hard under the cliff by Egliston is found on each side of these very fair marble, wont to be taken up both by marblers of Barnard Castle and of Egliston, and partly to have been wrought by them, and partly sold onwrought to others.”—Itinerary. Oxford, 1768, 8vo, p. 88.

NOTE 12.

Egliston's grey ruins.—P. 469.

The ruins of this abbey, or priory (for Tanner calls it the former, and Leland the latter), are beautifully situated upon the angle formed by a little dell called Thorsgill, at its junction with the Tees. Egliston was dedicated to St. Mary and St. John the Baptist, and is supposed to have been founded by Ralph de Multon about the end of Henry the Second's reign. There were formerly the tombs of the families of Rokeby, Bowes, and Fitz-Hugh.

.....the mount
*Raised by that Legion long renowned,
 Whose votive shrine asserts their claim
 Of pious, faithful, conquering fame.*—P. 470.

Close behind the George Inn at Greta Bridge there is a well-preserved Roman encampment, surrounded with a triple ditch, lying between the river Greta and a brook called the Tutta. The four entrances are easily to be discerned. Very many Roman altars and monuments have been found in the vicinity, most of which are preserved at Rokeby by my friend Mr. Morritt.

NOTE 14.

Rokeby's turret, high.—P. 470.

This ancient manor long gave name to a family by whom it is said to have been possessed from the Conquest downward, and who are at different times distinguished in history. It was the Baron of Rokeby who finally defeated the insurrection of the Earl of Northumberland, in the reign of Henry IV. The Rokeby or Rokesby family continued to be distinguished until the great Civil War, when, having embraced the cause of Charles I., they suffered severely by fines and confiscations. The estate then passed from its ancient possessors to the family of the Robinsons, from whom it was purchased by the father of my valued friend, the present proprietor.

NOTE 15.

*A stern and lone, yet lovely road,
 As e'er the foot of minstrel trode!*—P. 471.

What follows is an attempt to describe the romantic glen, or rather ravine, through which the Greta finds a passage between Rokeby and Morham; the former situated upon the left bank of Greta, the latter on the right bank, about half a mile nearer to its junction with the Tees. The river runs with great rapidity over a bed of solid rock, broken by many shelving descents, down which the stream dashes with great noise and impetuosity, vindicating its etymology, which has been derived from the Gothic gridan, "to clamour."

NOTE 16.

How whistle rash bids tempests roar.—P. 474.

That this is a general superstition is well known to all who have been on shipboard, or who have conversed with seamen. The most formidable whistler that I remember to have met with was the apparition of a certain Mrs. Leakey, who, about 1636, resided, we are told, at Mynehead, in Somerset, where her only son drove a considerable trade between that port and Waterford, and was owner of several vessels. This old gentlewoman was of a social disposition, and so acceptable to her friends, that they used to say to her and to each other it were a pity such an excellent good-natured old lady should die; to which she was wont to reply, that whatever pleasure they might find in her company just now, they would not greatly like to see or converse with her after death, which nevertheless she was apt to think might happen. Accordingly, after her death and funeral, she began to appear to various persons by night and by noonday, in her own house, in the town and fields, at sea and upon shore. So far had she departed from her former urbanity, that she is recorded to have kicked a doctor of medicine for his impolite negligence in omitting to hand her over a stile. It was also her humour to appear upon the quay, and call for a boat. But especially, as soon as any of her son's ships approached the harbour, "this ghost would appear in the same garb and likeness as when she was alive, and, standing at the mainmast, would blow with a whistle, and though it were never so great a calm, yet immediately there would arise a most dreadful storm, that would break, wreck, and drown ship and goods." When she had thus proceeded until her son had neither cash to freight a vessel, nor could have procured men to sail in it, she began to attack the persons of his family, and actually strangled their only child in the cradle. The rest of her story, showing how the spectre looked over the shoulder of her daughter-in-law while dressing her hair in the looking-glass, and how Mrs. Leakey the younger took courage to address her, and how the beldame dispatched her to an Irish prelate, famous for his crimes and misfortunes, to exhort him to repentance, and to apprise him that otherwise he would be hanged, and how the bishop was satisfied with replying that if he was born to be hanged, he should not be drowned;—all these, with many more particulars, may be found at the end of one of John Dunton's publications, called "Athenianism," London, 1710, where the tale is engrossed under the title of The Apparition Evidence.

NOTE 17.

Of Eric's cap and Elmo's light.—P. 474.

"This Ericus, King of Sweden, in his time was held second to none in the magical art; and he was so familiar with the evil spirits, which he exceedingly adored, that which way soever he turned his cap, the wind would presently blow that way. From this occasion he was called Windy Cap; and many men believed that Regnerus, King of Denmark, by the conduct of this Ericus, who was his nephew, did happily extend his piracy into the most remote parts of the earth, and conquered many countries and fenced cities by his cunning, and at last was his coadjutor; that by the consent of the nobles, he should be chosen King of Sweden, which continued a long time with him very happily, until he died of old age."—OLAUS.

NOTE 18.

The Demon Frigate.—P. 474.

This is an allusion to a well-known nautical superstition concerning a fantastic vessel, called by sailors the Flying Dutchman, and supposed to be seen about the latitude of the Cape of Good Hope. She is distinguished from earthly vessels by bearing a press of sail when all others are unable, from stress of weather, to show an inch of canvas. The cause of her wandering is not altogether certain, but the general account is that she was originally a vessel loaded with great wealth, on board of which some horrid act of murder and piracy had been committed; that the plague broke out among the wicked crew who had perpetrated the crime, and that they sailed in vain from port to port, offering, as the price of shelter, the whole of their ill-gotten wealth; that they were excluded from every harbour, for fear of the contagion which was devouring them; and that, as a punishment of their crimes, the apparition of the ship still continues to haunt those seas in which the catastrophe took place, and is considered by the mariners as the worst of all possible omens.

NOTE 19.

By some desert isle or key.—P. 474.

What contributed much to the security of the Bucaniers about the Windward Islands was the great number of little islets, called in that country keys. These are small sandy patches, appearing just above the surface of the ocean, covered only with a few bushes and weeds, but sometimes affording springs of water, and, in general, much frequented by turtle. Such little uninhabited spots afforded the pirates good harbours, either for refitting or for the purpose of ambush; they were occasionally the hiding-place of their treasure, and often afforded a shelter to themselves. As many of the atrocities which they practised on their prisoners were committed in such spots, there are some of these keys which even now have an indifferent reputation among seamen, and where they are with difficulty prevailed on to remain ashore at night, on account of the visionary terrors incident to places which have been thus contaminated.

NOTE 20.

Before the gate of Mortham stood.—P. 477.

The castle of Mortham, which Leland terms “Mr. Rokesby’s Place, in ripa citer.,” scant a quarter of a mile from Greta Bridge, and not a quarter of a mile beneath into Tees,” is a picturesque tower, surrounded by buildings of different ages, now converted into a farmhouse and offices.

The situation is eminently beautiful, occupying a high bank, at the bottom of which the Greta winds out of the dark, narrow, and romantic dell which the text has attempted to describe, and flows onward through a more open valley to meet the Tees about a quarter of a mile from the castle. Mortham is surrounded by old trees, happily and widely grouped with Mr. Morritt’s new plantations.

NOTE 21.

*There dig and tomb your precious heap,
And bid the dead your treasure keep.*—P. 478.

If time did not permit the Bucaniers to lavish away their plunder in their usual debaucheries, they were wont to hide it, with many superstitious solemnities, in the desert islands and keys which they frequented, and where much treasure, whose lawless owners perished without reclaiming it, is still supposed to be concealed. The most cruel of mankind are often the most superstitious, and these pirates are said to have had recourse to a horrid ritual in order to secure an unearthly guardian to their treasures. They killed a Negro or Spaniard, and buried him with the treasure, believing that his spirit would haunt the spot and terrify away all intruders. I cannot produce any other authority on which this custom is ascribed to them than that of maritime tradition, which is, however, amply sufficient for the purposes of poetry.

NOTE 22.

The power.....

* * * * *

*That unsubdued and lurking lies
To take the felon by surprise,
And force him, as by magic spell,
In his despite his guilt to tell.—P. 479.*

All who are conversant with the administration of criminal justice must remember many occasions in which malefactors appear to have conducted themselves with a species of infatuation, either by making unnecessary confidences respecting their guilt, or by sudden and involuntary allusions to circumstances by which it could not fail to be exposed. A remarkable instance occurred in the celebrated case of Eugene Aram. A skeleton being found near Knaresborough, was supposed, by the persons who gathered around the spot, to be the remains of one Clarke, who had disappeared some years before, under circumstances leading to a suspicion of his having been murdered. One Houseman, who had mingled in the crowd, suddenly said, while looking at the skeleton, and hearing the opinion which was buzzed around, "That is no more Dan Clarke's bone than it is mine!"—a sentiment expressed so positively, and with such peculiarity of manner, as to lead all who heard him to infer that he must necessarily know where the real body had been interred. Accordingly, being apprehended, he confessed having assisted Eugene Aram to murder Clarke, and to hide his body in Saint Robert's Cave. It happened to the author himself, while conversing with a person accused of an atrocious crime, for the purpose of rendering him professional assistance upon his trial, to hear the prisoner, after the most solemn and reiterated protestations that he was guiltless, suddenly, and, as it were, involuntarily, in the course of his communications, make such an admission as was altogether incompatible with innocence.

NOTE 23.

Brackenbury's dismal tower.—P. 484.

This tower has been already mentioned. It is situated near the north-eastern extremity of the wall which encloses Barnard Castle, and is traditionally said to have been the prison. By an odd coincidence, it bears a name which we naturally connect with imprisonment, from its being that of Sir Robert Brackenbury, lieutenant of the Tower of London under Edward IV. and Richard III. There is indeed some reason to conclude that the tower may actually have derived the name from that family, for Sir Robert Brackenbury himself possessed considerable property not far from Barnard Castle.

After the battle of Marston Moor, the Earl of Newcastle retired beyond sea in disgust, and many of his followers laid down their arms, and made the best composition they could with the Committees of Parliament. Fines were imposed upon them in proportion to their estates and degrees of delinquency, and these fines were often bestowed upon such persons as had deserved well of the Commons. In some circumstances it happened that the oppressed cavaliers were fain to form family alliances with some powerful person among the triumphant party.

The patience, abstinence, and ingenuity exerted by the North American Indians, when in pursuit of plunder and vengeance, is the most distinguished feature in their character, and the activity and address which they display in their retreat is equally surprising.

NOTE 26:

*In Redesdale his youth had heard
 Each art her wily dalesmen dared,
 When Rookens-edge and Redswair high
 To bugle rung and bloodhound's cry.*—P. 487.

“What manner of cattle-stealers they are that inhabit these valleys in the marches of both kingdoms, John Lesley, a Scotche man himself, and Bishop of Ross, will inform you. They sally out of their own borders in the night, in troops, through unfrequented byways and many intricate windings. All the daytime they refresh themselves and their horses in lurking holes they had pitched upon before, till they arrive in the dark in those places they have a design upon. As soon as they have seized upon the booty, they, in like manner, return home in the night, through blind ways, and fetching many a compass. The more skillful any captain is to pass through those wild deserts, crooked turnings, and deep precipices, in the thickest mists, his reputation is the greater, and he is looked upon as a man of an excellent head. And they are so very cunning that they seldom have their booty taken from them, unless sometimes when, by the help of bloodhounds following them exactly upon the track, they may chance to fall into the hands of their adversaries. When being taken, they have so much persuasive eloquence, and so many smooth, insinuating words at command, that if they do not move their judges, nay, and even their adversaries (notwithstanding the severity of their natures), to have mercy, yet they incite them to admiration and compassion."—CAMDEN'S Britannia.

The inhabitants of the valleys of Tyne and Reed were, in ancient times, so inordinately addicted to these depredations, that in 1564 the Incorporated Merchant Adventurers of Newcastle made a law that none born in these districts should be admitted apprentice. The inhabitants are stated to be so generally addicted to rapine, that no faith should be reposed in those proceeding from "such lewde and wicked progenitors." This regulation continued to stand unrepealed until 1771. A beggar, in an old play, describes himself as "born in Redesdale; in Northumberland, and come of a wight-riding surname, called the Robsons, good honest men and true, saving a little shifting for their living, God help them!"—a description which would have applied to most Borderers on both sides.

Reidswair, famed for a skirmish to which it gives name (see "Border Minstrelsy," vol. ii. p. 15), is on the very edge of the Carter Fell, which divides England from Scotland. The Rookan is a place upon Reedwater. Bertram, being described as a native of these dales, where the habits of hostile depredation long survived the union of the crowns, may have been, in some degree, prepared by education for the exercise of a similar trade in the wars of the Bucaniers.

After one of the recent battles, in which the Irish rebels were defeated, one of their most active leaders was found in a bog, in which he was immersed up to the shoulders, while his head was concealed by an impending ledge of turf. Being detected and seized, notwithstanding his precaution, he became solicitous to know how his retreat had been discovered. "I caught," answered the Sutherland Highlander, by whom he was taken, "the sparkle of your eye." Those who are accustomed to mark hares upon their form usually discover them by the same circumstance.

*Of my marauding on the downs
Of Calverley and Brauford downs.*—P. 494.

The troops of the king, when they first took the field, were as well disciplined as could be expected from circumstances. But as the circumstances of Charles became less favourable, and his funds for regularly paying his forces decreased, habits of military license prevailed among them in greater excess. Lacy the player, who served his master during the Civil War, brought out, after the Restoration, a piece called The Old Troop, in which he seems to have commemorated some real incidents which occurred in his military career. The names of the officers of the Troop sufficiently express their habits. We have Fleasint Plundermaster-General, Captain Ferret-farm, and Quartermaster Burndrop. The officers of the Troop are in league with these worthies, and connive at their plundering the country for a suitable share in the booty. All this was undoubtedly drawn from the life, which Lacy had an opportunity to study. The moral of the whole is comprehended in a rebuke given to the lieutenant, whose disorders in the country are said to prejudice the king's cause more than his courage in the field could recompense. The piece is by no means void of farcical humour.

The banks of the Greta, below Rutherford Bridge, abound in seams of greyish slate, which are wrought in some places to a very great depth under ground, thus forming artificial caverns, which, when the seam has been exhausted, are gradually hidden by the underwood which grows in profusion upon the romantic banks of the river. In times of public confusion they might be well adapted to the purposes of banditti.

When Spain waged warfare with our land. —P. 500.

There was a short war with Spain in 1625-6, which will be found to agree pretty well with the chronology of the poem. But probably Bertram held an opinion very common among the maritime heroes of the age, that "there was no peace beyond the Line." The Spanish guarda-costas were constantly employed in aggressions upon the trade and settlements of the English and French; and, by their own severities, gave room for the system of bucaniering, at first adopted in self-defence and retaliation, and afterwards persevered in from habit and thirst of plunder.

Our comrades' strife. —P. 502.

The laws of the Bucaniers, and their successors the Pirates, however severe and equitable, were, like other laws, often set aside by the stronger party. Their quarrels about the division of the spoil fill their history, and they as frequently arose out of mere frolic, or the tyrannical humour of their chiefs. An anecdote of Teach (called Blackbeard) shows that their habitual indifference for human life extended to their companions, as well as to their enemies and captives:—

"One night, drinking in his cabin with Hands, the pilot, and another man, Blackbeard, without any provocation, privately draws out a small pair of pistols, and cocks them under the table, which being perceived by the man, he withdrew upon deck, leaving Hands, the pilot, and the captain together. When the pistols were ready, he blew out the candles, and, crossing his hands, discharged them at his company. Hands, the master, was shot through the knee, and lamed for life; the other pistol did no execution."—JOHNSON'S History of Pirates. Lond. 1733, 8vo, vol. i. p. 381.

NOTE 33.

Song—"Adieu for evermore."—P. 506.

The last verse of this song is taken from the fragment of an old Scottish ballad, of which I only recollected two verses when the first edition of Rokeby was published. Mr. Thomas Sheridan kindly pointed out to me an entire copy of this beautiful song, which seems to express the fortunes of some followers of the Stuart family:—

"It was a' for our rightful king
That we left fair Scotland's strand,
It was a' for our rightful king
That we o'er saw Irish land,
My dear,
That we e'er saw Irish land.

"Now a' is done that man can do,
And a' is done in vain!
My love! my native land, adieu!
For I must cross the main,
My dear,
For I must cross the main.

"He turned him round and right about,
All on the Irish shore;
He gave his bridle-reins a shake,
With, Adieu for evermore,
My dear!
Adieu for evermore!

"The soldier frae the war returns,
And the merchant frae the main,
But I hae parted wi' my love,
And ne'er to meet again,
My dear,
And ne'er to meet again.

"When day is gone and night is come,
And a' are boun to sleep;
I think on him that's far awa'
The lee-lang night, and weep,
My dear,
The lee-lang night, and weep."

NOTE 34.

The Baron of Ravensworth.—P. 507.

The ruins of Ravensworth Castle stand in the North Riding of Yorkshire, about three miles from the town of Richmond, and adjoining to the waste called the Forest of Arkingarth. It belonged originally to the powerful family of Fitz-Hugh, from whom it passed to the Lords Dacre of the South.

NOTE 35.

Rere-cross on Stanmore.—P. 507.

This is a fragment of an old cross, with its pediment, surrounded by an intrenchment, upon the very summit of the waste ridge of Stanmore, near a small house of entertainment. The situation of the cross, and the pains taken to defend it, seem to indicate that it was intended for a landmark of importance.

NOTE 36.

Hast thou lodged our deer?—P. 508.

The duty of the ranger, or pricker, was first to lodge or harbour the deer—that is, to discover his retreat—and then to make his report to his prince or master.

NOTE 37.

*When Denmark's Raven soared on high
Triumphant through Northumbrian sky,
Till, hovering near, her fatal croak
Bade Reged's Britons dread the yoke.*—P. 508.

About the year of God 866, the Danes, under their celebrated leaders Inguar (more properly Agnar), and Hubba, sons, it is said, of the still more celebrated Regnar Lodbrog, invaded Northumberland, bringing with them the magical standard, so often mentioned in poetry, called REAFEN, or Rumfan, from its bearing the figure of a raven:—

“Wrought by the sisters of the Danish king,
Of furious Ivar in a midnight hour:
While the sick moon, at their enchanted song,
Wrapt in pale tempest, laboured through the clouds,
The demons of destruction then, they say,
Were all abroad, and mixing with the woof
Their baleful power: the sisters ever sung,
‘Shake, standard, shake this ruin on our foes.’”

THOMSON and MALLETT'S Alfred.

The Danes renewed and extended their incursions, and began to colonize, establishing a kind of capital at York, from which they spread their conquests and incursions in every direction. Stanmore, which divides the mountains of Westmorland and Cumberland, was probably the boundary of the Danish kingdom in that direction. The district to the west, known in ancient British history by the name of Reged, had never been conquered by the Saxons, and continued to maintain a precarious independence until it was ceded to Malcolm, King of Scots, by William the Conqueror, probably on account of its similarity in language and manners to the neighbouring British kingdom of Strath-Clyde.

Upon the extent and duration of the Danish sovereignty in Northumberland, the curious may consult the various authorities quoted in the Gesta et Vestigia Danorum extra Daniam, tom. ii. p. 40. The most powerful of their Northumbrian leaders seems to have been Ivar, called, from the extent of his conquests, Widfam, that is, The Strider.

NOTE 38.

Thundering o'er Caldron and High-Force.—P. 508.

The Tees rises about the skirts of Cross Fell, and falls over the cataracts named in the text before it leaves the mountains which divide the North Riding from Cumberland. High-Force is seventy-five feet in height.

NOTE 39.

*Beneath the shade the Northmen came,
Fixed on each vale a Runic name.*—P. 508.

The heathen Danes have left several traces of their religion in the upper part of Teesdale. Balder-garth, which derives its name from the unfortunate son of Odin, is a tract of waste land on the very ridge of Stanmore, and a brook, which falls into the Tees near Barnard Castle, is named after the same deity. A field upon the banks of the Tees is also termed Wooden-croft, from the supreme deity of the Edda. Thors-gill, of which a description is attempted in stanza ii., is a beautiful little brook and dell, running up behind the ruins of Egliston Abbey. Thor was the Hercules of the Scandinavian mythology.

NOTE 40.

*Who has not heard how brave O'Neale
In English blood imbrued his steel?*—P. 512.

The O'Neale here meant, for more than one succeeded to the chieftainship during the reign of Elizabeth, was Hugh, the grandson of Con O'Neale, called Con Bacco, or the Lame. His father, Matthew O'Kelly, was illegitimate, and, being the son of a blacksmith's wife, was usually called Matthew the Blacksmith. His father, nevertheless, destined his succession to him; and he was created, by Elizabeth, Baron of Dungannon. Upon the death of Con Bacco, this Matthew was slain by his brother. Hugh narrowly escaped the same fate, and was protected by the English. Shane O'Neale, his uncle, called Shane-Dymas, was succeeded by Turlough Lynogh O'Neale; after whose death Hugh, having assumed the chieftainship, became nearly as formidable to the English as any by whom it had been possessed. He rebelled repeatedly, and as often made submissions, of which it was usually a condition that he should not any longer assume the title of O'Neale, in lieu of which he was created Earl of Tyrone. But this condition he never observed longer than until the pressure of superior force was withdrawn. His baffling the gallant Earl of Essex in the field, and overreaching him in a treaty, was the induction to that nobleman's tragedy. Lord Mountjoy succeeded in finally subjugating O'Neale; but it was not till the succession of James, to whom he made personal submission, and was received with civility at court.

NOTE 41.

*But chief arose his victor pride,
When that brave Marshal fought and died.*—P. 512.

The chief victory which Tyrone obtained over the English was in a battle fought near Blackwater, while he besieged a fort garrisoned by the English which commanded the passes into his country.

Tyrone is said to have entertained a personal animosity against the knight-marshal, Sir Henry Bagnal, whom he accused of detaining the letters which he sent to Queen Elizabeth explanatory of his conduct, and offering terms of submission. The river, called by the English Blackwater, is termed, in Irish, Avon-Duff, which has the same signification. Both names are mentioned by Spenser in his "Marriage of the Thames and the Medway." But I understand that his verses relate not to the Blackwater of Ulster, but to a river of the same name in the south of Ireland:—

"Swift Avon-Duff, which of the Englishmen
Is called Blackwater."

NOTE 42.

The Tanist he to great O'Neale.—P. 512.

"Eudox. What is that which you call Tanist and Tanistry? These be names and terms never heard of nor known to us.

"Iren. It is a custom amongst all the Irish, that presently after the death of one of their chiefe lords or captaines, they doe presently assemble themselves to a place generally appointed and knowne unto them, to choose another in his stead, where they do nominate and elect, for the most part not the eldest sonne, nor any of the children of the lord deceased, but the next to him in blood, that is, the eldest and worthiest, as commonly the next brother unto him, if he have any, or the next cousin, or so forth, as any is elder in that kindred or sept; and then next to them doe they choose the next of the blood to be Tanist, who shall next succeed him in the said captainry, if he live thereunto.

"Eudox. Do they not use any ceremony in this election, for all barbarous nations are commonly great observers of ceremonies and superstitious rites?

"Iren. They use to place him that shall be their captaine upon a stone, always reserved to that purpose, and placed commonly upon a hill. In some of which I have seen formed and engraven a foot, which they say was the measure of their first captaine's foot; whereon he standing, receives an oath to preserve all the ancient former customes of the countrey inviolable, and to deliver up the succession peaceably to his Tanist, and then hath a wand delivered unto him by some whose proper office that is; after which, descending from the stone, he turneth himself round, thrice forwards and thrice backwards.

"Eudox. But how is the Tanist chosen?

"Iren. They say he setteth but one foot upon the stone, and receiveth

the like oath that the captain did."—SPENSER'S View of the State of Ireland, apud Works. Lond. 1805, 8vo, vol. viii. p. 306.

The Tanist, therefore, of O'Neale was the heir-apparent of his power. This kind of succession appears also to have regulated, in very remote times, the succession to the crown of Scotland. It would have been imprudent, if not impossible, to have asserted a minor's right of succession in those stormy days, when the principles of policy were summed up in my friend Mr. Wordsworth's lines:—

"...the good old rule;
Sufficeth them; the simple plan,
That they should take who have the power,
And they should keep who can."

NOTE 43.

His plaited hair in elf-locks spread.—P. 513.

The ancient Irish dress was (the bonnet excepted) very similar to that of the Scottish Highlanders. The want of a covering on the head was supplied by the mode of plaiting and arranging their hair, which was called the glibbe.

NOTE 44.

*With wild majestic port and tone,
Like envoy of some barbarous throne.*—P. 513.

The Irish chiefs, in their intercourse with the English, and with each other, were wont to assume the language and style of independent royalty.

NOTE 45.

His foster-father was his guide.—P. 515.

There was no tie more sacred among the Irish than that which connected the foster-father, as well as the nurse herself, with the child they brought up.

NOTE 46.

Great Nial of the Pledges Nine.—P. 518.

Neal Naighvallach, or Of the Nine Hostages, is said to have been Monarch of all Ireland during the end of the fourth or beginning of the fifth century. He exercised a predatory warfare on the coast of England and of Bretagne, or Armorica; and from the latter country brought off the celebrated Saint Patrick, a youth of sixteen, among other captives, whom he transported to Ireland. Neal derived his epithet from nine nations or tribes, whom he held under his subjection, and from whom he took hostages.

NOTE 47.

Shane-Dymas wild.—P. 518.

This Shane-Dymas, or John the Wanton, held the title and power of O'Neale in the earlier part of Elizabeth's reign, against whom he rebelled repeatedly.

"This chieftain is handed down to us as the most proud and profligate

man on earth. He was immoderately addicted to women and wine. He is said to have had 200 tuns of wine at once in his cellar at Dandram, but usquebaugh was his favourite liquor. He spared neither age nor condition of the fair sex. Although so illiterate that he could not write, he was not destitute of address, his understanding was strong, and his courage daring. He had 600 men for his guard; 4000 foot, 1000 horse for the field. He claimed superiority over all the lords of Ulster, and called himself king thereof."—CAMDEN.

When reduced to extremity by the English, and forsaken by his allies, this Shane-Dymas fled to Clandeboy, then occupied by a colony of Scottish Highlanders of the family of MacDonell. He was at first courteously received; but by degrees they began to quarrel about the slaughter of some of their friends whom Shane-Dymas had put to death, and advancing from words to deeds, fell upon him with their broadswords and cut him to pieces. After his death a law was made that none should presume to take the name and title of O'Neale.

NOTE 48.

Geraldine.—P. 518.

The O'Neales were closely allied with this powerful and warlike family, for Henry Owen O'Neale married the daughter of Thomas Earl of Kildare, and their son Con More married his cousin-german, a daughter of Gerald Earl of Kildare. This Con More cursed any of his posterity who should learn the English language, sow corn, or build houses, so as to invite the English to settle in their country. Others ascribe this anathema to his son Con Bacco. Fearflatha O'Gnive, bard to the O'Neales of Clannaboy, complains in the same spirit of the towers and ramparts with which the strangers had disfigured the fair sporting fields of Erin. See Walker's "Irish Bards," p. 140.

NOTE 49.

.....his page, the next degree,
In that old time, to chivalry.—P. 519.

Originally, the order of chivalry embraced three ranks—(1) the Page, (2) the Squire, (3) the Knight—a gradation which seems to have been imitated in the mystery of freemasonry. But before the reign of Charles I. the custom of serving as a squire had fallen into disuse, though the order of the page was still, to a certain degree, in observance. This state of servitude was so far from inferring anything degrading, that it was considered as the regular school for acquiring every quality necessary for future distinction.

NOTE 50.

Seemed half abandoned to decay.—P. 531.

The ancient castle of Rokeby stood exactly upon the site of the present mansion, by which a part of its walls is enclosed. It is surrounded by a profusion of fine wood, and the park in which it stands is adorned by the junction of the Greta and of the Tees. The title of Baron Rokeby of Armagh was, in 1777, conferred on the Right Reverend Richard Robinson, Primate of Ireland, descended of the Robinsons, formerly of Rokeby, in Yorkshire.

NOTE 51.

The Felon Sow.—P. 536.

The ancient minstrels had a comic as well as a serious strain of romance; and although the examples of the latter are by far the most numerous, they are, perhaps, the less valuable. The comic romance was a sort of parody upon the usual subjects of minstrel poetry. If the latter described deeds of heroic achievement, and the events of the battle, the tourney, and the chase, the former, as in the Tournament of Tottenham, introduced a set of clowns debating in the field, with all the assumed circumstances of chivalry. One of the very best of these mock romances, and which has no small portion of comic humour, is the Hunting of the Felon Sow of Rokeby by the Friars of Richmond.

NOTE 52.

The Filea of O'Neale was he.—P. 537.

The Filea, or Ollamh Re Dan, was the proper bard, or, as the name literally implies, poet. Each chieftain of distinction had one or more in his service, whose office was usually hereditary. The late ingenious Mr. Cooper Walker has assembled a curious collection of particulars concerning this order of men, in his "Historical Memoirs of the Irish Bards." There were itinerant bards of less elevated rank, but all were held in the highest veneration.

NOTE 53.

*Ah, Clandeboy! thy friendly floor
Slieve-Donard's oak shall light no more.*—P. 537.

Clandeboy is a district of Ulster, formerly possessed by the sept of the O'Neales, and Slieve-Donard is a romantic mountain in the same province. The clan was ruined after Tyrone's great rebellion, and their places of abode laid desolate. The ancient Irish, wild and uncultivated in other respects, did not yield even to their descendants in practising the most free and extended hospitality.

The ancient English minstrel's dress.—P. 542.

Among the entertainments presented to Elizabeth at Kenilworth Castle was the introduction of a person designed to represent a travelling minstrel, who entertained her with a solemn story out of the Acts of King Arthur. Of this person's dress and appearance Mr. Laneham has given us a very accurate account, transferred by Bishop Percy to the preliminary Dissertation on Minstrels, prefixed to The Reliques of Ancient Poetry, vol. i.

NOTE 58.

O'er Hexham's altar hung my glove.—P. 573.

This custom among the Redesdale and Tynedale Borderers is mentioned in the interesting "Life of Barnard Gilpin":—

"It happened that a quarrel of this kind was on foot when Mr. Gilpin was at Rothbury, in those parts. During the two or three first days of his preaching, the contending parties observed some decorum, and never appeared at church together. At length, however, they met. One party had been early at church, and just as Mr. Gilpin began his sermon the other entered. They stood not long silent. Inflamed at the sight of each other, they began to clash their weapons, for they were all armed with javelins and swords, and mutually approached. Awed, however, by the sacredness of the place, the tumult in some degree ceased. Mr. Gilpin proceeded, when again the combatants began to brandish their weapons, and draw towards each other. As a fray seemed near, Mr. Gilpin stepped from the pulpit, went between them, and addressed the leaders, put an end to the quarrel, for the present but could not effect an entire reconciliation. They promised him, however, that till the sermon was over they would make no more disturbance. He then went again into the pulpit, and spent the rest of the time in endeavouring to make them ashamed of what they had done. His behaviour and discourse affected them so much that, at his further entreaty, they promised to forbear all acts of hostility while he continued in the country. And so much respected was he among them, that whoever was in fear of his enemy used to resort where Mr. Gilpin was, esteeming his presence the best protection.

"One Sunday morning, coming to a church in those parts before the people were assembled, he observed a glove hanging up, and was informed by the sexton that it was meant as a challenge to any one who should take it down. Mr. Gilpin ordered the sexton to reach it to him; but upon his utterly refusing to touch it, he took it down himself, and put it into his breast. When the people were assembled, he went into the pulpit, and, before he concluded his sermon, took occasion to rebuke them severely for these inhuman challenges. 'I hear,' saith he, 'that one among you hath hanged up a glove, even in this sacred place, threatening to fight any one who taketh it down; see, I have taken it down,' and pulling out the glove, he held it up to the congregation, and then showed them how unsuitable such savage practices were to the profession of Christianity, using such persuasives to mutual love as he thought would most affect them."—Life of Barnard Gilpin. NOTES TO THE BRIDAL OF TRIERMAIN.

NOTE 1.

The Baron of Triermain.—P. 593.

TRIERMAIN was a fief of the Barony of Gilsland, in Cumberland. It was possessed by a Saxon family at the time of the Conquest, but, "after the death of Gilmore, Lord of Tryermaine and Torcrossock, Hubert Vaux gave Tryermaine and Torcrossock to his second son, Ranulph Vaux; which Ranulph afterwards became heir to his elder brother Robert, the founder of Lanercost, who died without issue. Ranulph, being Lord of all Gilsland, gave Gilmore's lands to his younger son, named Roland, and let the Barony descend to his eldest son Robert, son of Ranulph. Ronald had issue Alexander, and he Ranulph, after whom succeeded Robert, and they were named Rolands successively, that were lords thereof, until the reign of Edward the Fourth. That house gave for arms, vert, a bend dexter, chequy, or and gules."—BURNS'S Antiquities of Westmoreland and Cumberland, vol. ii. p. 482.

NOTE 2.

He passed red Penrith's Table Round.—P. 596.

A circular intrenchment, about half a mile from Penrith, is thus popularly termed. The circle within the ditch is about one hundred and sixty paces in circumference, with openings, or approaches, directly opposite to each other. As this ditch is on the inner side, it could not be intended for the purpose of defence, and it has reasonably been conjectured that the enclosure was designed for the solemn exercise of feats of chivalry, and the embankment around for the convenience of the spectators.

NOTE 3.

Mayburgh's mound.—P. 596.

Higher up the river Eamont than Arthur's Round Table is a prodigious enclosure of great antiquity, formed by a collection of stones upon the top of a gently-sloping hill, called Mayburgh. In the plain which it encloses there stands erect an unhewn stone of twelve feet in height. Two similar masses are said to have been destroyed during the memory of man. The whole appears to be a monument of Druidical times.

NOTE 4.

*Scattering a shower of fiery dew,
That burned and blighted where it fell.*—P. 610.

The author has an indistinct recollection of an adventure, somewhat similar to that which is here ascribed to King Arthur, having befallen one of the ancient Kings of Denmark. The horn in which the burning liquor was presented to that monarch is said still to be preserved in the Royal Museum at Copenhagen.

NOTE 5.

*The Monarch, breathless and amazed,
Back on the fatal castle gazed—
Nor tower nor donjon could he spy,
Darkening against the morning sky.*—P. 610.

“We now gained a view of the Vale of St. John's, a very narrow dell hemmed in by mountains, through which a small brook makes many meanderings, washing little enclosures of grass-ground which stretch up the rising of the hills. In the widest part of the dale you are struck with the appearance of an ancient ruined castle, which seems to stand upon the summit of a little mount, the mountains around forming an amphitheatre. The massive bulwark shows a front of various towers, and makes an awful, rude, and Gothic appearance, with its lofty turrets and rugged battlements; we traced the galleries, the bending arches, the buttresses. The greatest antiquity stands characterized in its architecture; the inhabitants near it assert it is an antediluvian structure.

“The traveller's curiosity is roused, and he prepares to make a nearer approach, when that curiosity is put upon the rack by his being assured that, if he advances, certain genii who govern the place, by virtue of their supernatural art and necromancy, will strip it of all its beauties, and by enchantment transform the magic walls. The vale seems adapted for the habitation of such beings; its gloomy recesses and retirements look like the haunts of evil spirits. There was no delusion in the report; we were soon convinced of its truth; for this piece of antiquity, so venerable and noble in its aspect, as we drew near, changed its figure, and proved no other than a shaken massive pile of rocks, which stand in the midst of this little vale, disunited from the adjoining mountains, and have so much the real form and resemblance of a castle that they bear the name of the Castle Rocks of St. John.”—HUTCHINSON'S Excursion to the Lakes, p. 121.

NOTE 6.

*The flower of Chivalry,
There Galaad sat with manly grace,
Yet maiden meekness in his face;
There Morolt of the iron mace,
And love-lorn Tristrem there.*—P. 612.

The characters named in the stanza are all of them more or less distinguished in the romances which treat of King Arthur and his Round

Table, and their names are strung together, according to the established custom of minstrels upon such occasions; for example, in the ballad of the Marriage of Sir Gawaine:—

“ Sir Lancelot, Sir Stephen bolde,
They rode with him that daye,
And foremost of the companye,
There rode the stewarde Kaye.

“ Soe did Sir Banier, and Sir Bore,
And eke Sir Garratte keen,
Sir Tristrem too, that gentle knight,
To the forest fresh and greene.”

NOTE 7.

*And Lancelot, that ever more
Looked stol'n-wise on the Queen.*—P. 612.

Upon this delicate subject hear Richard Robinson, citizen of London, in his “Assertion of King Arthur”:—“But as it is a thing sufficiently apparent that she [Guenever, wife of King Arthur] was beautiful, so it is a thing doubted whether she was chaste, yea or no. Truly, so far as I can with honestie, I would spare the impayred honour and fame of noble women. But yet the truth of the historie pluckes me by the eare, and willethe not onely but commandeth me to declare what the ancients have deemed of her. To wrestle or contend with so great authoritie were indeede unto me a controversie, and that greate.”—Assertion of King Arthure. Imprinted by John Wolfe, London, 1582.

NOTE 8.

*There were two who loved their neighbours' wives,
And one who loved his own.*—P. 615.

“In our forefathers' tyme, when Papistrie, as a standyng poole, covered and overflowed all England, fewe books were read in our tongue, saving certaine bookes of chevalrie, as they said, for pastime and pleasure; which, as some say, were made in the monasteries, by idle monks or wanton chanons. As one, for example, ‘La Morte d'Arthure,’ the whole pleasure of which book standeth in two speciall poynts, in open manslaughter and bold bawdrye; in which booke they be counted the noblest knightes that do kill most men without any quarrell, and commit foulest adouleries by sutlest shiftes—as Sir Launcelot, with the wife of King Arthur, his master; Sir Tristram, with the wife of King Marke, his uncle; Sir Lamerocke, with the wife of King Lote, that was his own aunt. This is good stuffe for wise men to laugh at, or honest men to take pleasure at; yet I know when God's Bible was banished the Court, and ‘La Morte d'Arthure’ received into the Prince's chamber.”—ASCHAM'S Schoolmaster.

NOTES TO THE LORD OF THE ISLES.

NOTE 1.

Thy rugged halls, Artornish! rung.—P. 660.

THE ruins of the Castle of Artornish are situated upon a promontory, on the Morven, or mainland side of the Sound of Mull, a name given to the deep arm of the sea which divides that island from the continent. The situation is wild and romantic in the highest degree, having on the one hand a high and precipitous chain of rocks overhanging the sea, and on the other the narrow entrance to the beautiful salt-water lake called Loch Alline, which is in many places finely fringed with copsewood. The ruins of Artornish are not now very considerable, and consist chiefly of the remains of an old keep, or tower, with fragments of outward defences. But, in former days, it was a place of great consequence, being one of the principal strongholds which the Lords of the Isles, during the period of their stormy independence, possessed upon the mainland of Argyleshire. It is almost opposite to the Bay of Aros, in the Island of Mull, where there was another castle, the occasional residence of the Lords of the Isles.

NOTE 2.

*Rude Heiskar's seal through surges dark
Will long pursue the minstrel's bark.—P. 661.*

The seal displays a taste for music which could scarcely be expected from his habits and local predilections. They will long follow a boat in which any musical instrument is played, and even a tune simply whistled has attractions for them. The Dean of the Isles says of Heiskar, a small uninhabited rock, about twelve (Scottish) miles from the Isle of Uist, that an infinite slaughter of seals takes place there.

NOTE 3.

*...a turret's airy head,
Slender and steep, and battled round,
O'erlooked, dark Mull! thy mighty Sound.—P. 664.*

The Sound of Mull, which divides that island from the continent of Scotland, is one of the most striking scenes which the Hebrides afford to the traveller. Sailing from Oban to Aros, or Tobermory, through a narrow channel, yet deep enough to bear vessels of the largest burden, he has on his left the bold and mountainous shores of Mull; on the right those of that district of Argyleshire called Morven, or Morvern, successively indented by deep salt-water lochs running up many miles inland. To the south-eastward arises a prodigious range of mountains, among which Cruachan-Ben is pre-eminent; and to the north-east is the no less huge and picturesque range of the Ardnamurchan hills. Many ruinous castles, situated generally upon cliffs overhanging the ocean, add interest to the scene. Those of Donolly and Dunstaffnage are first passed; then that of Duart, formerly belonging to the chief of the warlike and powerful sept of Macleans, and the scene of Miss Baillie's beautiful tragedy, entitled The Family Legend. Still passing on to the northward, Artornish and Aros become visible upon the opposite shores; and, lastly, Mingarry, and other ruins of less distinguished note. In fine weather, a grander and more impressive scene, both from its natural beauties and its associations with ancient history and tradition, can hardly be imagined. When the weather is rough, the passage is both difficult and dangerous from the narrowness of the channel, and in part from the number of inland lakes, out of which sally forth a number of conflicting and thwarting tides, making the navigation perilous to open boats. The sudden flaws and gusts of wind which issue, without a moment's warning, from the mountain glens are equally formidable. So that, in unsettled weather, a stranger, if not much accustomed to the sea, may sometimes add to the other sublime sensations excited by the scene that feeling of dignity which arises from a sense of danger.

NOTE 4.

*From whence Mingarry, sternly placed,
O'erawes the woodland and the waste.*—P. 664.

The Castle of Mingarry is situated on the sea-coast of the district of Ardnamurchan. The ruins, which are tolerably entire, are surrounded by a very high wall, forming a kind of polygon, for the purpose of adapting itself to the projecting angles of a precipice overhanging the sea, on which the castle stands. It was anciently the residence of the MacIans, a clan of MacDonalds, descended from Ian, or John, a grandson of Angus Og, Lord of the Isles. The last time that Mingarry was of military importance was when Allaster MacDonald, commonly called Colquitto, who commanded the Irish auxiliaries sent over by the Earl of Antrim during the great Civil War to the assistance of Montrose, began his enterprise, in 1644, by taking the Castles of Kinloch-Alline and Mingarry, the latter of which made considerable resistance, as might have been expected from the strength of its situation. In the meanwhile, Allaster MacDonald's ships which had brought him over were attacked in Loch Eisord, in Skye, by an armament sent round by the Covenanting Parliament, and his own vessel was taken. This circumstance is said chiefly to have induced him to continue in Scotland, where there seemed little prospect of raising an army on behalf of the king. He had no sooner moved eastward to join Montrose, a junction which he effected in the Braes of Athole, than the Marquis of Argyle besieged the Castle of Mingarry, but without success. Among other warriors and chiefs whom Argyle summoned to his camp to assist upon this occasion was John of Moidart, the captain of Clanronald. Clanronald appeared, but, far from yielding effectual assistance to Argyle, he took the opportunity of being in arms to lay waste the district of Sunart, then belonging to the adherents of Argyle, and sent part of the spoil to relieve the Castle of Mingarry. Thus the castle was maintained until relieved by Allaster MacDonald (Colquitto), who had been detached for the purpose by Montrose. These particulars are hardly worth mentioning, were they not connected with the memorable successes of Montrose, related by an eye-witness, and hitherto unknown to Scottish historians.

NOTE 5.

The heir of mighty Somerled.—P. 664.

Somerled was thane of Argyle and Lord of the Isles, about the middle of the twelfth century. He seems to have exercised his authority in both capacities, independent of the crown of Scotland, against which he often stood in hostility. He made various incursions upon the western lowlands during the reign of Malcolm IV., and seems to have made peace with him upon the terms of an independent prince, about the year 1157. In 1164 he resumed the war against Malcolm, and invaded Scotland with a large but probably a tumultuary army, collected in the isles, in the mainland of Argyleshire, and in the neighbouring provinces of Ireland. He was defeated and slain in an engagement with a very inferior force near Rensfrew. His son Gillicolane fell in the same battle. This mighty chieftain married a daughter of Olaus, King of Man. From him our genealogists deduce two dynasties, distinguished in the stormy history of the middle ages—the Lords of the Isles, descended from his elder son Ronald; and the Lords of Lorn, who took their surname of MacDougall, as descended of his second son Dougal.

NOTE 6.

Lord of the Isles.—P. 664.

The representative of this independent principality, for such it seems to have been, though acknowledging occasionally the pre-eminence of the Scottish crown, was, at the period of the poem, Angus, called Angus Og; but the name has been, euphoniæ gratia, exchanged for that of Ronald, which frequently occurs in the genealogy. Angus was a protector of Robert Bruce, whom he received in his Castle of Dunnaverty during the time of his greatest distress.

NOTE 7.

The House of Lorn.—P. 666.

The House of Lorn, as we observed in a former note, was, like the Lord of the Isles, descended from a son of Somerled, slain at Rensfrew in 1164. This son obtained the succession of his mainland territories, comprehending the greater part of the three districts of Lorn, in Argyle-

shire, and of course might rather be considered as petty princes than feudal barons. They assumed the patronymic appellation of MacDougal, by which they are distinguished in the history of the middle ages. The Lord of Lorn who flourished during the wars of Bruce was Allaster (or Alexander) MacDougal, called Allaster of Argyle. He had married the third daughter of John, called the Red Comyn, who was slain by Bruce in the Dominican Church at Dumfries, and hence he was a mortal enemy of that prince, and more than once reduced him to great straits during the early and distressed period of his reign. Bruce, when he began to obtain an ascendancy in Scotland, took the first opportunity in his power to requite these injuries. He marched into Argyleshire to lay waste the country. John of Lorn, son of the chieftain, was posted with his followers in the formidable pass between Dalmally and Bunawe. It is a narrow path along the verge of the huge and precipitous mountain called Cruachan-Ben, and guarded on the other side by a precipice overhanging Loch Awe. The pass seems to the eye of a soldier as strong as it is wild and romantic to that of an ordinary traveller. But the skill of Bruce had anticipated this difficulty. While his main body engaged in a skirmish with the men of Lorn, and detained their attention to the front of their position, James of Douglas, with Sir Alexander Fraser, Sir William Wiseman, and Sir Andrew Grey, ascended the mountain with a select body of archers, and obtained possession of the heights which commanded the pass. A volley of arrows descending upon them directly warned the Argyleshire men of their perilous situation, and their resistance, which had hitherto been bold and manly, was changed into a precipitate flight. After this decisive engagement, Bruce laid waste Argyleshire, and besieged Dunstaffnage Castle, on the western shore of Lorn, compelled it to surrender, and placed in that principal stronghold of the MacDougals a garrison and governor of his own. The elder MacDougal, now wearied of the contest, submitted to the victor; but his son, "rebellious," says Barbour, "as he wont to be," fled to England by sea.

*Awaked before the rushing prow,
The mimic fires of ocean glow,
Those lightnings of the wave,*—P. 671.

The phenomenon called by sailors "sea-fire" is one of the most beautiful and interesting which is witnessed in the Hebrides. At times the ocean appears entirely illuminated around the vessel, and long trains of lambent coruscations are perpetually bursting upon the sides of the vessel, or pursuing her wake through the darkness. These phosphoric appearances remind one strongly of the description of the sea-snakes in Mr. Coleridge's wild but highly-poetical ballad of "The Ancient Mariner":—

"Beyond the shadow of the ship
I watched the water-snakes;
They moved in tracks of shining white,
And when they reared, the elvish light
Fell off in hoary flakes."

NOTE 9.

Sought the dark fortress by a stair.—P. 673.

The fortress of a Hebridean chief was almost always on the seashore, for the facility of communication which the ocean afforded. Nothing can be more wild than the situations which they chose, and the devices by which the architects endeavoured to defend them. Narrow stairs and arched vaults were the usual mode of access; and the drawbridge appears at Dunstaffnage, and elsewhere, to have fallen from the gate of the building to the top of such a staircase, so that any one advancing with hostile purpose found himself in a state of exposed and precarious elevation, with a gulf between him and the object of his attack. These fortresses were guarded with equal care. The duty of the watch devolved chiefly upon an officer called the Cockman, who had the charge of challenging all who approached the castle.

NOTE 10.

That keen knight, De Argentine.—P. 678.

Sir Egidius or Giles de Argentine was one of the most accomplished knights of the period. He had served in the wars of Henry of Luxemburg with such high reputation that he was, in popular estimation, the third worthy of the age. Those to whom fame assigned precedence over him were Henry of Luxemburg himself, and Robert Bruce. Argentine had warred in Palestine, encountered thrice with the Saracens, and had slain two antagonists in each engagement—an easy matter, he said, for one Christian knight to slay two pagan dogs. His death corresponded with his high character. With Aymer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, he was appointed to attend immediately upon the person of Edward II. at Bannockburn. When the day was utterly lost they forced the king from the field. De Argentine saw the king safe from immediate danger, and then took his leave of him. "God be with you, sire," he said; "it is not my wont to fly." So saying, he turned his horse, cried his war-cry, plunged into the midst of the combatants, and was slain.

NOTE 11.

*"Fill me the mighty cup!" he said,
"Erst owned by royal Somerled."*—P. 679.

A Hebridean drinking-cup, of the most ancient and curious workmanship, has been long preserved in the Castle of Dunvegan, in Skye, the romantic seat of MacLeod of MacLeod, the chief of that ancient and powerful clan. The horn of Rorie More, preserved in the same family, and recorded by Dr. Johnson, is not to be compared with this piece of antiquity, which is one of the greatest curiosities in Scotland. It is nine inches and three-quarters in inside depth, and ten and a half in height on the outside, the extreme measure over the lips being four inches and a half. The cup is divided into two parts by a wrought ledge, beautifully ornamented, about three-fourths of an inch in breadth. Beneath this ledge the shape of the cup is rounded off, and terminates in a flat circle, like that of a teacup: four short feet support the whole. Above the projecting ledge the shape of the cup is nearly square, projecting outward at the brim. The cup is made of wood (oak to all appearance), but most curiously wrought and embossed with silver-work, which projects from the vessel. There are a number of regular projecting sockets, which appear to have been set with stones; two or three of them still hold pieces of coral, the rest are empty. At the four corners of the projecting ledge, or cornice, are four sockets much larger, probably for pebbles or precious stones. The workmanship of the silver is extremely elegant, and appears to have been highly gilded. The ledge, brim, and legs of the cup are of silver. The family tradition bears that it was the property of Neil Ghlune-dhu, or Black-knee.

NOTE 12.

*.....the rebellious Scottish crew,
Who to Rath-Erin's shelter drew,
With Carrick's outlawed Chief.—P. 681.*

It must be remembered by all who have read Scottish history, that after he had slain Comyn at Dumfries, and asserted his right to the Scottish crown, Robert Bruce was reduced to the greatest extremity by the English and their adherents. He was crowned at Scone by the general consent of the Scottish barons, only his authority endured but a short time. According to the phrase said to have been used by his wife, he was for that year "a summer king, but not a winter one." On March 29, 1306, he was crowned king at Scone. Upon the 19th of June, in the same year, he was totally defeated at Methven, near Perth, and his most important adherents, with few exceptions, were either executed or compelled to embrace the English interest, for safety of their lives and fortunes. After this disaster, Bruce's life was that of an outlaw rather than that of a candidate for monarchy. He separated himself from the females of his retinue, whom he sent for safety to the Castle of Kildrummie, in Aberdeenshire, where they afterwards became captives to England. From Aberdeenshire Bruce retreated to the mountainous parts of Breadalbane, and approached the borders of Argyleshire. There he was defeated by the Lord of Lorn, who had assumed arms against him in revenge of the death of his relative, John the Red Comyn. Escaped from this peril, Bruce, with his few attendants, subsisted by hunting and fishing, until the weather compelled them to seek better sustenance and shelter than the Highland mountains afforded. With great difficulty they crossed, from Rowardennan probably, to the western banks of Loch Lomond, partly in a miserable boat, and partly by swimming. The valiant and loyal Earl of Lennox, to whose territories they had now found their way, welcomed them with tears, but was unable to assist them to make an effectual head. The Lord of the Isles, then in possession of great part of Cantyre, received the fugitive monarch in his Castle of Dunnaverty, in that district. But treason, says Barbour, was so general that the king durst not abide there. Accordingly, with the remnant of his followers, Bruce embarked for Rath-Erin, or Rachine, the Recina of Ptolemy, a small island lying almost opposite to the shores of Ballycastle, on the coast of Ireland. Here he resided till the spring of 1307, when he returned to Scotland, with the desperate resolution to reconquer his kingdom or perish in the attempt. The progress of his success, from its commencement to its completion, forms the brightest period in Scottish history.

NOTE 13.

The Brooch of Lorn.—P. 682.

Robert Bruce, after his defeat at Methven, being hard pressed by the English, endeavoured, with the dispirited remnant of his followers, to escape from Breadalbane and the mountains of Perthshire into the Argyleshire Highlands. But he was encountered and repulsed, after a very severe engagement, by the Lord of Lorn. Bruce's personal strength and courage were never displayed to greater advantage than in this conflict. There is a tradition in the family of the MacDougals of Lorn that their chieftain engaged in personal battle with Bruce himself, while the latter was employed in protecting the retreat of his men; that MacDougal was struck down by the king, whose strength of body was equal to his vigour of mind, and would have been slain on the spot, had not two of Lorn's vassals, a father and son, whom tradition terms MacKeoch, rescued him, by seizing the mantle of the monarch, and dragging him from above his adversary. Bruce rid himself of these foes by two blows of his redoubted battle-axe; but was so closely pressed by the other followers of Lorn, that he was forced to abandon the mantle, and brooch which fastened it, clasped in the dying grasp of the MacKeochs. A studded brooch, said to have been that which King Robert lost upon this occasion, was long preserved in the family of MacDougal, and was lost in a fire which consumed their temporary residence.

*Vain was then the Douglas brand,
Vain the Campbell's vaunted hand.*—P. 683.

The gallant Sir James, called the Good Lord Douglas, the most faithful and valiant of Bruce's adherents, was wounded at the battle of Dalry. Sir Nigel or Neil Campbell was also in that unfortunate skirmish. He married Marjorie, sister to Robert Bruce, and was among his most faithful followers.

NOTE 15.

*When Comyn fell beneath the knife
Of that fell homicide The Bruce.*—P. 675.
*Vain Kirkpatrick's bloody dirk,
Making sure of murder's work.*—P. 683.

Every reader must recollect that the proximate cause of Bruce's asserting his right to the crown of Scotland was the death of John.

called the Red Comyn. The causes of this act of violence, equally extraordinary from the high rank both of the perpetrator and sufferer, and from the place where the slaughter was committed, are variously related by the Scottish and English historians, and cannot now be ascertained. The fact that they met at the high altar of the Minorites, or Greyfriars' Church in Dumfries, that their difference broke out into high and insulting language, and that Bruce drew his dagger and stabbed Comyn, is certain. Rushing to the door of the church, Bruce met two powerful barons, Kirkpatrick of Closeburn and James de Lindsay, who eagerly asked him what tidings. "Bad tidings," answered Bruce; "I doubt I have slain Comyn." "Doubtest thou?" said Kirkpatrick; "I make sicker" (i.e. sure). With these words, he and Lindsay rushed into the church and dispatched the wounded Comyn. The Kirkpatricks of Closeburn assumed, in memory of this deed, a hand holding a dagger, with the memorable words, "I make sicker."

NOTE 16.

*Barendown fled fast away,
Fled the fiery De la Haye.*—P. 683.

These knights are enumerated by Barbour among the small number of Bruce's adherents who remained in arms with him after the battle of Methven.

"With him was a bold baron,
Schyr William the Baroundoun,
* * * * *
Schyr Gilbert de la Haye alsua."

There were more than one of the noble family of Hay engaged in Bruce's cause; but the principal one was Gilbert de la Haye, Lord of Errol, a staunch adherent to King Robert's interest, and whom he rewarded by creating him hereditary Lord High Constable of Scotland. He was slain at the battle of Halidon Hill.

NOTE 17.

*"Was't not enough to Ronald's bower
I brought thee, like a paramour."*—P. 690.

It was anciently customary in the Highlands to bring the bride to the house of the husband. Nay, in some cases the complaisance was stretched so far that she remained there upon trial for a twelvemonth; and the bridegroom, even after this period of cohabitation, retained an option of refusing to fulfil his engagement. It is said that a desperate feud ensued between the clans of MacDonald of Sleate and MacLeod, owing to the former chief having availed himself of this license to send back to Dunvegan a sister or daughter of the latter. MacLeod, resenting the indignity, observed that, since there was no wedding bonfire, there should be one to solemnize the divorce. Accordingly he burned and laid waste the territories of MacDonald, who retaliated, and a deadly feud, with all its accompaniments, took place in form.

NOTE 18.

*Since matchless Wallace first had been
In mockery crowned with wreaths of green.*—P. 691.

Stow gives the following curious account of the trial and execution of this celebrated patriot:—"William Wallace, who had oftentimes set Scotland in great trouble, was taken and brought to London, with great numbers of men and women wondering upon him. He was lodged in the house of William Delect, a citizen of London, in Fenchurch Street. On the morrow, being the eve of St. Bartholomew, he was brought on horseback to Westminster, John Legrave and Geoffrey, knights, the mayor, sheriffs, and aldermen of London, and many others, both on horseback and on foot, accompanying him; and in the great hall at Westminster, he being placed on the south bench, crowned with laurel, for that he had said in times past that he ought to bear a crown in that hall, as it was commonly reported; and being appeached for a traitor by Sir Peter Malorie, the king's justice, he answered, that he was never traitor to the King of England; but for other things whereof he was accused, he confessed them, and was after headed and quartered."—STOW, Chr. p. 209. There is something singularly doubtful about the mode in which Wallace was taken. That he was betrayed to the English is indubitable, and popular fame charges Sir John Menteith with the indelible infamy. "Accursed," says Arnold Blair, "be the day of nativity of John de Menteith, and may his name be struck out of the book of life." But John de Menteith was all along a zealous favourer of the English interest, and was governor of Dumbarton Castle by commission from Edward the First, and therefore, as the accurate Lord Hailes has observed, could not be the friend and confidant of Wallace, as tradition states him to be. The truth seems to be that Menteith, thoroughly engaged in the English interest, pursued Wallace closely, and made him prisoner through the treachery of an attendant, whom Peter Langtoft calls Jack Short. The infamy of seizing Wallace must rest, therefore, between a degenerate Scottish nobleman, the vassal of England, and a domestic, the obscure agent of his treachery—between Sir John Menteith, son of Walter, Earl of Menteith, and the traitor Jack Short.

NOTE 19.

*Where's Nigel Bruce? and De la Haye,
And valiant Seton—where are they?
Where Somerville, the kind and free?
And Fraser, flower of chivalry?*—P. 691.

When these lines were written the author was remote from the means of correcting his indistinct recollection concerning the individual fate of Bruce's followers after the battle of Methven. Hugh de la Haye and Thomas Somerville of Lintoun and Cowdally, ancestor of Lord Somerville, were both made prisoners at that defeat, but neither was executed.

Sir Nigel Bruce was the younger brother of Robert, to whom he committed the charge of his wife and daughter Marjorie, and the defence of his strong castle of Kildrummie, near the head of the Don, in Aberdeenshire. Kildrummie long resisted the arms of the Earls of Lancaster and Hereford, until the magazine was treacherously burned. The garrison was then compelled to surrender at discretion, and Nigel Bruce, a youth remarkable for personal beauty as well as for gallantry, fell into the hands of the unrelenting Edward. He was tried by a special commission at Berwick, was condemned, and executed.

Christopher Seatoun, or Seton, shared the same unfortunate fate. He also was distinguished by personal valour, and signalized himself in the fatal battle of Methven. Robert Bruce adventured himself in that battle like a knight of romance. He dismounted Aymer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, but was, in his turn, dismounted by Sir Philip Mowbray. In this emergency Seatoun came to his aid, and remounted him. Langtoft mentions that in this battle the Scots wore white surplices, or shirts, over their armour, that those of rank might not be known. In this manner both Bruce and Seatoun escaped. But the latter was afterwards betrayed to the English. There was some peculiarity respecting his punishment, because, according to Matthew of Westminster, he was considered not as a Scottish subject, but an Englishman. He was therefore taken to Dumfries, where he was tried, condemned, and executed, for the murder of a soldier slain by him. His brother, John de Seton, met the same fate at Newcastle; both were considered as accomplices in the slaughter of Comyn, but in what manner they were particularly accessories to that deed does not appear.

The fate of Sir Simon Frazer, or Frizel, ancestor of the family of Lovat, is dwelt upon at great length, and with savage exultation, by the English historians. This knight, who was renowned for personal gallantry and high deeds of chivalry, was also made prisoner, after a gallant defence, in the battle of Methven. He was taken to London, condemned, and executed, with all the barbarity characteristic of the age.

NOTE 20.

*Was not the life of Athole shed
To soothe the tyrant's sickened bed.*—P. 691.

John de Strathbogie, Earl of Athole, had attempted to escape out of the kingdom, but a storm cast him upon the coast, when he was taken, sent to London, and executed, with circumstances of great barbarity, being first half-strangled, then let down from the gallows while yet alive, barbarously dismembered, and his body burned. It may surprise the reader to learn that this was a mitigated punishment; for in respect that his mother was a granddaughter of King John, by his natural son Richard, he was not drawn on a sledge to execution, "that point was forgiven," and he made the passage on horseback. Matthew of Westminster tells us that King Edward, then extremely ill, received great ease from the news that his relative was apprehended. "Quo audito, Rex Angliæ, eisi gravissimo morbo tunc langueret, levius tamen tulit dolorem." To this singular expression the text alludes.

NOTE 21.

*And must his word, till dying day,
Be nought but quarter, hang, and slay!*—P. 691.

This alludes to a passage in Barbour, singularly expressive of the vindictive spirit of Edward the First. The prisoners taken at the castle of Kildrummie had surrendered upon condition that they should be at King Edward's disposal. "But his will," says Barbour, "was always evil towards Scottishmen." The news of the surrender of Kildrummie arrived when he was in his mortal sickness at Burgh-upon-Sands.

"And when he to the death was near,
The folk that at Kyldromy were
Come with prisoners that they had tane,
And syne to the king are gane.
And for to comfort him they tauld
How they the castell to them yauld;
And how they till his will were brought,
To do off that whatever he thought;
And asked what men should off them do.
Then looked he angryly them to,
He said, grinning, 'Hangs and draws.'"

NOTE 22.

*"While I the blessed cross advance,
And expiate this unhappy chance,
In Palestine, with sword and lance."*—P. 693.

Bruce uniformly professed, and probably felt, compunction for having violated the sanctuary of the Church by the slaughter of Comyn; and finally, in his last hours, in testimony of his faith, penitence, and zeal, he requested James Lord Douglas to carry his heart to Jerusalem, to be there deposited in the Holy Sepulchre.

NOTE 23.

*"De Bruce! I rose with purpose dread
To speak my curse upon thy head."*—P. 694.

As soon as the notice of Comyn's slaughter reached Rome, Bruce and his adherents were excommunicated. It was published first by the Archbishop of York, and renewed at different times, particularly by Lambyrton, Bishop of St. Andrews, in 1308; but it does not appear to have answered the purpose which the English monarch expected. Indeed, for reasons which it may be difficult to trace, the thunders of Rome descended upon the Scottish mountains with less effect than in more fertile countries. Probably the comparative poverty of the benefices occasioned that fewer foreign clergy settled in Scotland, and the interests of the native churchmen were linked with those of their country. Many of the Scottish prelates, Lambyrton the primate particularly, declared for Bruce, while he was yet under the ban of the Church, although he afterwards again changed sides.

NOTE 24.

*A hunted wanderer on the wild moorland
On foreign shores a man exiled.*—P. 694.

This is not metaphorical. The echoes of Scotland did actually “...ring

With the bloodhounds that bayed for her fugitive king.”

A very curious and romantic tale is told by Barbour upon this subject, which may be abridged as follows :—

When Bruce had again got footing in Scotland in the spring of 1306, he continued to be in a very weak and precarious condition, gaining, indeed, occasional advantages, but obliged to fly before his enemies whenever they assembled in force. Upon one occasion, while he was lying with a small party in the wilds of Cumnock, in Ayrshire, Aymer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, with his inveterate foe, John of Lorn, came against him suddenly with eight hundred Highlanders, besides a large body of men-at-arms. They brought with them a slough-dog, or bloodhound, which, some say, had been once a favourite with the Bruce himself, and therefore was least likely to lose the trace.

Bruce, whose force was under four hundred men, continued to make head against the cavalry, till the men of Lorn had nearly cut off his retreat. Perceiving the danger of his situation, he acted as the celebrated and ill-requited Mina is said to have done in similar circumstances. He divided his force into three parts, appointed a place of rendezvous, and commanded them to retreat by different routes. But when John of Lorn arrived at the spot where they divided, he caused the hound to be put upon the trace, which immediately directed him to the pursuit of that party which Bruce headed. This, therefore, Lorn pursued with his whole force, paying no attention to the others. The king again subdivided his small body into three parts, and with the same result, for the pursuers attached themselves exclusively to that which he led in person. He then caused his followers to disperse, and retained only his foster-brother in his company. The slough-dog followed the trace, and, neglecting the others, attached himself and his attendants to the pursuit of the king. Lorn became convinced that his enemy was nearly in his power, and detached five of his most active attendants to follow him, and interrupt his flight. They did so with all the agility of mountaineers. “What aid wilt thou make?” said Bruce to his single attendant, when he saw the five men gain ground on him. “The best I can,” replied his foster-brother. “Then,” said Bruce, “here I make my stand.” The five pursuers came up fast. The king took three to himself, leaving the other two to his foster-brother. He slew the first who encountered him; but observing his foster-brother hard pressed, he sprung to his assistance, and dispatched one of his assailants. Leaving him to deal with the survivor, he returned upon the other two, both of whom he slew before his foster-brother had dispatched his single antagonist. When this hard encounter was over, with a courtesy, which in the whole work marks Bruce’s character, he thanked his foster-brother for his aid. "It likes you to say so," answered his follower, "but you yourself slew four of the five." "True," said the king, "but only because I had better opportunity than you. They were not apprehensive of me when they saw me encounter three, so I had a moment's time to spring to thy aid, and to return equally unexpectedly upon my own opponents."

In the meanwhile Lorn's party approached rapidly, and the king and his foster-brother betook themselves to a neighbouring wood. Here they sat down, for Bruce was exhausted by fatigue, until the cry of the hound came so near that his foster-brother entreated Bruce to provide for his safety by retreating further. "I have heard," answered the king, "that whosoever will wade a bowshot length down a running stream shall make the slough-hound lose scent. Let us try the experiment, for were yon devilish hound silenced, I should care little for the rest."

Lorn in the meanwhile advanced, and found the bodies of his slain vassals, over whom he made his moan, and threatened the most deadly vengeance. Then he followed the hound to the side of the brook down which the king had waded a great way. Here the hound was at fault, and John of Lorn, after long attempting in vain to recover Bruce's trace, relinquished the pursuit.

"Others," says Barbour, "affirm, that upon this occasion the king's life was saved by an excellent archer who accompanied him, and who, perceiving they would be finally taken by means of the bloodhound, hid himself in a thicket, and shot him with an arrow. In which way," adds the metrical biographer, "this escape happened I am uncertain, but at that brook the king escaped from his pursuers."

NOTE 25.

*"Alas! dear youth, the unhappy time,"
 Answered the Bruce, "must bear the crime,
 Since, guiltier far than you,
 Even I"—he paused, for Falkirk's woes
 Upon his conscious soul arose.—P. 700.*

I have followed the vulgar and inaccurate tradition that Bruce fought against Wallace, and the array of Scotland, at the fatal battle of Falkirk. The story, which seems to have no better authority than that of Blind Harry, bears that, having made much slaughter during the engagement, he sat down to dine with the conquerors without washing the filthy witness from his hands.

"Fasting he was, and had been in great need,
 Blooded were all his weapons and his weed;
 Southeron lords scorned him in terms rude,
 And said, Behold yon Scot eats his own blood.

"Then rued he sore, for reason bad be known,
 That blood and land alike should be his own;
 With them he long was, ere he got away,
 But contrair Scots he fought not from that day."

The account given by most of our historians of the conversation between Bruce and Wallace over the Carron river is equally apocryphal. There is full evidence that Bruce was not at that time on the English side, nor present at the battle of Falkirk; nay, that he acted as a guardian of Scotland, along with John Comyn, in the name of Baliol, and in opposition to the English.

NOTE 26.

*These are the savage wilds that lie
North of Strathnardill and Dunskey.*—P. 702.

The extraordinary piece of scenery which I have here attempted to describe is, I think, unparalleled in any part of Scotland, at least in any which I have happened to visit. It lies just upon the frontier of the Laird of MacLeod's country, which is thereabouts divided from the estate of Mr. MacAllister of Strathaird, called Strathnardill by the Dean of the Isles.

NOTE 27.

*And mermaid's alabaster grot,
Who bathes her limbs in sunless well
Deep in Strathaird's enchanted cell.*—P. 712.

Imagination can hardly conceive anything more beautiful than the extraordinary grotto discovered not many years since upon the estate of Alexander MacAllister, Esq. of Strathaird. It has since been much and deservedly celebrated, and a full account of its beauties has been published by Dr. MacLeay of Oban. The general impression may perhaps be gathered from the following extract from a journal, which, written under the feelings of the moment, is likely to be more accurate than any attempt to recollect the impressions then received:—"The first entrance to this celebrated cave is rude and unpromising; but the light of the torches with which we were provided was soon reflected from the roof, floor, and walls, which seem as if they were sheeted with marble, partly smooth, partly rough with frostwork and rustic ornaments, and partly seeming to be wrought into statuary. The floor forms a steep and difficult ascent, and might be fancifully compared to a sheet of water, which, while it rushed whitening and foaming down a declivity, had been suddenly arrested and consolidated by the spell of an enchanter. Upon attaining the summit of this ascent, the cave opens into a splendid gallery, adorned with the most dazzling crystallizations, and finally descends with rapidity to the brink of a pool of the most limpid water, about four or five yards broad. There opens beyond this pool a portal arch, formed by two columns of white spar, with beautiful chasing upon the sides, which promises a continuation of the cave. One of our sailors swam across, for there is no other mode of passing, and informed us (as indeed we partly saw by the light he carried) that the enchantment of MacAllister's cave terminates with this portal, a little beyond which there was only a rude cavern, speedily choked with stones and earth. But the pool, on the brink of which we stood, surrounded by the most fanciful mouldings, in a substance resembling white marble, and distinguished by the depth and purity of its waters, might have been the bathing grotto of a naiad. The groups of combined figures projecting, or embossed, by which the pool is surrounded, are exquisitely elegant and fanciful. A statuary might catch beautiful hints from the singular and romantic disposition of those stalactites. There is scarce a form or group on which active fancy may not trace figures or grotesque ornaments, which have been gradually moulded in this cavern by the dropping of the calcareous water hardening into petrifications. Many of those fine groups have been injured by the senseless rage of appropriation of recent tourists; and the grotto has lost (I am informed), through the smoke of torches, something of that vivid silver tint which was originally one of its chief distinctions. But enough of beauty remains to compensate for all that may be lost." Mr. MacAllister of Strathaird has, with great propriety, built up the exterior entrance to this cave, in order that strangers may enter properly attended by a guide, to prevent any repetition of the wanton and selfish injury which this singular scene has already sustained.

NOTE 28.

*Yet to no sense of selfish wrongs,
Bear witness with me, Heaven, belongs
My joy o'er Edward's bier.*—P. 717.

The generosity which does justice to the character of an enemy, often marks Bruce's sentiments, as recorded by the faithful Barbour. He seldom mentions a fallen enemy without praising such good qualities as he might possess. I shall only take one instance. Shortly after Bruce landed in Carrick, in 1306, Sir Ingram Bell, the English governor of Ayr, engaged a wealthy yeoman, who had hitherto been a follower of Bruce, to undertake the task of assassinating him. The king learned this treachery, as he is said to have done other secrets of the enemy, by means of a female with whom he had an intrigue. Shortly after he was possessed of this information, Bruce, resorting to a small thicket at a distance from his men, with only a single page to attend him, met the traitor, accompanied by two of his sons. They approached him with their wonted familiarity; but Bruce, taking his page's bow and arrow, commanded them to keep at a distance. As they still pressed forward with professions of zeal for his person and service, he, after a second warning, shot the father with the arrow; and being assaulted successively by the two sons, dispatched first one, who was armed with an axe, then as the other charged him with a spear, avoided the thrust, struck the head from the spear, and cleft the skull of the assassin with a blow of his two-handed sword.

"He rushed down, of blood all red,
And when the king saw they were dead,
All three lying, he wiped his brand.
With that his boy came fast running,
And said, 'Our Lord might lowyt * be,
That granted you might and poweste †
To fell the felony and the pride,
Of three in so little tide.'
The king said, 'So our Lord me see,
They have been worthy men all three,
Had they not been full of treason;
But that made their confusion.'"

*From Canna's tower, that, steep and grey,
Like falcon-nest o'erhangs the bay.*—P. 720.

The little island of Canna, or Cannay, adjoins those of Rum and Muick, with which it forms one parish. In a pretty bay opening towards the east, there is a lofty and slender rock, detached from the shore. Upon the summit are the ruins of a very small tower, scarcely accessible by a steep and precipitous path. Here it is said one of the kings, or Lords of the Isles, confined a beautiful lady, of whom he was jealous. The ruins are of course haunted by her restless spirit, and many romantic stories are told by the aged people of the island concerning her fate in life, and her appearances after death.

*And Ronin's mountains dark have sent

Ronin (popularly called Rum, a name which a poet may be pardoned for avoiding, if possible) is a very rough and mountainous island, adjacent to those of Eigg and Cannay. There is almost no arable ground upon it, so that, except in the plenty of the deer, which of course are now nearly extirpated, it still deserves the description bestowed by the Archdean of the Isles:—"Ronin, sixteen myle north-west from the ile of Coll, lyes ane ile callit Ronin Ile, of sixteen myle long, and six in bredthe in the narrowest, ane forest of heigh mountains, and abundance of little deir in it, quhilk deir will never be slane dounewith, but the principal saittis man be in the height of the hill, because the deir will be callit upwart ay be the tainchell, or without tynchel they will pass upwart perforce. NOTE 31.

*On Scooreigg next a warning light
Summoned her warriors to the fight ;
A numerous race, ere stern MacLeod
O'er their bleak shores in vengeance strode.*—P. 722.

These and the following lines of the stanza refer to a dreadful tale of feudal vengeance, of which unfortunately there are relics that still attest the truth. Scoor-Eigg is a high peak in the centre of the small Isle of Eigg, or Egg. It is well known to mineralogists, as affording many interesting specimens ; and to others, whom chance or curiosity may lead to the island, for the astonishing view of the mainland and neighbouring isles which it commands.

"August 26, 1814.—At seven this morning we were in the Sound

which divides the Isle of Rum from that of Egg. The latter, although hilly and rocky, and traversed by a remarkably high and barren ridge, called Scoor-Rigg, has, in point of soil, a much more promising appearance. Southward of both lies the Isle of Muich, or Muck, a low and fertile island, and though the least, yet probably the most valuable of the three. We manned the boat and rowed along the shore of Egg in quest of a cavern, which had been the memorable scene of a horrid feudal vengeance. We had rounded more than half the island, admiring the entrance of many a bold natural cave, which its rocks exhibited, without finding that which we sought, until we procured a guide. Nor, indeed, was it surprising that it should have escaped the search of strangers, as there are no outward indications more than might distinguish the entrance of a fox-earth. This noted cave has a very narrow opening, through which one can hardly creep on his knees and hands. It rises steep and lofty within, and runs into the bowels of the rock to the depth of 255 measured feet; the height at the entrance may be about three feet, but rises within to eighteen or twenty, and the breadth may vary in the same proportion. The rude and stony bottom of this cave is strewn with the bones of men, women, and children, the sad relics of the ancient inhabitants of the island, 200 in number, who were slain on the following occasion:—The MacDonalds of the Isle of Egg, a people dependent on Clanranald, had done some injury to the Laird of MacLeod. The tradition of the isle says that it was by a personal attack on the chieftain, in which his back was broken. But that of the other isles bears, more probably, that the injury was offered to two or three of the MacLeods, who, landing upon Egg, and using some freedom with the young women, were seized by the islanders, bound hand and foot, and turned adrift in a boat, which the winds and waves safely conducted to Skye. To avenge the offence given, MacLeod sailed with such a body of men as rendered resistance hopeless. The natives, fearing his vengeance, concealed themselves in this cavern, and, after a strict search, the MacLeods went on board their galleys, after doing what mischief they could, concluding the inhabitants had left the isle, and betaken themselves to the Long Island, or some of Clanranald's other possessions. But next morning they espied from the vessels a man upon the island; and immediately landing again, they traced his retreat by the marks of his footsteps, a light snow being unhappily on the ground. MacLeod then surrounded the cavern, summoned the subterranean garrison, and demanded that the individuals who had offended him should be delivered up to him. This was peremptorily refused. The chieftain then caused his people to divert the course of a rill of water, which, falling over the entrance of the cave, would have prevented his purposed vengeance. He then kindled at the entrance of the cavern a huge fire, composed of turf and fern, and maintained it with unrelenting assiduity, until all within were destroyed by suffocation. The date of this dreadful deed must have been recent, if one may judge from the fresh appearance of those relics. I brought off, in spite of the prejudice of our sailors, a skull from among the numerous specimens of mortality which the cavern afforded. Before re-embarking we visited another cave, opening to the sea, but of a character entirely different, being a large open vault, as high as that of a cathedral, and running back a great way into the rock at the same height. The height and width of the opening gives ample light to the whole. Here, after 1745, when the Catholic priests were scarcely tolerated, the priest of Eigg used to perform the Roman Catholic service, most of the islanders being of that persuasion. A huge ledge of rocks rising about half-way up one side of the vault served for altar and pulpit; and the appearance of a priest and Highland congregation in such an extraordinary place of worship might have engaged the pencil of Salvator."

Scenes sung by him who sings no more.—P. 723.

The ballad, entitled "Macphail of Colonsay, and the Mermaid of Corrievrekin" (see "Border Minstrelsy," vol. iv. p. 285), was composed by John Leyden, from a tradition which he found while making a tour through the Hebrides about 1801, soon before his fatal departure for India, where, after having made further progress in Oriental literature than any man of letters who had embraced those studies, he died a martyr to his zeal for knowledge, in the island of Java, immediately after the landing of our forces near Batavia, in August 1811.

NOTE 33.

*Up Tarbat's western lake they bore,
Then dragged their bark the isthmus o'er.*—P. 724.

The peninsula of Cantyre is joined to South Knapdale by a very narrow isthmus, formed by the western and eastern Loch of Tarbat. These two salt-water lakes, or bays, encroach so far upon the land, and the extremities come so near to each other, that there is not above a mile of land to divide them.

"It is not long," says Pennant, "since vessels of nine or ten tons were drawn by horses out of the west loch into that of the east, to avoid the dangers of the Mull of Cantyre, so dreaded and so little known was the navigation round that promontory. It is the opinion of many that these little isthmuses, so frequently styled Tarbat in North Britain, took their name from the above circumstance—tarruing signifying 'to draw,' and bata 'a boat.' This, too, might be called, by way of pre-eminence, the Tarbat, from a very singular circumstance related by Torfæus. When Magnus, the barefooted King of Norway, obtained from Donald Bane of Scotland the cession of the Western Isles, or all those places that could be surrounded in a boat, he added to them the peninsula of Cantyre by this fraud: he placed himself in the stern of a boat, held the rudder, was drawn over this narrow track, and by this species of navigation wrested the country from his brother monarch."—Pennant's Scotland. London, 1790, p. 190.

From the evidence of Barbour, it appears that Bruce made this passage, though at a period two or three years later than that mentioned in the poem.

NOTE 34.

*The sun, ere yet he sunk behind
Ben-Ghoil, "The Mountain of the Wind,"
Gave his grim peaks a greeting kind,
And bade Loch Ranza smile.*—P. 724.

Loch Ranza is a beautiful bay, on the northern extremity of Arran, opening towards East Tarbat Loch. It is well described by Pennant:—"The approach was magnificent: a fine bay in front, about a mile deep, having a ruined castle near the lower end, on a low far projecting neck of land, that forms another harbour, with a narrow passage; but within has three fathom of water, even at the lowest ebb. Beyond is a little plain watered by a stream, and inhabited by the people of a small village. The whole is environed with a theatre of mountains, and in the background the serrated crags of Grianan-Athol soar above."—PENNANT'S Tour to the Western Isles, pp. 191-2. Ben-Ghaoil, "the Mountain of the Winds," is generally known by its English and less poetical name of Goatfield.

NOTE 35.

*Each to Loch Ranza's margin spring;
That blast was winded by the King!*—P. 728.

The passage in Barbour, describing the landing of Bruce, and his being recognized by Douglas and those of his followers who had preceded him, by the sound of his horn, is in the original singularly simple and affecting. The king arrived in Arran with thirty-three small row-boats. He interrogated a female if there had arrived any warlike men of late in that country. "Surely, sir," she replied, "I can tell you of many who lately came hither, discomfited the English governor, and blockaded his castle of Brodick. They maintain themselves in a wood at no great distance." The king, truly conceiving that this must be Douglas and his followers, who had lately set forth to try their fortune in Arran, desired the woman to conduct him to the wood. She obeyed.

"The king then blew his horn on high;
And gert his men that were him by
Hold them still, and all privy;
And syne again his horn blew he.
James of Dowglas heard him blow,
And at the last alone gan know,
And said, 'Soothly yon is the king;
I know long while since his blowing.'
The third time therewithall he blew,
And then Sir Robert Boid it knew;
And said, 'Yon is the king, but dread,
Go we forth till him, better speed.'
Then went they till the king in hie,
And him inclined courteously.
And blithly welcomed them the king,
And was joyful of their meeting,
And kissed them; and speared * syne
How they had fared in hunting?

And they told him all, but lesing :*
 Syne laud they God of their meeting.
 Syne with the king till his harbourye
 Went both joyfu' and jolly."

NOTE 36.

.....his brother blamed,
*But shared the weakness, while, ashamed,
 With haughty laugh his head he turned,
 And dashed away the tear he scorned.*—P. 730.

The kind yet fiery character of Edward Bruce is well painted by Barbour in the account of his behaviour after the battle of Bannockburn. Sir Walter Ross, one of the very few Scottish nobles who fell in that battle, was so dearly beloved by Edward, that he wished the victory had been lost, so Ross had lived. In like manner, when, in a sally from Carrickfergus, Neil Fleming, and the guards whom he commanded, had fallen, after the protracted resistance which saved the rest of Edward Bruce's army, he made such moan as surprised his followers.

NOTE 37.

*Thou heardest a wretched female plain
 In agony of travail-pain,
 And thou didst did thy little band
 Upon the instant turn and stand,
 And dare the worst the foe might do,
 Rather than, like a knight untrue,
 Leave to pursuers merciless
 A woman in her last distress.*—P. 734.

This incident, which illustrates so happily the chivalrous generosity of Bruce's character, is one of the many simple and natural traits recorded by Barbour. It occurred during the expedition which Bruce made to Ireland, to support the pretensions of his brother Edward to the throne of that kingdom. Bruce was about to retreat, and his army was arrayed for moving.

NOTE 38.

*O'er chasms he passed, where fractures wide
 Craved wary eye and ample stride.*—P. 740.

The interior of the island of Arran abounds with beautiful Highland scenery. The hills, being very rocky and precipitous, afford some cataracts of great height, though of inconsiderable breadth. There is one pass over the river Machrai, renowned for the dilemma of a poor woman, who, being tempted by the narrowness of the ravine to step across, succeeded in making the first movement, but took fright when it became necessary to move the other foot, and remained in a posture equally ludicrous and dangerous, until some chance passenger assisted her to extricate herself. It is said she remained there some hours.

* Without lying.

NOTE 39.

*He crossed his brow beside the stone
Where Druids erst heard victims groan,
And at the cairns upon the wild,
O'er many a heathen hero piled.—P. 741.*

The Isle of Arran, like those of Man and Anglesea, abounds with many relics of heathen, and probably Druidical, superstition. There are high erect columns of unhewn stone, the most early of all monuments, the circles of rude stones, commonly entitled Druidical, and the cairns, or sepulchral piles, within which are usually found urns enclosing ashes.

NOTE 40.

*Old Brodick's Gothic towers were seen.
From Hastings, late their English lord,
Douglas had won them by the sword.—P. 741.*

Brodick or Brathwick Castle, in the Isle of Arran, is an ancient fortress, near an open roadstead called Brodick Bay, and not far distant from a tolerable harbour, closed in by the island of Lamlash. This important place had been assailed a short time before Bruce's arrival in the island. James Lord Douglas, who accompanied Bruce to his retreat in Rachrine, seems, in the spring of 1306, to have tired of his abode there, and set out accordingly, in the phrase of the times, to see what adventure God would send him. Sir Robert Boyd accompanied him, and his knowledge of the localities of Arran appears to have directed his course thither. They landed in the island privately, and appear to have laid an ambush for Sir John Hastings, the English governor of Brodick, and surprised a considerable supply of arms and provisions, and nearly took the castle itself. Indeed, that they actually did so has been generally averred by historians, although it does not appear from the narrative of Barbour. On the contrary, it would seem that they took shelter within a fortification of the ancient inhabitants..... The castle is now much modernized, but has a dignified appearance, being surrounded by flourishing plantations.

NOTE 41.

*Of, too, with unaccustomed ears,
A language much unmeet he hears.—P. 742.*

Barbour, with great simplicity, gives an anecdote, from which it would seem that the vice of profane swearing, afterwards too general among the Scottish nation, was, at this time, confined to military men. As Douglas, after Bruce's return to Scotland, was roving about the mountainous country of Tweeddale, near the water of Lyne, he chanced to hear some persons in a farmhouse say "the devil." Concluding, from this hardy expression, that the house contained warlike guests, he immediately assailed it, and had the good fortune to make prisoners Thomas Randolph, afterwards the famous Earl of Murray, and Alexander Stewart,

Lord Bonkle. Both were then in the English interest, and had come into that country with the purpose of driving out Douglas. They afterwards ranked among Bruce's most zealous adherents.

NOTE 42.

*Now ask you whence that wondrous light,
Whose fairy glow beguiled their sight?
It ne'er was known.*—P. 749.

The following are the words of an ingenious correspondent, to whom I am obliged for much information respecting Turnberry and its neighbourhood :—"The only tradition now remembered of the landing of Robert the Bruce in Carrick, relates to the fire seen by him from the Isle of Arran. It is still generally reported, and religiously believed by many, that this fire was really the work of supernatural power, unassisted by the hand of any mortal being; and it is said that, for several centuries, the flame rose yearly on the same hour of the same night of the year on which the king first saw it from the turrets of Brodick Castle; and some go so far as to say, that if the exact time were known, it would be still seen. That this superstitious notion is very ancient is evident from the place where the fire is said to have appeared, being called the Bogles' Brae beyond the remembrance of man. In support of this curious belief, it is said that the practice of burning heath for the improvement of land was then unknown; that a spunkie (Jack o' lanthorn) could not have been seen across the breadth of the Firth of Clyde, between Ayrshire and Arran; and that the courier of Bruce was his kinsman, and never suspected of treachery."—Letter from Mr. Joseph Train of Newton Stewart.

NOTE 43.

Left for the Castle's silvan reign.*—P. 750.

The Castle of Turnberry, on the coast of Ayrshire, was the property of Robert Bruce, in right of his mother. Around the castle was a level plain of about two miles in extent, forming the castle park. There could be nothing, I am informed, more beautiful than the copsewood and verdure of this extensive meadow, before it was invaded by the ploughshare.

NOTE 44.

The Bruce hath won his father's hall.—P. 758.

I have followed the flattering and pleasing tradition that the Bruce, after his descent upon the coast of Ayrshire, actually gained possession of his maternal castle. But the tradition is not accurate. The fact is, that he was only strong enough to alarm and drive in the outposts of the English garrison, then commanded, not by Clifford, as assumed in the text, but by Percy. Neither was Clifford slain upon this occasion, though he had several skirmishes with Bruce. He fell afterwards in the battle of Bannockburn. Bruce, after alarming the Castle of Turnberry, and surprising some part of the garrison who were quartered without the walls of the fortress, retreated into the mountainous part of Carrick, and there made himself so strong that the English were obliged to evacuate Turnberry, and at length the Castle of Ayr. Many of his benefactions and royal gifts attest his attachment to the hereditary followers of his house in this part of the country.

NOTE 45.

Let Ettrick's archers sharp their darts.—P. 759.

The forest of Selkirk, or Ettrick, at this period, occupied all the district which retains that denomination, and embraced the neighbouring dales of Tweeddale, and at least the upper ward of Clydesdale. All that tract was probably as waste as it is mountainous, and covered with the remains of the ancient Caledonian forest, which is supposed to have stretched from the Cheviot Hills as far as Hamilton, and to have comprehended even a part of Ayrshire. At the fatal battle of Falkirk, Sir John Stewart of Bonkill, brother to the Steward of Scotland, commanded the archers of Selkirk forest, who fell around the dead body of their leader. The English historians have commemorated the tall and stately persons, as well as the unswerving faith, of these foresters. Nor has their interesting fall escaped the notice of an elegant modern poetess, whose subject led her to treat of that calamitous engagement:—

“ The glance of the morn had sparkled bright
On their plumage green and their actions light;
The bugle was strung at each hunter's side,
As they had been bound to the chase to ride:
But the bugle is mute, and the shafts are spent,
The arm unnerved, and the bow unbent;
And the tired forester is laid
Far, far from the clustering greenwood shade !

“ Sore have they toiled—they are fallen asleep;
And their slumber is heavy, and dull, and deep !
When over their bones the grass shall wave,
When the wild winds over their tombs shall rave,
Memory shall lean on their graves, and tell
How Selkirk's hunters bold around old Stewart fell !”
Wallace, or The Fight of Falkirk.

NOTE 46.

*When Bruce's banner had victorious flowed
O'er Loudoun's mountain, and in Ury's vale.*—P. 760.

The first important advantage gained by Bruce, after landing at Turnberry, was over Aymer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, the same by whom he had been defeated near Methven. They met, as has been said, by appointment, at Loudonhill, in the west of Scotland. Pembroke sustained a defeat, and from that time Bruce was at the head of a considerable flying army. Yet he was subsequently obliged to retreat into Aberdeenshire, and was there assailed by Comyn, Earl of Buchan, desirous to avenge the death of his relative, the Red Comyn, and supported by a body of English troops under Philip de Mowbray. Bruce was ill at the time of a scrofulous disorder, but took horse to meet his enemies, although obliged to be supported on either side. He was victorious, and it is said that the agitation of his spirits restored his health.

NOTE 47.

When English blood oft deluged Douglas-dale.—P. 760.

The “good Lord James of Douglas,” during these commotions, often took from the English his own castle of Douglas, but being unable to garrison it, contented himself with destroying the fortifications, and retiring into the mountains. As a reward to his patriotism, it is said to have been prophesied that how often soever Douglas Castle should be destroyed, it should always again arise more magnificent from its ruins. Upon one of these occasions he used fearful cruelty, causing all the store of provisions, which the English had laid up in his castle, to be heaped together, bursting the wine and beer casks among the wheat and flour, slaughtering the cattle upon the same spot, and upon the top of the whole cutting the throats of the English prisoners. This pleasantry of the “good Lord James” is commemorated under the name of the Douglas-Larder.

A more pleasing tale of chivalry is recorded by Godscroft:—“By this means, and such other exploits, he so affrighted the enemy that it was counted a matter of great jeopardy to keep this castle, which began to be called the adventurous (or hazardous) Castle of Douglas; whereupon Sir John Walton being in suit of an English lady, she wrote to him that when he had kept the adventurous Castle of Douglas seven years, then he might think himself worthy to be a suitor to her. Upon this occasion Walton took upon the keeping of it, and succeeded to Thruswall; but he ran the same fortune with the rest that were before him. For Sir James, having first dressed an ambuscado near unto the place, he made fourteen of his men take so many sacks, and fill them with grass, as though it had been corn, which they carried in the way to Lanark, the chief market town in that county: so hoping to draw forth the captain by that bait, and either to take him or the castle, or both. Neither was this expectation frustrated; for the captain did bite, and came forth to have taken this victual (as he supposed). But ere he could reach these carriers, Sir James, with his company, had gotten between the castle and him; and these disguised carriers, seeing the captain following after them, did quickly cast off their sacks, mounted themselves on horseback, and met the captain with a sharp encounter, being so much the more amazed, as it was unlooked for: wherefore, when he saw these carriers metamorphosed into warriors, and ready to assault him, fearing that which was, that there was some train laid for them, he turned about to have retired to his castle; but there he also met with his enemies, between which two companies he and his whole followers were slain, so that none escaped. The captain afterwards being searched, they found (as it is reported) his mistress’s letter about him.”—HUME’s History of the House of Douglas, folio, pp. 29, 30.

[This incident forms the basis of the Author’s romance, “Castle Dangerous.”]

NOTE 48.

And fiery Edward routed stout St. John.—P. 760.

"John de St. John, with 15,000 horsemen, had advanced to oppose the inroad of the Scots. By a forced march he endeavoured to surprise them, but intelligence of his motions was timeously received. The courage of Edward Bruce, approaching to temerity, frequently enabled him to achieve what men of more judicious valour would never have attempted. He ordered the infantry, and the meaner sort of his army, to inrench themselves in strong narrow ground. He himself, with fifty horsemen well harnessed, issued forth under cover of a thick mist, surprised the English on their march, and attacked and dispersed them."—DALRYMPLE'S Annals of Edinburgh, quarto, Edinburgh, 1779, p. 25.

NOTE 49.

When Randolph's war-cry swelled the southern gale.—P. 760.

Thomas Randolph, son of Bruce's sister, a renowned Scottish chief, was in the early part of his life not more remarkable for consistency than Bruce himself. He espoused his uncle's party when Bruce first assumed the crown, and was made prisoner at the fatal battle of Methven, in which his relative's hopes appeared to be ruined. Randolph accordingly not only submitted to the English, but took an active part against Bruce, appeared in arms against him, and in the skirmish where he was so closely pursued by the bloodhound, it is said his nephew took his standard with his own hand. But Randolph was afterwards made prisoner by Douglas in Tweeddale, and brought before King Robert. Some harsh language was exchanged between the uncle and nephew, and the latter was committed for a time to close custody. Afterwards, however, they were reconciled, and Randolph was created Earl of Moray about 1312. After this period he eminently distinguished himself, first by the surprise of Edinburgh Castle, and afterwards by many similar enterprises, conducted with equal courage and ability.

NOTE 50.

*.....Stirling's towers,
Besieguered by King Robert's powers;
And they took term of truce.*—P. 762.

When a long train of success, actively improved by Robert Bruce, had made him master of almost all Scotland, Stirling Castle continued to hold out. The care of the blockade was committed by the king to his brother Edward, who concluded a treaty with Sir Philip Mowbray, the governor, that he should surrender the fortress, if it were not succoured by the King of England before St. John the Baptist's day. The king severely blamed his brother for the impolicy of a treaty which gave time to the King of England to advance to the relief of the castle with all his assembled forces, and obliged himself either to meet them in battle with an inferior force, or to retreat with dishonour. "Let all England come," answered the reckless Edward; "we will fight them were they more." The consequence was, of course, that each kingdom mustered its strength for the expected battle; and as the space agreed upon reached from Lent to midsummer, full time was allowed for that purpose.

NOTE 51.

*And Cambria, but of late subdued,
Sent forth her mountain multitude.*—P. 762.

Edward the First, with the usual policy of a conqueror, employed the Welsh, whom he had subdued, to assist him in his Scottish wars, for which their habits, as mountaineers, particularly fitted them. But this policy was not without its risks. Previous to the battle of Falkirk the Welsh quarrelled with the English men-at-arms, and after bloodshed on both parts, separated themselves from his army, and the feud between them, at so dangerous and critical a juncture, was reconciled with difficulty. Edward II. followed his father's example in this particular, and with no better success. They could not be brought to exert themselves in the cause of their conquerors. But they had an indifferent reward for their forbearance. Without arms, and clad only in scanty dresses of linen cloth, they appeared naked in the eyes even of the Scottish peasantry, and after the rout of Bannockburn were massacred by them in great numbers, as they retired in confusion towards their own country. They were under command of Sir Maurice de Berkeley.

NOTE 52.

*And Connaught poured from waste and wood
Her hundred tribes, whose sceptre rude
Dark Eth O'Connor swayed.*—P. 762.

There is in the Fœdera an invitation to Eth O'Connor, chief of the Irish of Connaught, setting forth that the king was about to move against his Scottish rebels, and therefore requesting the attendance of all the force he could muster, either commanded by himself in person, or by some nobleman of his race. These auxiliaries were to be commanded by Richard de Burgh, Earl of Ulster. Similar mandates were issued to several other Irish chiefs.

NOTE 53.

Their chief, Fitz-Louis.—P. 766.

Fitz-Louis, or Mac-Louis, otherwise called Fullarton, is a family of ancient descent in the Isle of Arran. They are said to be of French origin, as the name intimates. They attached themselves to Bruce upon his first landing; and Fergus Mac-Louis, or Fullarton, received from the grateful monarch a charter, dated 26th November, in the second year of his reign (1307), for the lands of Kilmichel, and others, which still remain in this very ancient and respectable family.

NOTE 54.

*In battles four beneath their eye
The forces of King Robert lie.*—P. 766.

The arrangements adopted by King Robert for the decisive battle of Bannockburn are given very distinctly by Barbour, and form an edifying lesson to tacticians. Yet, till commented upon by Lord Hailes, this important passage of history has been generally and strangely misunderstood by historians. I shall here endeavour to detail it fully.

Two days before the battle Bruce selected the field of action, and took post there with his army, consisting of about 30,000 disciplined men, and about half the number of disorderly attendants upon the camp. The ground was called the New Park of Stirling; it was partly open, and partly broken by copses of wood and marshy ground. He divided his regular forces into four divisions. Three of these occupied a front line, separated from one another, yet sufficiently near for the purpose of communication. The fourth division formed a reserve. The line extended in a north-easterly direction from the brook of Bannock (which was so rugged and broken as to cover the right flank effectually) to the village of St. Ninians, probably in the line of the present road from Stirling to Kilsyth. Edward Bruce commanded the right wing, which was strengthened by a strong body of cavalry under Keith, the Mareschal of Scotland, to whom was committed the important charge of attacking the English archers; Douglas and the young Steward of Scotland led the central wing; and Thomas Randolph, Earl of Moray, the left wing. The king himself commanded the fourth division, which lay in reserve behind the others. The royal standard was pitched, according to tradition, in a stone, having a round hole for its reception, and thence called the Borestone. It is still shown on the top of a small eminence, called Brock's-brae, to the south-west of St. Ninians. His main body thus disposed, King Robert sent the followers of the camp, 15,000 and upwards in number, to the eminence in rear of his army, called from that circumstance the Gillies' (the Servants') Hill.

The military advantages of this position were obvious. The Scottish right flank, protected by the brook of Bannock, could not be turned; or, if that attempt were made, a movement by the reserve might have covered it. Again, the English could not pass the Scottish army, and move towards Stirling, without exposing their flank to attack while on the march. If, on the other hand, the Scottish line had been drawn up east and west, and facing to the southward, as affirmed by Buchanan, and adopted by Mr. Nimmo, the author of the "History of Stirlingshire," there appears nothing to have prevented the English, approaching upon the carse, or level ground, from Falkirk, either from turning the Scottish left flank, or from passing their position, if they preferred it, without coming to an action, and moving on to the relief of Stirling. And the Gillies' Hill, if this less probable hypothesis be adopted, would be situated, not in the rear, as allowed by all the historians, but upon the left flank of Bruce's army. The only objection to the hypothesis above laid down, is that the left flank of Bruce's army was thereby exposed to a sally from the garrison of Stirling. But, first, the garrison were bound to neutrality by terms of Mowbray's treaty; and Barbour even seems to censure, as a breach of faith, some secret assistance which they rendered their countrymen upon the eve of battle, in placing temporary bridges of doors and spars over the pools of water in the carse, to enable them to advance to the charge. Secondly, had this not been the case, the strength of the garrison was probably not sufficient to excite apprehension. Thirdly, the adverse hypothesis leaves the rear of the Scottish army as much exposed to the Stirling garrison as the left flank would be in the case supposed.

It only remains to notice the nature of the ground in front of Bruce's line of battle. Being part of a park, or chase, it was considerably interrupted with trees; and an extensive marsh, still visible, in some places rendered it inaccessible, and in all of difficult approach. More to the northward, where the natural impediments were fewer, Bruce fortified his position against cavalry by digging a number of pits so close together, says Barbour, as to resemble the cells in a honeycomb. They were a foot in breadth, and between two and three feet deep, many rows of them being placed one behind the other. They were slightly covered with brushwood and green sods, so as not to be obvious to an impetuous enemy.

All the Scottish army were on foot, excepting a select body of cavalry stationed with Edward Bruce on the right wing, under the immediate command of Sir Robert Keith, the Marshal of Scotland, who were destined for the important service of charging and dispersing the English archers.

Thus judiciously posted, in a situation fortified by both art and nature, Bruce awaited the attack of the English.

[NOTE 55.

The monarch rode along the van.—P. 768.

The English vanguard, commanded by the Earls of Gloucester and Hereford, came in sight of the Scottish army upon the evening of the 23rd of June. Bruce was then riding upon a little palfrey, in front of his foremost line, putting his host in order. It was then that the personal encounter took place betwixt him and Sir Henry de Bohun, a gallant English knight, the issue of which had a great effect upon the spirits of both armies. The Scottish leaders remonstrated with the king upon his temerity. He only answered, "I have broken my good battle-axe."

The English vanguard retreated after witnessing this single combat. Probably their generals did not think it advisable to hazard an attack while its unfavourable issue remained upon their minds.

NOTE 56.

*"What train of dust, with trumpet sound,
And glimmering spears, is wheeling round
Our leftward flank?"—the Monarch cried
To Moray's Earl, who rode beside.—P. 772.*

While the van of the English army advanced, a detached body attempted to relieve Stirling. Lord Hailes gives the following account of this manœuvre and its result, which is accompanied by circumstances highly characteristic of the chivalrous manners of the age, and displays that generosity which reconciles us even to their ferocity upon other occasions.

Bruce had enjoined Randolph, who commanded the left wing of his army, to be vigilant in preventing any advanced parties of the English from throwing succours into the Castle of Stirling.

"Eight hundred horsemen, commanded by Sir Robert Clifford, were detached from the English army: they made a circuit by the low grounds to the east, and approached the castle. The king perceived their motions, and coming up to Randolph angrily exclaimed, 'Thoughtless man! you have suffered the enemy to pass.' Randolph hastened to repair his fault, or perish. As he advanced, the English cavalry wheeled to attack him. Randolph drew up his troops in a circular form, with their spears resting on the ground, and protended on every side. At the first onset, Sir William Daynecourt, an English commander of distinguished note, was slain. The enemy, far superior in numbers to Randolph, environed him, and pressed hard on his little band. Douglas saw his jeopardy, and requested the king's permission to go and succour him. 'You shall not move from your ground,' cried the king; 'let Randolph extricate himself as he best may. I will not alter my order of battle, and lose the advantage of my position.' 'In truth,' replied Douglas, 'I cannot stand by and see Randolph perish; and, therefore, with your leave, I must aid him.' The king unwillingly consented, and Douglas flew to the assistance of his friend. While approaching, he perceived that the English were falling into disorder, and that the perseverance of Randolph had prevailed over their impetuous courage. 'Halt!' cried Douglas, 'those brave men have repulsed the enemy; let us not diminish their glory by sharing it.'"—DALRYMPLE'S Annals of Scotland, 4to, Edinburgh, 1779, pp. 44, 45.

Two large stones erected at the north end of the village of Newhouse, about a quarter of a mile from the south part of Stirling, mark the place of this memorable skirmish.

NOTE 57.

*Responsive from the Scottish host,
Pipe-clang and bugle-sound were tossed.—P. 774.*

There is an old tradition that the well-known Scottish tune of "Hey, tutti, taitti," was Bruce's march at the battle of Bannockburn. The late Mr. Ritson, no granter of propositions, doubts whether the Scots had any martial music, quotes Froissart's account of each soldier in the host bearing a little horn, on which, at the onset, they would make such a horrible noise, as if all the devils of hell had been among them. He observes that these horns are the only music mentioned by Barbour, and concludes that it must remain a moot point whether Bruce's army were cheered by the sound even of a solitary bagpipe.—Historical Essay prefixed to Ritson's Scottish Songs. It may be observed in passing that the Scottish of this period certainly observed some musical cadence, even in winding their horns, since Bruce was at once recognized by his followers from his mode of blowing. (See Note 35, p. 919.) But the tradition, true or false, has been the means of securing to Scotland one of the finest lyrics in the language, the celebrated war-song of Burns, "Scots, wha hae wi' Wallace bled."

NOTE 58.

*See where yon barefoot abbot stands,
And blesses them with lifted hands!*—P. 775.

"Maurice, abbot of Inchaffray, placing himself on an eminence, celebrated mass in sight of the Scottish army. He then passed along the front barefooted, and bearing a crucifix in his hands, and exhorting the Scots, in few and forcible words, to combat for their rights and their liberty. The Scots kneeled down. 'They yield,' cried Edward; 'see, they implore mercy.'—'They do,' answered Ingelram de Umfraville, 'but not ours. On that field they will be victorious, or die.'"—Annals of Scotland, vol. ii, p. 47.

NOTE 59.

*Forth, Marshal, on the peasant foe!
We'll tame the terrors of their bow,
And cut the bowstring loose!*—P. 776.

The English archers commenced the attack with their usual bravery and dexterity. But against a force whose importance he had learned by fatal experience Bruce was provided. A small but select body of cavalry were detached from the right, under command of Sir Robert Keith. They rounded, as I conceive, the marsh called Milntown bog, and, keeping the firm ground, charged the left flank and rear of the English archers. As the bowmen had no spears nor long weapons fit to defend themselves against horse, they were instantly thrown into disorder, and spread through the whole English army a confusion from which they never fairly recovered.

Although the success of this manœuvre was evident, it is very remarkable that the Scottish generals do not appear to have profited by the lesson. Almost every subsequent battle which they lost against England was decided by the archers, to whom the close and compact array of the Scottish phalanx afforded an exposed and unresisting mark. The bloody battle of Halidoun Hill, fought scarce twenty years afterwards, was so completely gained by the archers, that the English are said to have lost only one knight, one esquire, and a few foot-soldiers. At the battle of Neville's Cross, in 1346, where David II. was defeated and made prisoner, John de Graham, observing the loss which the Scots sustained from the English bowmen, offered to charge and disperse them, if a hundred men-at-arms were put under his command. "But, to confess the truth," says Fordun, "he could not procure a single horseman for the service proposed." Of such little use is experience in war where its results are opposed by habit or prejudice.

NOTE 60.

*Each braggart churl could boast before,
Twelve Scottish lives his baldric bore!—P. 777.*

Roger Ascham quotes a similar Scottish proverb, "whereby they give the whole praise of shooting honestly to Englishmen, saying thus, 'that every English archer beareth under his girdle twenty-four Scottes.' Indeed Toxophilus says before, and truly of the Scottish nation, 'The Scottes surely be good men of warre in theyre owne seates as can be; but as for shootinge, they can neither use it to any profite, nor yet challenge it for any praise.'"—Works of Ascham, edited by Bennet, 4to, p. 110.

It is said, I trust incorrectly, by an ancient English historian, that the "good Lord James of Douglas" dreaded the superiority of the English archers so much that, when he made any of them prisoner, he gave him the option of losing the forefinger of his right hand, or his right eye, either species of mutilation rendering him incapable to use the bow. I have mislaid the reference to this singular passage.

NOTE 61.

*Down! down! in headlong overthrow,
Horseman and horse, the foremost go.—P. 777.*

It is generally alleged by historians, that the English men-at-arms fell into the hidden snare which Bruce had prepared for them. Barbour does not mention the circumstance. According to his account, Randolph, seeing the slaughter made by the cavalry on the right wing among the archers, advanced courageously against the main body of the English, and entered into close combat with them. Douglas and Stewart, who commanded the Scottish centre, led their division also to the charge, and the battle becoming general along the whole line, was obstinately maintained on both sides for a long space of time, the Scottish archers doing great execution among the English men-at-arms after the bowmen of England were dispersed.

NOTE 62.

And steeds that shriek in agony.—P. 777.

I have been told that this line requires an explanatory note; and, indeed, those who witness the silent patience with which horses submit to the most cruel usage, may be permitted to doubt that, in moments of sudden and intolerable anguish, they utter a most melancholy cry. Lord Erskine, in a speech made in the House of Lords, upon a bill for enforcing humanity towards animals, noticed this remarkable fact, in language which I will not mutilate by attempting to repeat it. It was my fortune, upon one occasion, to hear a horse, in a moment of agony, utter a thrilling scream, which I still consider the most melancholy sound I ever heard.

NOTE 63.

*Lord of the Isles, my trust in thee
 Is firm as Ailsa Rock;
 Rush on with Highland sword and target,
 I, with my Carrick spearmen, charge.*—P. 780.

When the engagement between the main bodies had lasted some time, Bruce made a decisive movement, by bringing up the Scottish reserve. It is traditionally said that at this crisis he addressed the Lord of the Isles in a phrase used as a motto by some of his descendants, "My trust is constant in thee." Barbour intimates that the reserve "assembled on one field," that is, on the same line with the Scottish forces already engaged; which leads Lord Hailes to conjecture that the Scottish ranks must have been much thinned by slaughter, since, in that circumscribed ground, there was room for the reserve to fall into the line. But the advance of the Scottish cavalry must have contributed a good deal to form the vacancy occupied by the reserve.

NOTE 64.

*To arms they flew—axe, club, or spear—
 And mimic ensigns high they rear.*—P. 781.

The followers of the Scottish camp observed, from the Gillies' Hill in the rear, the impression produced upon the English army by the bringing up of the Scottish reserve, and, prompted by the enthusiasm of the moment, or the desire of plunder, assumed, in a tumultuary manner, such arms as they found nearest, fastened sheets to tent-poles and lances, and showed themselves like a new army advancing to battle.

The unexpected apparition of what seemed a new army completed the confusion which already prevailed among the English, who fled in every direction, and were pursued with immense slaughter.

The brook of Bannock, according to Barbour, was so choked with the bodies of men and horses that it might have been passed dryshod. The followers of the Scottish camp fell upon the disheartened fugitives, and added to the confusion and slaughter. Many were driven into the Forth and perished there. About a mile from the field of battle is a place called the Bloody Folds. Here the Earl of Gloucester is said to have made a stand, and died gallantly at the head of his own military tenants and vassals. He was much regretted by both sides, and it is said the Scots would gladly have saved his life, but, neglecting to wear his surcoat with armorial bearings over his armour, he fell unknown, after his horse had been stabbed with spears.

Sir Marmaduke Twenge, an English knight, contrived to conceal himself during the fury of the pursuit, and when it was somewhat slackened, approached King Robert. "Whose prisoner are you, Sir Marmaduke?" said Bruce, to whom he was personally known. "Yours, sir," answered the knight. "I receive you," answered the king, and, treating him with the utmost courtesy, loaded him with gifts, and dismissed him without ransom. The other prisoners were all well treated. There might be policy in this, as Bruce would naturally wish to acquire the good opinion of the English barons, who were at this time at great variance with their king; but it also well accords with his chivalrous character.

NOTE 65.

O give their hapless prince his due.—P. 782.

Edward II., according to the best authorities, showed, on the fatal field of Bannockburn, personal gallantry not unworthy of his great sire and greater son. He remained on the field till forced away by the Earl of Pembroke, when all was lost. He then rode to the Castle of Stirling, and demanded admittance; but the governor, remonstrating upon the imprudence of shutting himself up in that fortress which must so soon surrender, he assembled around his person five hundred men-at-arms, and, avoiding the field of battle and the victorious army, fled towards Linlithgow, pursued by Douglas with about sixty horse. He eventually reached Dunbar, where the Earl of March, who still professed allegiance to him, "received him full gently." From thence the monarch of so great an empire, and the late commander of so gallant and numerous an army, escaped to Bamborough in a fishing vessel.
